MUKHERJEA on HINDU LAW OF RELIGIOUS & CHARITABLE TRUSTS (T.L.L.)Revised by Hon'ble Mr. Justice P. B. Mukharji.

This well known Tagore Law Lecture of Dr. B. K. Mukherjea need no introduction. The Law applied to-day in dealing with religious and charitable trusts of Hindus is to a large extent Judge-made law based upon the principles of Equity law in England and Customs and Usages of our country. These lectures are primarily based upon judicial decisions both English and Indian.

THE LAW OF LAND REFORMS
in Kerala

By A. GANGADHARAN

Price Rs. 12/-

The Travancore Law House,

Chittoor Road, Ernakulam, COCHIN-11.

Government free from all encumbrances". This is clearly compulsory acquisition of land within the meaning of Article 31 (2) of the Constitution and the compensation determined merely at fifteen times the fair and equitable rent may not, prima facie, be regarded as determination of compensation according to the principles specified by the Act. But Article 31-A which applies to the statute in question provides by the first clause:

"Notwithstanding any thing contained in Article 13 no law providing for—

(a) the acquisition by the State of any estate or of any rights therein or the extinguishment or modification of any such rights, or

- (b) * * *
- (c) * * *
- (d) * * *
- (e) * * *

shall be deemed to be void on the ground that it is inconsistent with, or takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by Article 14, Article 19 or Article 31:

* * * *

The principal Act 16 of 1960 and the amending Act 13 of 1965 were both Acts enacted for ensuing agrarian reform, and the lands held by the petitioners were "estates" within the meaning of Art. 31-A. By Section 45 the rights of the land-holders were sought to be extinguished or modified. But to the operative part of Article 31-A by Section 2 of the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, the second proviso was added. The second proviso enacts:

"Provided further that where any law makes any provision for the acquisition by the State of any estate and where any land comprised therein is held by a person under his personal cultivation, it shall not be lawful for the State to acquire any portion of such land as is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under any law for the time being in force or any building or structure standing thereon or appurtenant thereto, unless the law relating to the acquisition of such land, building or structure, provides for payment of compensation at a rate which shall not be less than the market value thereof."

By the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, it was clearly enacted that under any law which provides for the acquisition of any land in an estate under the personal cultivation of the holder, compensation shall not be less than the market value of the land if such land be within the ceiling limit applicable to the holder under any law for the time being in force.

5. Before the High Court it was urged on behalf of the land-holders that when the principal Act was enacted it became law in force, and the ceiling limit prescribed thereby became effective, even though Ch. IV was not extended by a notification under Section 1 (3) of the Act, and since the subsequent legislation seeks to restrict the ceiling limit and to vest the surplus land in the Government under Section 45 as amended, there is compulsory acquisition of land which may be valid only if the law provides for payment to the land-holder for extinction of his interest, the market value of that part of the surplus land which is within the ceiling limit under the principal Act. This argument found favour with the High Court. In their view the expression "law in force" must be "construed only in the constitutional sense and not in the sense of its actual operativeness", and on that account it must be held that "there was a ceiling limit already provided by the principal Act as it was 'law in force' within the meaning of that expression as used in the second proviso to Article 31-A". They proceeded then to hold that Section 47 of the Act as amended provided for payment of compensation at a rate which is less than the market value of the land falling within the ceiling limit as originally fixed under Act 16 of 1960, and the guarantee of the second proviso to Article 31-A of the Constitution is on that account infringed. We are unable to accept this process of reasoning. The right to compensation which is not less than the market value under any law providing for the acquisition by the State of any land in an estate in the personal cultivation of a person is guaranteed by the second proviso only where the land is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under any law for the time being in force. A law cannot be said to be in force unless it is brought into operation by legislative enactment, or by the exercise of authority by a delegate empowered to bring it into operation. The theory of a statute being "in operation in a constitutional sense" though it is not in fact in operation has, in our judgment, no validity.

6. Again Ch. IV of the principal Act was repealed by the Amending Act 15 of 1965. Article 31-A proviso 2 guarantees to a person, for compulsory acquisition of his land, the right to compensation which is not less than the market value, when the land is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under a law for the time being in force. On the plain words of the proviso the law prescribing the ceiling limit must be in force at the date of acquisition. In the present case the law relating to the ceiling limit viz. Ch. IV of the principal Act was never made operative by a notification, and was repealed by Act 15 of 1965. The ceiling limit under Section 47 of the principal Act was on that account inapplicable to the land-holders who challenged the validity of Section 45 of the amending Act.

7. The decision of this Court (Sic in?) A. Thangal Kunju Mudaliar v. M. Venkitachalam Potti, (1955) 2 SCR 1196 = (AIR 1956 SC 246) on which the High Court relied lends no support to the views expressed by them. In that case the Travancore State Legislature enacted Act 14 of 1124 (M. E.) to provide for investigating cases of evasion of tax. The Act was to come into force by Section 1 (3) on the date appointed by the State Government by notification. The States of Travancore and Cochin merged on July 1, 1949 and formed the United State of Travancore and Cochin. By Ordinance 1 of 1124 (M.E.) all existing laws of the Travancore State were to continue in force in the United State. By a notification the Government of the United State brought the Travancore Act 14 of 1124 (M. E.) into force, and referred cases of certain tax-payers for investigation to the Commission appointed in that behalf. The tax-payers challenged the authority of the Commission to investigate the cases. They contended that the Travancore Act 14 of 1124 (M. E.) not being a law in force when the United State was formed the notification bringing the Act into force was ineffective. The Court rejected that plea. Section 1 (3) of Travancore Act 14 of 1124 (M. E.) was existing law on July 1, 1949, and continued to remain in force by virtue of Ordinance 1 of 1124 (M. E.). The notification issued in exercise of the power under Section 1 (3) of the Travancore Act 14 of 1124 (M. E.), the reference of the cases of the petitioners, the appointment of the authorised officials and the proceedings under the Act could not be questioned because Section 1 (3) was existing law on July 1, 1949.

8. In A. Thangal Kunju Musaliar's case, (1955) 2 SCR 1196 = (AIR 1956 SC 246) the contention that Travancore Act 14 of 1124 (M. E.) was not law in force until a notification was issued bringing into operation the provisions of the Act, authorising the appointment of a Commission, and referring the cases of tax-payers to the Commission, was rejected. The Court held that Section 1 (3) was in operation on July 1, 1949 and the power to bring into force the provisions of the Travancore Act was exercisable by the successor State. It was not held that the other provisions of the Act were in force even before an appropriate notification was issued. In the case in hand Section 1 (3) of the principal Act was in force, but Ch. IV of the Act was not brought into force. The argument that provisions of the Act which by a notification could have been but were not brought into force, must still be deemed to be law in force, derives no support from the case relied upon.

9. Section 1 (3) of Act 16 of 1960, is undoubtedly a law in force, but until the power is exercised by the State Government to issue an appropriate notification, the provisions of Ch. IV could not be deemed to be law in force, and since no notification was issued before Ch. IV of the principal Act was repealed, there was no ceiling limit applicable to the landholders under any law for the time being in force which attracted the application of the second proviso to Article 31-A.

10. The appeals must, therefore, be allowed, and the order passed by the High Court declaring Ch. IV of Act 13 of 1965 amending Act 16 of 1960 ultra vires, be set aside. The State will get its costs in this Court from the respondents. There will be one hearing fee. There will be no order as to costs in the High Court.

Appeals allowed.

(V 57 C 88)

(From Andhra Pradesh)*

J. C. SHAH AND G. K. MITTER, JJ.

Maganti Subrahmanyam (dead) by his Legal Representative, Appellants v. The State of Andhra Pradesh, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 614 of 1966, D/- 17-4-1969.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal, Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act (14 of 1947), Pre. and Section 4 — Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1948), Section 63 — Act of 1947 is not a temporary Act and is not repealed by Act of 1948.

The purpose of the Act of 1947 was to prohibit the alienation of communal, forest and private lands in estates in the Province of Madras and the preamble to the Act shows that it was enacted to prevent indiscriminate alienation of communal, forest and private lands in estates in the Province of Madras pending the enactment of legislation for acquiring the interests of land-holders in such estates and introducing ryotwari settlement therein. No fixed duration of the Act was specified and it is impossible to hold that merely because of the above preamble the Act became a temporary Act. In the absence of express words to that effect or necessary implication, it could not, therefore, be contended that with the enactment of the repeal of the Permanent Settlement by the Act of 1948 which also provided for the acquisition of the rights of land-holders in permanently settled estates, the Act of 1947 stood repealed.

It does not stand to reason to hold that the alienation of large blocks of land which were rendered void under the Act of 1947 became good by reason of the passing of the later Act of 1948. Section 63 of the Act of 1948 in terms is only prospective and it does not seek to impeach any transaction which was effected before the Act and was not applicable to transactions anterior to the Act. By virtue of Section 8 (f) of Madras General Clauses Act (1 of 1891) even if there was a repeal, any investigation started before the repeal would have to be continued and legal proceedings under the Act could be prosecuted as if the repealing Act had not been passed.

(Paras 4, 5,)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal, Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act (14 of 1947) Section 2 (b) — “Forest Land” — Inclusion of piece of land as forest land — Notification of Government not a pre-requisite.

The definition of ‘forest land’ in S. 2 (b) is an inclusive one and shows that ‘forest land’ would include not only waste land containing trees, shrubs and pasture lands but also any other class of lands declared by Government to be forest land. This does not mean that before a piece of land could be said to be forest land there would have to be a notification by the Government under the Act. (Para 6)

(C) Tenancy Laws — Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1948) Section 20 (1) (as substituted by amending Act) (44 of 1956) — Question as to whether land is “forest land” within Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal, Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act (14 of 1947) — District Judge and not Settlement Officer is competent to adjudicate.

The original Section 20 (1) is substituted, for another by Section 9 of the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) (Amendment) Act, 1956 which is to be deemed to have come into force on April 19, 1949 being the date on which the Act of 1948 originally came into force. The section as it now stands did not confer any jurisdiction on the Settlement Officer to determine any question as to whether any land was “forest land” within the meaning of the Act (14 of 1947) and consequently the adjudication by the District Judge under sub-sec. (4) of Sec. 4 of Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal, Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act (1947) is quite competent.

(Para 7)

Mr. A. V. V. Nair, Advocate, for Appellants; Mr. P. Ram Reddy, Senior Advocate, (Mr. B. Parthasarathy, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

MITTER, J.:— This appeal by special leave is from a common judgment and order of the High Court of Madras disposing of three Revision Applications arising out of O. P. No. 95 of 1948 filed under Section 4 (3) and (4) of the Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal, Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act, 1947 (hereinafter called the 'Act').

2. The central question in this appeal is, whether certain transfers of lands alleged to be forest lands made by the 6th respondent herein become void and inoperative under Section 4 of the Act. The said respondent who was a big landholder granted a patta to his wife, 7th respondent, for Ac. 100-00 of land on November 9, 1944. Another patta was similarly granted to the appellant in respect of Ac. 90-00 of land on November 25, 1944. On the same day, respondent No. 6 granted a third patta for Ac. 200-00 of land to respondents 2 to 5. The Act came into force on October 25, 1947. On October 15, 1948 Original petition No. 95 of 1948 was filed in the District Court of Eluru by two ryots for a declaration that the alienations were void and did not confer any rights on the alienees. Thereafter the said petition was split into two parts, O. P. 95/1948 being directed against respondents 1 to 6 while O. P. No. 95-(a) of 1948 was directed against the 7th respondent. The petitions were disposed of by an order of the District Judge dated July 18, 1950 holding that lands covered by the pattas were forest lands and all the alienations were void and inoperative. A Civil Revision Petition was filed in the High Court of Madras by respondents 1 to 5 against the order of the District Judge. This was numbered as C. R. P. No. 22 of 1951. Respondent No. 7 filed a Miscellaneous Petition No. 9534 of 1950 in the High Court of Madras. By order dated 6th August, 1962 both the petitions were dismissed by a single Judge of the Madras High Court. This order was however set aside in a Letters Patent Appeal filed by respondents 1 to 5 (No. 261 of 1952) wherein it was held that the petitioners as ryots had no right to maintain the petition but reasonable opportunity should be given to the State to get transposed as the petitioner. The State Government thereafter got itself transposed as the petitioner. The District Court however held that the petition was not maintainable by reason of the repeal of the Act by reason of the passing of a subsequent Act, XXVI of 1948 styled the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948, hereinafter referred to as the Act of 1948. Against this the State Government filed a Revision Petition in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh numbering 1555 of 1955. The High Court held that the dismissal of the petition on the ground of repeal of the Act was improper and that the petition should be disposed of on the merits and remitted the matter to the District Judge. By a judgment dated November 30, 1960 the District Judge allowed the petition negating the contentions of the respondent but holding that the lands were forest lands and transfers thereof were void. The appellant and others filed Civil Revision Petitions in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh which were disposed of and dismissed by a common judgment dated August 24, 1965. Hence this appeal.

3. The points urged before us by learned counsel for the appellant were: (1) The Act applied only to lands which were admittedly forest lands and the operation thereof could not be extended to lands in respect of which there was a dispute as to the nature thereof. It was argued that any such dispute could only be decided by the Settlement Officer and not by the District Judge. (2) The Act was a temporary Act and all proceedings thereunder came to an end with the repeal of the Act; and (3) A notification by the State Government describing the land as forest land was an essential pre-requisite to the application of the Act.

4. The purpose of the Act was to prohibit the alienation of communal, forest and private lands in estates in the Province of Madras and the preamble to the Act shows that it was enacted to prevent indiscriminate alienation of communal, forest and private lands in estates in the Province of Madras pending the enactment of legislation for acquiring the interests of land-holders in such estates and introducing ryotwari settlement therein. No fixed duration of the Act was specified and it is impossible to hold that merely because of the above preamble the Act became a temporary Act. The definition of 'forest land' is given in Section 2 (b) of the Act reading:

"forest land" includes any waste land containing trees and shrubs, pasture land and any other class of land declared by the State Government to be forest land by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette; Sub-section (1) of Section 3 prohibited landholders from selling, mortgaging, converting into ryoti land, leasing or otherwise assigning or alienating any communal or forest land in an estate without the previous sanction of the District Collector, on or after the date on which the Ordinance which preceded the Act came into force, namely, the 27th June, 1947. Section 4 (1) provided that:

“Any transaction of the nature prohibited by Section 3 which took place in the case of any communal or forest land, on or after the 31st day of October 1939shall be void and inoperative and shall not confer or take away, or be deemed to have conferred or taken away, any right whatever on or from any party to the transaction:

* * * * *

This sub-section had a proviso with several clauses. Our attention was drawn to Clauses (iii), (iv) and (v) of the proviso but in our opinion none of these provisos was applicable to the facts of the case so as to exclude the operation of sub-section (1) of Section 4. Under sub-section (3) of Section 4.

“If any dispute arises as to the validity of the claim of any person to any land under clauses (i) to (v) of the proviso to sub-section (1), it shall be open to such person or to any other person interested in the transaction or to the State Government, to apply to the District Judge of the district in which the land is situated, for a decision as to the validity of such claim.”

Under sub-section (4) the District Judge to whom such application is made was to decide whether the claim to the land was valid or not after giving notice to all persons concerned and where the application was not made by the State Government, to the Government itself, and his decision was to be final. Madras Act XXVI of 1948 was passed on April 19, 1949 being an Act to provide for the repeal of the Permanent Settlement, the acquisition of the rights of land-holders in permanently settled and certain other estates in the Province of Madras, and the introduction of ryotwari settlement in such estates. Apparently because of the preamble to the Act it was contended that with the enactment of the repeal of the Permanent Settlement by the Act of 1948 which also provided for the acquisition of the rights of land-holders in permanently settled estates, the Act stood repealed. We fail to see how because of the preamble to the Act it can be said that it stood repealed by the enactment of the later Act unless there were express words to that effect or unless there was necessary implication. It does not stand to reason to hold that the alienation of large blocks of land which were rendered void under the Act became good by reason of the passing of the later Act. Our attention was drawn to Section 63 of the later Act which provided that:

“If any question arises whether any land in an estate is a forest or is situated in a forest, or as to the limits of a forest, it shall be determined by the Settlement Officer, subject to an appeal to the Director within such time as may be prescribed and also to revision by the Board of Revenue.”

In terms the section was only prospective and it did not seek to impeach any transaction which was effected before the Act and was not applicable to transactions anterior to the Act. In our opinion Section 56 (1) of the later Act to which our attention was drawn by the learned counsel does not fall for consideration in this case and the disputes covered by that section do not embrace the question before us.

5. Madras General Clauses Act, 1 of 1891 deals with the effect of repeals of statutes. Section 8 sub-section (f) thereof provides that:

“Where any Act, to which this Chapter applies, repeals any other enactment, then the repeal shall not—

(a) to (c) * * *

(f) affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, fine, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced, and any such fine, penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed, as if the repealing Act had not been passed.”

This shows that even if there was a repeal any investigation started before the repeal would have to be continued and legal proceedings under the Act could be prosecuted as if the repealing Act had not been passed.

6. There is also no force in the contention that unless there was a notification under Section 2 (b) of the Act declaring a particular land to be forest land, the applicability of the Act would be excluded. The definition of ‘forest land’ in that section is an inclusive one and shows that ‘forest land’ would include not only waste land containing trees, shrubs and pasture lands but also any other class of lands declared by Government to be forest land. This does not mean that before a piece of land could be said to be forest land there would have to be a notification by the Government under the Act.

7. Lastly, counsel contended that sub-section (1) of Section 20 of the later Act as originally enacted applies to forest lands and therefore the later Act became applicable thereto. The original section was however substituted, for another by Section 9 of the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) (Amendment) Act, 1956 which was to be deemed to have come into force on April 19, 1949 being the date on which the Act of 1948 originally came into force. The section as it now stands did not confer any jurisdiction on the Settlement Officer to determine any question as to whether any land was forest land within the meaning of the Act and consequently the adjudication by the District Judge under sub-section (4) of Section 4 was quite competent. Accordingly we dismiss the appeal, but do not think it necessary to make any order for costs relating thereto.

Civil Appeal No. 1940 of 1967, D/- 29-4-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 115, and 11 — Order of trial Court overruling objection to question put to witness of party as to legal relationship arising out of certain agreement — Question held not barred, since previous consent decree had not decided the same — Revision against order — High Court could not give finding on question of res judicata when trial court had not decided the issue. Civil Revn. Appln. No. 328 of 1967, D/- 27-4-1967 (Guj), Reversed.

merely the record of a contract between the parties to a suit, to which is super-added the seal of the Court. A matter in contest in a suit may operate as res judicata only if there is an adjudication by the Court; the terms of Section 11 of the Code leave no scope for a contrary view. It is for the trial Court in the first instance to decide that question and thereafter the High Court can if the matter were brought before it by way of appeal or in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction decide that question. Where the trial court gave no decision on the question of res judicata but decided that a question seeking information about true relationship of the parties arising out of certain agreement, could be put to a witness of a party, since it was not decided in a previous consent decree between the parties, in the revision against the decision the High Court has no jurisdiction to decide the issue of res judicata. The High Court cannot decide matters on which no decision was recorded by the trial court and which could not be decided by trial court until the parties had opportunity of leading evidence thereon. Civ. Revn. Appln. No. 328 of 1967, D/- 27-4-1967 (Guj), Reversed. (Paras 8, 9)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 115 — Case decided — Trial Court overruling objection to a certain question put to witness — Not a case decided.

The expression "case" is not limited in its import to the entirety of the matter in dispute in an action. The expression 'case' is a word of comprehensive import; it includes a civil proceedings and is not restricted by anything contained in Section 115 of the Code to the entirety of the proceeding in a civil court. To interpret the expression 'case' as an entire proceeding only and not a part of the proceeding imposes an unwarranted restriction on the exercise of powers of superintendence and may result in certain cases in denying relief to the aggrieved litigant where it is most needed and may result in the perpetration of gross injustice. But every order of the court in the course of a suit does not amount to a case decided. A case may be said to be decided, if the Court adjudicates for the purposes of the suit some right or obligation of the parties in controversy; every order in the suit cannot be regarded as a 'case decided' within the meaning of Section 115. By overruling an objection to a question put to a witness and allowing the question to be put, no case is decided. AIR 1964 SC 497, Ref. (Para 10)

SHAH, J.: By insistence upon procedural wrangling in a comparatively simple suit pending in the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad the parties have effectively prevented all progress in the suit during the last six years.

2. A building in the town of Ahmedabad used as a cinematograph theatre belonged originally to Messrs. Popatlal Punjabhai. In proceedings in insolvency, receivers were appointed of the estate of the owners and on August 19, 1954, the receivers granted a lease of the theatre on certain terms and conditions to two persons, Raval and Faraqui. By an agreement dated November 27, 1954, between Raval and Faraqui on the one hand and Messrs. Filmistan Distributors (India) Private Ltd. — hereinafter called 'Filmistan' — on the other hand, right to exhibit cinematograph films was granted to the latter on certain terms and conditions. "Filmistan" instituted suit No. 149 of 1960 in the Court of the Civil Judge (Senior Division) at Ahmedabad against Raval and Faraqui and two other persons claiming a declaration that it was entitled pursuant to the agreement dated November 27, 1954, to exhibit motion pictures in the theatre. By an order dated December 1, 1960 the suit was disposed of as compromised. It was inter alia agreed that Raval and Faraqui were bound and liable to allow Filmistan to exercise its "exhibition rights" in the theatre; that Raval and Faraqui, their servants and agents were not to have any right to exhibit any picture in contravention of the terms and conditions of the agreement dated November 27, 1954; and that Raval and Faraqui shall "execute and register" an agreement in writing incorporating the said agreement with the variation as to rental. Pursuant to this agreement, a fresh agreement was executed on December 1, 1960. On September 1, 1963, Filmistan filed suit No. 1465 of 1963 in the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad, inter alia, for a declaration that a sub-lessee or as lessee under law it was entitled to obtain and remain in possession of the theatre and to exhibit cinematograph films and to hold "entertainment performances" etc. in the theatre, and that one Shabeer Hussain Khan Tejabwala had no right, title or interest in the theatre, that the defendants in the suit be ordered to hand over vacant and peaceful possession of the theatre, and the defendants, their servants and agents be restrained by an injunction from interfering directly or indirectly with its rights to obtain and remain in possession of the theatre or any part thereof and to exercise its right of exhibiting "motion pictures" and entertainment performances etc. This suit was filed against the receivers in insolvency of the owners of the theatre, against Raval and Faraqui, against Tejabwala and also against Baldevdas Shivilal who claimed to be the owner of the theatre. The suit was based on the claim by Filmistan as lessees or sub-lessees of the theatre and was exclusively triable by the Court of Small Causes by virtue of Section 28 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947. Three sets of written statements were filed against the claim made by Filmistan but no reference need be made thereto, since at this stage in deciding this appeal the merits of the pleas raised by the defendants are not relevant. After issues were raised on June 20, 1966, the plaint was amended and additional written statements were filed by the defendants. The learned Judge was then requested to frame three additional issues in view of the amended pleadings: the issues were:

"11. Whether in view of the said consent decree in suit No. 149 of 1960 defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are debarred on principles of res judicata from agitating the question that the said document dated November 27, 1954 as confirmed by their letter dated January 31, 1955 and further confirmed by document dated December 1, 1960 is not a lease?

12. Whether in view of the said consent decree defendants 5 and 6 are estopped from contending and leading any evidence and putting questions in cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses to show that the said document dated November 27, 1954 as confirmed by their letter dated January 31, 1955 and further confirmed by document dated December 1, 1960 is not a lease?

13. Whether in respect of the terms of the said consent decree as also of the said document dated November 27, 1954, as confirmed by their letter dated January 31, 1955 and further confirmed by document dated December 1, 1960 defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are debarred from leading any evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses in view of Section 92 of the Evidence Act?

In drawing up the additional issues not much care was apparently exercised: whether a party is entitled to lead evidence or to put questions in cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses cannot form the subject-matter of an issue.

3. Filmistan then applied to the Court of Small Causes for an order that issues Nos. 11, 12 and 13 be tried as preliminary issues. The learned Judge observed that the issues were not purely of law, that in any event the case or any part thereof was not likely to be disposed of on these issues, and that ordinarily in "appealable cases" the Court should, as far as possible, decide all the issues together and that piecemeal trial might result in protracting the litigation. He also observed that the issues were not of law going to the root of the case and were on that account not capable of being decided without recording evidence.

4. A revision application against that order was dismissed in limine by the High Court of Gujarat. When the case reached hearing and the evidence of a representative of Filmistan was being recorded counsel for the defendants asked in cross-examination the question whether the "agreement between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 5 and 6 was a commercial transaction and was not a lease?" The question was objected to by counsel appearing for Filmistan. Thereafter elaborate arguments were advanced and the Trial Judge passed an order disallowing the objection.

5. The objection to the question raised by Filmistan was not that it related to a matter to be decided by the Court and on which the opinion of witnesses was irrelevant. The objection was raised as an attempt to reopen the previous decision given by the Trial Judge refusing to try issues Nos. 11, 12 and 13 as preliminary issues. Counsel for Filmistan contended that an enquiry into the nature of the legal relationship arising out of the agreement dated December 1, 1960 "was barred by the principle of res judicata and estoppel under the provisions of Section 92 of the Evidence Act", since the question was already concluded by the consent decree in suit No. 149 of 1960. The Trial Judge observed that he had carefully gone through the consent decree and the registered agreement dated December 1, 1960, and he found that the consent decree had not decided that the transaction between the parties of the year 1954 was in the nature of a lease; that in the plaint in the earlier suit it was not even averred that the rights granted were in the nature of leasehold rights; that suit No. 149 of 1960 was for declaration of the rights of Filmistan to exhibit motion pictures in the theatre under the agreement dated November 27, 1954, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from violating the said rights of Filmistan under the agreement and that the agreement dated December 1, 1960 was "not plain enough to exclude the oral evidence of the surrounding circumstances and conduct of the parties to explain its terms and language." Accordingly he held that the question asked in cross-examination of the witnesses for Filmistan intended to disclosure of the surrounding circumstances and conduct of the parties in order to show in what manner the language of the document was related to the existing facts, could not be excluded. The Court also rejected the contention that there was any bar of estoppel, and held that evidence as to the true nature of the transaction was not inadmissible by virtue of Section 92 of the Evidence Act.

6. Filmistan feeling dissatisfied with the order invoked the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court of Gujarat under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The revision petition was entertained and elaborate arguments were advanced at the Bar. The High Court referred to a number of authorities and observed that the correctness of the findings of the Trial Court on issues Nos. 12 and 13 may not be examined in exercise of the powers under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court proceeded to observe:

"The question then arises for consideration whether in fact the subordinate Court has decided the question "res judicata", and that "it is true that the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes to decide disputes between a tenant and his landlord and falling within the purview of Section 28 of the Bombay Rent Control Act is derived from Section 28 of the said Act, but at the same time if an issue is in fact barred by res judicata, then the Court has no jurisdiction on principles of res judicata to go into that question or to decide that question over again to the extent to which the Court, viz., the trial Court in the instant case, proposed to go into that question and allow the whole question, that was closed once for all by consent decree of December 1, 1960, to be reopened, it is proposing to exercise the jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law. It is not open to any Court of law to try an issue over again or reopen the same if an earlier decision operates as res judicata. Once the jurisdiction of the Court has been taken away, any proposal to reopen the question closed by the earlier decision would be exercise of jurisdiction which is not vested in the Court by law and to that extent the decision would become revisable, even if it is the decision as to the res judicata of an issue", and concluded:

"It is not open to me in revision at this stage to express any opinion about the rights and contentions of the parties with reference to the agreement of December 1, 1960. But the only thing that can be said is that so far as the agreement of November 27, 1954, is concerned, it must be held, in view of the consent decree of December 1, 1960, that that document of November 27, 1954, created a lease x x x".

The consent decree must be held to create a bar of res judicata as far as the question of document of November 27, 1954, creating a lease is concerned. The learned Judge will not proceed with the trial".

By Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure the High Court is invested with power to call for the record of any case decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, if such subordinate court appears—(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or (b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or (c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and to make such order in the case as it thinks fit. Exercise of the power is broadly subject to three important conditions (1) that the decision must be of a Court subordinate to the High Court; (2) that there must be a case which has been decided by the subordinate Court; and (3) that the subordinate Court must appear to have exercised jurisdiction not vested in it by law or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

7. In the present case the Court of Small Causes had only decided that a question seeking information about the true legal relationship arising out of the document could be permitted to be put to the witnesses for Filmistan. The Court gave no finding expressly or by implication on the issue of res judicata or any other issue. In the view of the Trial Court the question whether the legal relationship arising out of the agreement dated December 1, 1960 was in the nature of a lease or of other character had to be decided at the trial and the previous judgment being a judgment by consent "could not operate as res judicata", for, it was not a decision of the Court, and that the consent decree in suit No. 149 of 1960 had not decided that the agreement dated March 27, 1954, was of the nature of a lease, and that in the plaint in that suit it was not even averred that it was a lease.

8. The Trial Judge in overruling the objection did not decide any issues at the stage of recording evidence: he was not called upon to decide any issues at that stage. The observations made by him obviously relate to the arguments advanced at the Bar and can in no sense be regarded even indirectly as a decision on any of the issues. But the High Court has recorded a finding that the agreement dated November 27, 1954, created a lease and that the consent decree operated as res judicata. A consent decree (according ?) to the decisions of this Court, does not operate as res judicata, because a consent decree is merely the record of a contract between the parties to a suit, to which is superadded the seal of the Court. A matter in contest in a suit may operate as res judicata only if there is an adjudication by the Court; the terms of Section 11 of the Code leave no scope for a contrary view. Again it was for the Trial Court in the first instance to decide that question and thereafter the High Court could if the matter were brought before it by way of appeal or in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, have decided that question. In our judgment, the High Court had no jurisdiction to record any finding on the issue of res judicata in a revision application filed against an order refusing to uphold an objection to certain question asked to a witness under examination.

9. The true nature of the order brought before the High Court and the dimensions of the dispute covered thereby apparently got blurred and the High Court proceeded to decide matters on which no decision was till then recorded by the Trial Court, and which could not be decided by the High Court until the parties had opportunity of leading evidence thereon.

10. It may also be observed that by ordering that a question may properly be put to a witness who was being examined, no case was decided by the Trial Court. The expression "case" is not limited in its import to the entirety of the matter in dispute in an action. This Court observed in Major S. S. Khanna v. Brig. F. J. Dillon (1964) 4 SCR 409 = (AIR 1964 SC 497) that the expression "case" is a word of comprehensive import: it includes a civil proceeding and is not restricted by anything contained in S. 115 of the Code to the entirety of the proceeding in a civil Court. To interpret the expression "case" as an entire proceeding only and not a part of the proceeding imposes an unwarranted restriction on the exercise of powers of superintendence and may result in certain cases in denying relief to the aggrieved litigant where it is most needed and may result in the perpetration of gross injustice. But it was not decided in Major S. S. Khanna's case, (1964) 4 SCR 409 = (AIR 1964 SC 497) (supra) that every order of the Court in the course of a suit amounts to a case decided. A case may be said to be decided, if the Court adjudicates for the purposes of the suit some right or obligation of the parties in controversy; every order in the suit cannot be regarded as a case decided within the meaning of Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

11. The order passed by the High Court is set aside and the Trial Court is directed to proceed and dispose of the suit. We trust that the suit will be taken up early for hearing and disposed of expeditiously. We recommend that the form of the issues Nos. 11, 12 and 13 will be rectified by the learned Trial Court.

12. Filmistan will pay the costs of the appeal in the Court and in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

The Commissioner of Income-tax, West Bengal I, Appellant v. India Discount Co., Ltd., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2115 of 1968, D/- 7-8-1969.

Income-tax Act (1922), Secs. 10, 12 — Assessee, a private limited Company whose business inter alia is to deal with shares and securities — Assessee purchasing shares of a Company from a share broker — Shares sold with arrear dividends declared long ago but not claimed by previous owners — Amount of arrear dividends received by the assessee — Amount cannot be treated as income liable to tax either under Section 10 or under Section 12. AIR 1967 Cal 475, Affirmed.

Where an assessee, a private limited company whose business inter alia is to deal in shares and securities, purchases shares of a Company from a share broker and it is evident by the letter from share broker that the shares have been sold with arrear dividends — dividends declared long ago but not claimed by previous owners of the shares — then the arrear dividends amount received by the assessee cannot be treated as income liable to tax either as profit under Sec. 10 or as dividend under Section 12.

The arrear dividends, being the income of vendor, i.e., the registered share holders, are not claimable by the purchaser (assessee) by virtue of his right as such purchaser and cannot become his income from the shares. He is to get the same because the vendor has contracted to pass the arrear dividends on to him. The existence of a contract binding the vendors to make over to the purchaser the arrear dividends clearly implies that the price paid by the purchaser is not only for the value of the share scrips but also for the sum which is going to be realised in the form of arrear dividends by the purchaser. What the assessee acquires in the form of share scrip represents its stock-in-trade, which consists of the shares and the dividends potential which has to be realised. In such case it is manifest that the assessee pays the purchase consideration not only for the share scrips but also for the arrear dividends which is inextricably connected with the purchase of the share scrips. Hence the arrear dividends amount is not income which can be assessed in the hands of the assessee. AIR 1967 Cal 475, Affirmed. (Paras 3, 4)

Merely by the fact that the assessee erroneously credited the receipt to the profit and loss account the receipt cannot become the income of the assessee. (1962) 46 ITR 144 (SC), Relied on. (Para 4)

Mr. B. Sen Senior Advocate, (M/s. S. A. L. Narayana Rao, R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates with him), for Appellant; Mr. S. Mitra, Senior Advocate, (Mr. P. K. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

RAMASWAMI, J.:— The respondent is a private limited company (hereinafter referred to as the assessee). The appeal relates to the assessment year 1956-57 for which the previous year is the year ending September 30, 1955. The business of the assessee was to deal with shares and securities. On September 30, 1954 the assessee purchased 11,900 shares of Kedarnath Jute Manufacturing Co. Ltd., in two lots, one at the rate of Rs. 9-8-0 per share and the other at Rs. 9-4-0 per share from one Beharilal Nathani, Share broker, for a total consideration of Rs. 1,12,575. When the assessee purchased the said shares a large amount of dividends was in arrear as the previous owners had not claimed the dividends declared between 1936 and 1945, although a large part of the dividends on the said shares in respect of the years 1945 to 1954 had been collected by the previous owners of the said shares. A letter addressed by Beharilal Nathani to the assessee bearing the date September 30, 1954 goes to show that the shares had been "sold with arrear dividends". It is admitted that the dividends which had been declared between the years 1936 and 1945 and were received by the assessee during the accounting period amounted to Rs. 43,925. The assessee first credited this sum to the profit and loss appropriation account and thereafter transferred the same to a reserve fund in the accounting year ending September 30, 1955. No adjustment was made in the share purchase account on account of the receipt of dividend. The value of the shares which represented the stock-in-trade of the assessee remained the same both in the opening and the closing stocks. Before the Income-tax Officer it was contended on behalf of the assessee that as the arrear dividends pertained to the years 1936 to 1945 the arrear dividend received by the assessee was not in the nature of income liable to income-tax as it was merely a realisation of capital. The Income-tax Officer rejected the contention of the assessee and treated the amount of arrear dividend as the business income of the assessee liable to tax. On appeal by the assessee the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax examined the question whether the amount of Rs. 43,925 should be treated as dividend and should, therefore, be assessed under Section 12 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) or whether it should be treated as profits and gains of business arising to the assessee and taxed under Section 10 of the Act. He however, held that the amount could not be regarded as 'dividend' as the assessee was not the registered shareholder in the years for which the arrear dividends were declared. But he held that since the shares were purchased by the assessee with the knowledge that it would be entitled to receive the arrear dividends which represented profits arising on the acquisition of such shares, the assessee could be deemed to have entered into a scheme of profit making, an adventure in the nature of trade. The assessee brought a second appeal to the Appellate Tribunal but the appeal was dismissed. The Appellate Tribunal confirmed the findings by the Income-tax authorities and held that the assessee acquired the shares on which the arrear dividends were received in the course of its share-dealing business and that the sum of Rs. 43,925 so received by the assessee formed an integral part of its income arising from business which was liable to tax. At the instance of the assessee the Appellate Tribunal stated a case to the

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the sum of Rupees 43,925 received by the assessee represented business income arising under Sec. 10 from an adventure in the nature of trade or it was a dividend within the meaning of Section 12 of the Income-tax Act?"

After looking into the statement of case and also the application of the assessee under Section 66 (1) of the Act the High Court held that the question which the Tribunal had referred did not correctly and accurately describe the stand and contention taken by the assessee throughout which was that no part of the arrear dividends received by the assessee was income at all liable to tax. The High Court thereafter addressed itself to the real issue between the parties and ultimately held that the amount of Rs. 43,925 was not liable to tax. This appeal is brought on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax against the judgment of the High Court dated January 6, 1965 by a certificate granted under Section 66A (2) of the Act.

2. It is necessary that the question referred to by the High Court should be reframed in the following manner in order to bring out the real point in controversy between the parties:

"Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the assessee had purchased the arrears of dividend? If so whether the said sum of Rs. 43,925 could at all be assessed either as dividend or as profit?"

3. It is manifest that dividends declared by Kedarnath Jute Manufacturing Co., between the years 1936 and 1945 were the property of the persons whose names stood on the share register on the relevant dates. When a company declares dividend the same can only be paid to the person who is then the registered holder. A purchaser of shares becomes entitled to all dividends declared since his purchase but not before. If the purchase is made on the eve of declaration of dividend but the purchaser does not get his name mutated in the records of the company in time to have the dividend-warrant issued in his own name he is entitled to call upon his vendor to make over the dividend to him if and when received. It is well settled that after a sale of the shares and so long as the purchaser does not get his name registered, the vendor is for certain purposes considered a trustee for the purchaser of the rights attaching to the shares or accruing thereon, including the voting rights. In the present case there was a contract between the assessee and the registered shareholders to sell the shares to the assessee with arrear dividends. In other words the assessee entered into the contract with the registered shareholders not only to purchase share scrips but the dividends which had been declared but not collected by him or paid over to shareholders. As the dividends had been declared long ago there was no uncertainty as to the exact amount receivable in respect of them. It is, therefore, clear that both the purchaser and the vendor knew exactly what sum of money would come to the vendor by way of such dividend. In other words the purchase consideration included the amount of the arrear dividends and as the dividends had been declared long ago there was no uncertainty as to the exact amount receivable in respect of them. The existence of a contract binding the vendors to make over to the purchaser the arrear dividends clearly implied that the price paid by the purchaser was not only for the value of the share scrips but also for the sum of Rs. 43,925 which was going to be realised in the form of arrear dividends by the purchaser. The High Court held upon an examination of the evidence that such an arrangement implied that the value of Rs. 9-8-0 and Rs. 9-4-0 per share as settled into the broker's bills was not the real value of the share scrips alone but also included the element of the arrear dividends agreed to be receivable by the purchaser. The legal position, therefore, is that the arrear dividends were not claimable by the purchaser by virtue of his right as such purchaser and could not become his income from the shares. He was to get the same because the vendor had contracted to pass the arrear dividends on to him. They were the income of the vendors, i.e., the registered holders but they could not become the income of the purchaser. In fact the assessee had purchased the amount of arrear dividends for a price which was included in the total consideration of Rs. 1,12,575. What the assessee acquired in the form of share scrips represented its stock-in-trade, which consisted of the shares and the dividends potential which had to be realised. In this state of facts it is manifest that the assessee paid the amount of Rs. 1,12,575 not only for the share scrips but also for the arrear dividends which was inextricably connected with the purchase of the share scrips. In our opinion the High Court rightly held that the amount of Rs. 43,925 was not income which could be assessed in the hands of the assessee.

4. It was said that the assessee had itself credited the amount of Rs. 43,925 to the profit and loss appropriation account and thereafter transferred the same to a reserve fund in the accounting year ending September 30, 1966. No adjustment was made in the share purchase account on account of the receipt of dividend. But it is well established that a receipt which in law cannot be regarded as income cannot become so merely because the assessee erroneously credited it to the profit and loss account. (See Commissioner of Income-tax Bombay City I v. M/s. Shoorji Vallabhadas and Co., (1962) 46 ITR 144 (SC).) The assessee's case, had all along been that the amount of arrear dividends received could not be treated as income of the assessee liable to tax for the assessment year 1956-57. As we have already shown the consideration paid by the assessee was given not only for the shares but also for share dividends amounting to Rs. 43,925 and the amount of Rs. 1,12,575 was paid not only for the share scrips but also for the arrear dividends. In other words there was capital purchase by the assessee of the shares together with arrear dividends due on the shares for the years 1936 to 1945. It is therefore not possible to treat the payment of Rs. 43,925 as income liable to tax either as profit under Section 10 of the Act or as dividend under Section 12 of the Act.

5. For the reasons expressed we hold that there is no merit in this appeal. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Administration of Evacuee Property Act (31 of 1950), Sections 40 and 2 (d) — Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (27 of 1949), Sections 38, 39 and 2 (d) — Vendor becoming evacuee after transfer of his property without executing sale deed — Confirmation of custodian for transfer not obtained — Transfer ineffective even if property had not been declared as evacuee property — Decree for specific performance passed on basis of award between vendor and vendee cannot be executed.

Under Section 38 (1) of the Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 as well as under Section 40 (1) of Central Act 31 of 1950 transfer of property was ineffective unless confirmed by the Custodian even if it was made by a person who became an evacuee after the date of the transfer. It was not necessary that the property should have been declared or notified to be evacuee property before the aforesaid provisions were attracted. Under Section 40 (1) of the Act, the transfer was to be ineffective in both eventualities; (1) if the transferor became an evacuee within the meaning of Section 2 after the transfer or (2) if the transferor's property had been declared or notified to be evacuee property. (Para 7)

A entered into an agreement on 16-6-1948 to sell his properties to B for consideration already received by him. A dispute arising between the parties was referred to arbitration and the consequent award was made a rule of Court on 30-11-1949 and a decree in terms of award was passed in favour of B. A migrated to Pakistan some date after 22-11-1949. The Deputy Custodian accorded confirmation of the transfer on 9-5-1951 but the Additional Custodian in exercise of his revisional powers suo motu set aside the Order of confirmation. On 4-4-1952 B sought to execute the award decree but on objection by the Custodian it was dismissed on ground that Section 17 (i) of the Central Act 31 of 1950 created a bar to execution of the decree. An appeal to the High Court being dismissed, B appealed to the Supreme Court by Special leave.

Held (1) that as A had migrated to Pakistan sometime after 22-11-1949 when Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 was in force it was highly doubtful whether the Custodian could take advantage of the provisions of automatic vesting contained in U. P. Ordinance 1 of 1949. AIR 1961 SC 365, Ref. to. (Para 6)

(2) that as A had become an evacuee within the definition of that term in Section 2 (d) of the Ordinance and the Act, it was necessary to obtain the confirmation of the Additional Custodian for the transfer and the same having been refused the transfer remained ineffective. Even according to the award the confirmation or approval of the Custodian had to be obtained before the transfer documents were to be executed and completed in accordance with law. It was incumbent on B to obtain the confirmation order before he could ask for any further steps to be taken by the courts in the matter of execution and registration of the transfer deed. Under Section 39 of the Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 no document could be registered of the nature mentioned in Section 38 unless the Custodian had confirmed the transfer. Similar provisions were contained in Section 40 of the Central Act 31 of 1950. The prayer in the execution application that the Court might grant assistance "by execution of sale deed under the enabling para 5 of the Decree" could not be entertained or acceded to by the Executing Court. Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Appellant; Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Senior Advocate (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

GROVER, J.— This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court confirming the order of the District Judge dismissing an execution application filed by the appellant.

2. On June 16, 1948 the appellant entered into an agreement with Aziz Ahmed Khan respondent No. 1 for the sale of certain properties comprising houses and plots in the town of Bareilly. The sale consideration of Rs. 1,45,000 was stated to have been already paid by the appellant to the vendor. Subsequently disputes arose between the vendor and the appellant regarding the completion of the sale. These disputes were referred to the arbitration of Shri R. R. Agarwal who gave an award on August 30, 1949, which was made a rule of the Court on November 30, 1949. A decree on the basis of the award was granted in favour of the appellant.

3. Sometime after November 22, 1949 the vendor Aziz Ahmed Khan left India for Pakistan. On December 7, 1950 the appellant moved the Deputy Custodian (Judicial) Meerut Circle for confirmation of the transfer under Section 38 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance, 1949 (Ordinance No. 27 of 1949) or under Section 40 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act 1950 (Act 31 of 1950). On 9th May 1951 the Deputy Custodian accorded confirmation. The Additional Custodian, however, took suo motu action in exercise of his revisional jurisdiction and set aside the order passed by the Deputy Custodian. On April 4, 1952 the appellant filed an application for execution of the decree passed on the basis of the award. On May 10, 1952 objections were filed on behalf of the Custodian to the execution. The District Judge held that the award made on August 30, 1949 could not have the effect of transferring the properties as the approval of the Collector had not been obtained under the notification dated July 29, 1949 which had been issued under Section 26 of U. P. Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance No. 1 of 1949 and that on the date of the decree the transfer of properties could not be effected unless confirmed by the Custodian. It was held by him that no interest by way of charge in favour of the appellant had been created on the properties in dispute. He was further of the view that Section 17 (1) of the Central Act 31 of 1950 created a bar to execution of the decree. The execution application was consequently dismissed.

4. The appellant filed an appeal to the High Court which was dismissed. When the appeal came up for hearing before this Court on February 22, 1968 it was considered expedient to have further findings on certain points. The following questions were therefore framed and remitted to the High Court for that purpose.

(1) The date on which Aziz Ahmed Khan migrated to Pakistan.

(2) Whether the properties of Aziz Ahmed Khan vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property under U. P. Ordinance

1 of 1949 or Central Ordinance 12 of 1949 as made applicable to the State of U. P. by U. P. Ordinance 20 of 1949 or under the Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 or under Central Act of 1950.

The High Court remitted these matters to the District Judge. His finding on the first question was that Aziz Ahmed Khan had migrated to Pakistan on some date after November 22, 1949. On the second question he found that Aziz Ahmed Khan's properties did not vest in the Custodian of Evacuee Property under any of the Ordinances or under the Central Act 31 of 1950. Certain additional evidence was produced before the High Court. The High Court expressed agreement with the conclusions of the District Judge on both the points. It may be mentioned that on certain subsidiary points the learned District Judge had also found that it had not been proved that a valid declaration under Section 7 (1) of the Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 or of the corresponding provision in the Central Act 31 of 1950 was made for declaring Aziz Ahmed Khan an evacuee. In the opinion of the learned Judge such a declaration was necessary if his properties were to be declared evacuee properties.

5. In view of the findings which have been returned by the High Court on the points referred, it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that there could be no bar to the execution of the decree which was based on the award. It is pointed out that on the conclusions at which the High Court has now arrived the properties of Aziz Ahmed Khan were never declared to be evacuee properties either under the Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 or the Central Act 31 of 1950, and they could not vest in the Custodian unless they had been declared after appropriate proceedings. It is urged that the decree in favour of the appellant was of the nature of a decree passed in a suit for specific performance. The Court could and should have executed a conveyance in favour of the appellant since Aziz Ahmed Khan was no longer available or was refusing to do so and the confirmation of the Custodian could be obtained before the registration was effected. According to the counsel for the appellant the additional Custodian had declined to confirm the transfer at the previous stage because there was no deed of sale or transfer.

6. Counsel for the respondent has drawn attention to a decision of this Court in Azimunissa v. The Deputy Custodian Evacuee Properties, District Deoria, 1961-2 SCR 91=(AIR 1961 SC 365) in which the effect of the declaration of U. P. Ordinance 1 of 1949 to be invalid by the Courts came up for consideration, as also of the subsequent evacuee legislation namely, Central Ordinance 27 of 1949, Central Act 31 of 1950 and the Administration of Evacuee Property (Amendment) Act 1960. It appears to have been held in that case that the property which had vested under the U. P. Ordinance 1 of 1949 continued to vest in the Custodian notwithstanding the fact that High Court of Allahabad in Azimunnissa v. Assistant Custodian, AIR 1957 All 561, held the vesting to be invalid. This was the result of the introduction of Section 8(2-A) in the Central Act of 1950 by the Central Amendment Act 1 of 1960. In the present case, however, Aziz Ahmed Khan migrated to Pakistan after November 22, 1949. At that point of time it was Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 which was in force. It appears highly doubtful that the respondent could take advantage of the provisions of automatic vesting contained in U. P. Ordinance 1 of 1949.

7. There is, however, a serious hurdle in the way of the appellant even when the provisions of Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 or the Central Act 31 of 1950 are taken into consideration. Section 38 (1) of that Ordinance provided that no transfer of any right or interest in any property after the 14th day of August 1947 by or on behalf of an evacuee or by or on behalf of a person who had become an evacuee after the date of the transfer shall be effective so as to confer any rights or remedies on the parties to such transfer unless it was confirmed by the Custodian. The provisions of Section 40 of the Central Act 31 of 1950 were similar though there was a certain change in the language. Sub-section (1) of that section was in the following terms:

"No transfer made after the 14th day of August, 1947, but before the 7th day of May 1954, by or on behalf of any person in any manner whatsoever of any property belonging to him shall be effective so as to confer any rights or remedies in respect of the transfer on the parties thereto or any person claiming under them or either of them, if, at any time after the transfer, the transferor becomes an evacuee within the meaning of Section 2 or the property of the transferor is declared or notified to be evacuee pro-property within the meaning of this Act, unless the transfer is confirmed by the Custodian in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

Under both these enactments transfer of property was ineffective unless confirmed by the Custodian even if it was made by a person who became an evacuee after the date of the transfer. It was not necessary that the property should have been declared or notified to be evacuee property before the aforesaid provisions were attracted. Under Section 40 (1) of the Act, the transfer was to be ineffective in both eventualities; (1) if the transferor became an evacuee within the meaning of Section 2 after the transfer or (2) if the transferor's property had been declared or notified to be evacuee property. It is abundantly clear that if Aziz Ahmed Khan became an evacuee even after the transfer, Section 38 (1) of the Ordinance and Section 40 (1) of the Act became applicable. One of the meanings of the word "evacuee" as given in the definition in Section 2 (d) of the Ordinance and of the Act was:

Section 2 (d) "(i). 'evacuee' means any person, who, on account of the setting up of the Dominions of India and Pakistan or on account of civil disturbances or the fear of such disturbances leaves or has, on or after the 1st day of March, 1947, left any place in a Province for any place outside the territories now forming part of India."

Aziz Ahmed Khan became an evacuee within the meaning of the above definition. It was necessary, therefore, for the appellant to have obtained the confirmation of the Custodian in respect of the transfer which had been made by Aziz Ahmed Khan in his favour of the properties in question. The Additional Custodian declined to confirm the transfer and thus the condition precedent for the transfer to become effective remained unsatisfied. It is significant that even in the award which formed the basis of the decree it had been provided "the second party (Aziz Ahmed Khan) is hereby directed to execute the necessary documents in respect of the transfer by him of the properties referred to above within one month from the date of the receipt of the confirmation or approval according to law failing which the first party will, at his option, get the same executed and registered through Court on the basis of this award which would be made a rule of the Court. Therefore according to the award the confirmation or approval of the Custodian had to be obtained before the transfer documents were to be executed and completed in accordance with law. It was incumbent on the appellant to obtain the confirmation order before he could ask for any further steps to be taken by the Courts in the matter of execution and registration of the transfer deed. Under Section 39 of the Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 no document could be registered of the nature mentioned in Section 38 unless the Custodian had confirmed the transfer. Similar provisions were contained in Section 40 of the Central Act 31 of 1950. The prayer in the Execution Application that the Court might grant assistance "by execution of sale deed under the enabling para 5 of the Decree" could not be entertained or acceded to by the Executing Court.

8. There is one matter, however, on which we would like to express no view and leave it open to the appellant to take such steps as he may be advised. Para 6 of the award which became part of the decree was as follows:—

"The claim of the first party for this transfer and exchange consideration is Rs. 1,50,000/- (one lac fifty thousand) on account of all principal money and interest and other expenses calculated to date against the second party Sri Aziz Ahmed Khan, which the second party will pay with interest at 12 per cent per annum in case the transaction and transfer of the properties referred to above in favour of the first party Sri Sardana is not confirmed or approved in any way and for any other reasons whatsoever.

Sri Sardana will enforce the payments against the properties referred to above and these properties are hereby charged with this claim and Sri Sardana will have his remedies to enforce the payment of the above claim against all other properties of the second party and also against his person."

The High Court in the judgment under appeal dealt with this question as if the charge was on the evacuee property. On the reasoning which has been pressed before us about the necessity of a declaration under the provisions of Central Ordinance 27 of 1949 or Central Act 31 of 1950 this part of the judgment does not appear to be correct. We would, however, refrain from expressing any final opinion as in fairness to both sides this question should be left for being decided, if taken, in appropriate proceedings including proceedings before the Executing Court.

9. With the above observations the appeal is dismissed but in view of the entire circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1302 to 1306 of 1968,
D/- 13-10-1969.

Municipalities — Mysore Municipalities Act (12 of 1964), Sections 382 (1) Provisos 2 and 3, 101 (2) — Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), Section 82 (2) — Municipality which originally formed part of Madras State and on reorganisation became part of Mysore State, issued demand notice for property tax for assessment year 1965-66 determining rateable annual value under Sec. 101 (2) of Mysore Act but assessed tax at rates under Madras Act of 1920 — Tax paid as per demand notice — Demand notice for year 1966-67 under Madras Act held not justified in view of second and third provisos to Section 382 (1) of Mysore Act.

The Municipality which originally formed part of the Madras State and which on reorganisation of the States, became part of the State of Mysore, issued demand notice for property tax for the assessment year 1965-66 determining the rateable annual value under Sec. 101 (2) of Mysore Municipalities Act (12 of 1964) which came into force on 1-4-1965. The tax was assessed on the basis of that annual rateable value, at rates under the Madras District Municipalities Act (1920) and the tax was paid as per the demand notices. On March 16, 1967 the Municipality issued notices of demand under the Madras Act for payment of property tax for the year 1966-67. The tax demanded on the basis of Madras Act was considerably higher than that originally demanded and paid under the Mysore Act for the assessment year 1965-66;

Held that the second and third provisos to Section 382 (1) of the Mysore Act did not justify the issue of the demand notices for the period in question. Having due regard to the second and third provisos to S. 382 (1) and the other material provisions of the Mysore Act, the position was that a property tax must have been imposed by the Madras Act and even though the rates of such tax were higher than under the Mysore Act, the said higher tax could be collected. But no such tax having been imposed under the Madras Act, the second and third provisos to Section 382 (1) did not apply and hence the demands for payment of property tax for the period were not justified. (Paras 12, 13)

The essential requisite for attracting the two provisos is that the tax should have been imposed under the Madras Act, as per the second proviso and tax at a higher rate should have been imposed again under the Madras Act as per the third proviso. By merely preparing the assessment registers under the Madras Act on April 1, 1964 it cannot be stated that a tax has been imposed under the first proviso or a tax at a higher rate has been imposed under the third proviso. The Municipal tax is an annual tax leviable for a particular official year and the assessment list on the basis of which the tax is assessed is for such official year.

Cases Referred: Chronological Paras
(1968) 2 SCR 125, Municipal Corporation, Indore v. Hiralal 10

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

VAIDIALINGAM, J.:— These five appeals, by special leave, by the City Municipal Council, Mangalore and the Commissioner of the City Municipal Council, are directed against the order passed by the Mysore High Court in Writ Petitions Nos. 907, 1004, 1005, 1175 and 1245 of 1967, quashing the demand notices issued by the appellants against the first respondent in each of these appeals for payment of property tax for the half-year ending September 30, 1966. As the grounds of attack levelled against the demand notices by the said respondents are common, we will only refer to the averments contained in Writ Petition No. 907 of 1967 out of which Civil Appeal No. 1302 of 1968, arises.

2. The first respondent therein was the owner of a number of buildings situated in Ward II and Ward XX, within Mangalore Municipality in the South Canara District, which originally formed part of the Madras State and which, on reorganisation of the States, became part of the State of Mysore. The Mysore Municipalities Act, 1964 (Act XXII of 1964) (hereinafter referred to as the Mysore Act) came into force from April 1, 1965 as per the notification, dated September 23, 1965, issued by the State Government. Certain sections had already come into force. Till the Mysore Act came into force, the Mangalore Municipality was governed by the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920 (Act V of 1920) (hereinafter called the Madras Act). The Madras Act had provided for levy of property tax, the procedure to be adopted for the same and as to how the annual value of a building was to be arrived at as well as the percentage at which the property tax was to be levied. Similarly the Mysore Act had also provided for levy of property tax, prescribing the ascertainment of annual rateable value and also the rate at which the tax was to be levied. Although the Mysore Act came into force from April 1, 1965, the appellants issued demand notices for property tax under the said Act for the assessment year 1965-66. In those demand notices, the Municipal Council determined the rateable annual value under Sec. 101 (2) of the Mysore Act and assessed the tax on the basis of that annual rateable value, but at rates under the Madras Act. The tax was paid as per the demand notices. But on March 16, 1967 the appellant issued the impugned notices of demand under the Madras Act for payment of property tax for the year 1966-67. The tax demanded on the basis of the Madras Act was considerably higher than that originally demanded and paid under the Mysore Act for the assessment year 1965-66. Notwithstanding the protest made by the first respondent, the appellants threatened to collect the tax as per the demand notices and hence the first respondent filed writ petition No. 1907 of 1967 challenging the demand notices. The main grounds of attack against the demand notices, as raised in the said writ petition were that after the passing of the Mysore Act the appellants had no power to levy property tax under the Madras Act and therefore the demands were illegal. The demand notices were further attacked on the ground that S 382 of the Mysore Act, which related to the repeal of many Acts including the Madras Act and the saving provisions contained therein did not justify the issue of the demand notices. The first respondent accordingly prayed for quashing the demand notices issued under the Madras Act. He had also raised certain contentions regarding the levy of health cess included in the notices; but it is unnecessary to refer to those averments as the High Court has held against the first respondent and that question does not arise in these appeals.

3. The appellants pleaded that under the Mysore Act, property tax, among other things, has been imposed after following the procedure prescribed in Sections 95 to 97 therein and the imposition of tax has come into force from April 1, 1967, but for the period in question viz., the year 1966-67 the demands were legal and valid in view of the provisions contained in Section 382 of the Mysore Act. Notwithstanding the repeal of the Madras Act, the provisions contained in Sec. 382 of the Mysore Act clearly saved the right of the appellants to levy property tax under the Madras Act to adopt both the annual value as well as the rate of tax as per the assessment registers maintained under the said Act. In particular, the appellants relied upon the second proviso in Section 382 (1) of the Mysore Act and the third proviso inserted in the said section with retrospective effect, by the Mysore Municipalities (Amendment) Act, 1966 (Mysore Act XXXIV of 1966). According to the appellants, as necessarily the imposition of property tax under the Mysore Act, after following the procedure contained therein will take time, the Legislature had made consequential provisions in Section 382 with a view to enable the imposition of property tax under the repealing enactments during the interim period.

4. The High Court has, by and large, accepted the contentions of the first respondent. According to the High Court, although the higher rate of tax under the Madras Act is preserved by proviso 3 to Section 382 (1) of the Mysore Act, the provision for the determination of the annual value under Section 82 (2) of the Madras Act is not saved. The High Court is further of the view that the second proviso to Section 382 (1) of the Mysore Act only continues the old im-post and the third proviso preserves the old rates and that they do not continue the old annual value. The net result of the decision of the High Court is that the Municipal Council has to determine the annual rateable value of the building as provided by Section 101 (2) of the Mysore Act and to assess the property tax at the rate at which it is assessed under the Madras Act. Finally the High Court quashed the demand notices issued by the appellants.

5. The learned Solicitor General, appearing for the appellants, urged that the High Court was in error in interpreting the second and third provisos to Sec. 382 (1) of the Mysore Act. It was urged that as the levy of property tax after adopting the procedure indicated in the Mysore Act will take time, the Legislature had, by incorporating the necessary provisions in Section 382, particularly the second and third provisos to sub-section (1), preserved the right of the Municipal Council concerned to adopt not only the annual value but also the rate of property tax payable according to the assessment registers maintained under the Madras Act, till they are superseded by anything done under the Mysore Act. The learned Solicitor General, further urged that the view of the High Court that the annual rateable value has to be determined under the Mysore Act and the computation of the rate of tax has to be under the Madras Act, was anomalous and was not warranted by the provisions of the Mysore Act.

6. On the other hand, Mr. Veerappa, learned Counsel appearing for the first respondent in all the appeals, has supported the view taken by the High Court and urged that a proper interpretation had been placed on Section 382 of the Mysore Act. According to the learned Counsel, normally, after the coming into force of the Mysore Act, no assessments could be made under the Madras Act, but Section 382 of the Mysore Act, repealing the Madras Act, had made certain special provisions the existence of which alone would attract certain actions taken under the Madras Act.

7. In order to appreciate the contentions, noted above, it is necessary to refer broadly to the scheme of the two Acts relating to the levy of property tax. We shall first advert to the Madras Act. Under Section 78 (1) power is given to the Municipal Council to levy, among other taxes, a property tax. Under sub-section (3), a resolution of a municipal council determining to levy a tax has to specify the rate at which such tax is to be levied and the date from which it shall be levied. Section 81(1) provides that if a Council, by resolution, determines that a property tax shall be levied, such tax shall be levied on all buildings and lands within the municipal limits save those exempted by the statute or by any other law. Sub-section (2) states that the tax shall be levied at such percentages of the annual value of the buildings or lands as may be fixed by the Municipal Council, subject to Section 78. Under this Section, we are informed that 25% has been fixed as the maximum rate. Sub-section (2) of S. 82 provides that the annual value of the lands and buildings shall be deemed to be the gross annual rent at which they may reasonably be expected to be let from month to month or from year to year less a deduction in the case of buildings, of 10 % of that portion of such annual rent which is attributable to buildings alone. It further provides that the said deduction shall be in lieu of all allowances for repairs or on any other account. Section 86 provides that the property tax shall be levied every half year and shall, excepting as otherwise provided in Schedule IV, be paid by the owner within thirty days of the commencement of the half-year. Section 124 provides that the rules and tables embodied in Schedule IV shall be read as part of Chapter VI, dealing with Taxation and Finance. Schedule IV deals with Taxation and Finance Rules. Rule 2 provides for the preparation and maintenance of assessment books showing the persons and property liable to taxation under the Act and the assessment books being made available for inspection by the tax payers. Rule 6 provides for the value of any land or building for purposes of the property tax being determined by the executive authority. Under rule 7, the executive authority has to enter in the assessment books the annual or capital value of all lands and buildings and the tax payable thereon. Rule 8 (1) states that the assessment books shall be completely revised by the executive authority once in every five years. Sub-rule (2) thereof provides for amending the assessment books at any time between one general revision and another in the manner indicated therein. A perusal of the provisions referred to above, shows that under the Madras Act the property tax is levied on the annual value of buildings which is deemed to be the gross annual rental value less a deduction of ten per cent of that portion of annual rent which is attributable to the buildings alone. The Municipal Council has to pass a resolution determining to levy the property tax and that resolution should also specify the rate at which such tax is to be levied as also the date from which it shall be levied and the tax is levied every half year. The executive authority has to maintain the assessment books containing entries regarding the annual value as well as the tax payable thereon. The executive authority is under an obligation to completely revise the assessment books once in every five years.

8. There is no controversy that the Madras Act was applicable to the City of Mangalore, even after it formed part of the Mysore State on the reorganization of the States. The Madras Act, as we have mentioned earlier, was repealed by the Mysore Act, which came into force with effect from April 1, 1965.

9. Coming to the Mysore Act, Chapter VI deals with Municipal Taxation. Section 94 enables a municipal council to levy a tax on buildings or lands or both situated within the municipality, after complying with the procedure indicated therein and subject to any general or special orders of Government and at rates not exceeding those specified in Schedules I to VII. The maximum rate has been fixed at 24% of the annual rateable value. Section 2 (1) defines 'annual rateable value' as the gross annual rent for which any building or land exclusive of furniture or machinery might reasonably be expected to be let from month to month or year to year. Section 95 deals with the procedure to be adopted preliminary to imposing a tax. Section 101 (2) provides that the annual rateable value of a building shall be the gross annual rent as defined in Clause (1) of Section 2, less a deduction of sixteen and two-thirds per cent of such annual rent. It further states that the said deduction shall be in lieu of all allowances for repairs or on any other account whatsoever. Section 103 deals with the preparation of an assessment list. Section 382 (1) repeals the various enactments referred to therein, including the Madras Act. The first proviso, which saves certain matters, does not come into the picture in this case.

The second proviso as well as the third proviso, introduced by the Mysore Municipalities (Amendment) Act, 1966 are relevant for our purpose and they are as follows:

"(2) Provided further that subject to the preceding proviso anything done or any action taken (including any appointment or delegation made, tax, fee or cess imposed, notification, order, instrument, or direction issued, rule, regulation, form, bye-law or scheme framed, certificate obtained, permit or licence granted or registration effected) under the said laws shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act and shall continue to be in force accordingly unless and until superseded by anything done or any action taken under this Act:

(3) Provided further that notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding proviso where any tax, duty, fee or cess other than a duty on transfers of immovable properties has been imposed under the said laws at a rate higher than the maximum rate permissible under this Act, such tax, duty, fee or cess may continue to be imposed and collected at such higher rate unless and until superseded by anything done or any action taken under this Act."

The third proviso has been introduced with retrospective effect by the Amending Act. It is not really necessary for us to consider more elaborately the scheme of the Mysore Act because, even according to the appellants, the procedure indicated therein—whatever may be the procedure about which we express no opinion—has not been taken before the issue of the demand notices which were under challenge before the High Court. On the other hand, the appellants have exclusively relied on the second and third provisos to Section 382 (1) of the Act.

10. The learned Solicitor General has urged that the assessment books under the Madras Act were prepared on April 1, 1964 and, if so, under the second and third provisos to Section 382 (1), the property tax can be levied and collected as per the provisions of the Madras Act. In particular, the learned Solicitor General placed reliance upon the provision of the Madras Act relating to the maintenance of assessment books and the assessment books having to be revised only once in every five years and pointed out that in this case the assessment books having been prepared on April 1, 1964 they will have currency for a period of five years till March 31, 1969. The first proviso to Section 382 (1) no doubt saves any tax which had been imposed under the Madras Act. Similarly, under the third proviso, the Municipal Council will have authority to collect tax even at a rate higher than the maximum rate permissible under the Mysore Act; but the essential requisite for attracting the two provisos is that the tax should have been imposed under the Madras Act, as per the second proviso and tax at a higher rate should have been imposed again under the Madras Act as per the third proviso. We are not inclined to accept the contention of the learned Solicitor General that, by merely preparing the assessment registers under the Madras Act on April 1, 1964 it can be stated that a tax has been imposed under the first proviso or a tax at a higher rate has been imposed under the third proviso. We have already referred to the material provisions of the Madras Act relating to the levy of property tax. Those provisions show that the municipal tax is an annual tax leviable for a particular official year and the assessment list on the basis of which the tax is assessed is for such official year. This was the view expressed by this Court in Municipal Corporation v. Hiralal, (1968) 2 SCR 125 = (AIR 1968 SC 642), while interpreting certain provisions of the Madhya Bharat Municipalities Act, 1954. No doubt the wording in the Madhya Bharat Act in Section 76, dealing with assessment list was slightly different, but, in our opinion, the principle enunciated in that decision regarding the municipal tax being an annual tax leviable for a particular official year and the assessment list, on the basis of which the tax is assessed having currency for each such official year, is applicable also to the interpretation of the Madras Act. No resolution passed by the Municipal Council regarding the levy of the property tax and the rate at which it is to be levied, having currency for the year 1966-67, has been brought to our notice.

11. The learned Solicitor General has drawn our attention to the minutes, dated September 15, 1966 as well as the Council's resolution No. 1280 dated December 20, 1966 relating to the levy of property tax in the City of Mangalore for the period in question, under the Mysore Act. Those proceedings will not assist the appellant as the necessary procedure, under the Mysore Act, has not been followed and therefore that resolution cannot have any legal validity, so as to justify the imposition of tax. Normally, the municipal council will have to prepare a fresh assessment list, every year. By virtue of Section 124 of the Madras Act, the rules and tables embodied in Schedule IV have to be read as Part of Chapter VI dealing with Taxation and Finance. Though, ordinarily, the Municipality would have to prepare a fresh assessment list every year, Rule 8 of Schedule IV permits the Municipal Council to continue the same assessment list for the next four succeeding years and to revise it once every five years. But, in order to enable the Municipal Council to levy and collect a tax, it has to pass a resolution determining to levy a tax, the rate at which such tax has to be levied as also the date from which it shall be levied. That the tax is an annual tax is also borne out by sub-section (2) of Section 82. If the contention of the learned Solicitor that the assessment list, once prepared, has to be adopted for five years is accepted, it will result in the annual value on a particular building or house being static for five years, during which a municipal council can go on adopting the assessment list prepared in an earlier year and the owner or occupier of the building being deprived of the right to object to the valuation regarding the annual value or the tax assessed thereon. This will be the result even though the annual value may have decreased for one reason or the other. It follows that the contention that the preparation of the assessment books amounts to imposing of a tax so as to justify the issue of the demand notice, cannot be accepted.

12. Having due regard to the second and third provisos to Section 382 (1) and the other material provisions of the Mysore Act, the position is that a property tax must have been imposed by the Madras Act and even though the rates of such tax were higher than under the Mysore Act, the said higher tax could be collected. But no such tax having been imposed under the Madras Act, the second and third provisos to S. 382 (1) do not apply and hence the demands for payment of property tax for the period are not justified.

13. Though we are not in agreement with some of the reasons given by the High Court for issuing the writ, the conclusion arrived at by the High Court that the second and third provisos to Section 382 (1) of the Mysore Act do not justify the issue of the demand notices for the period in question is correct.

14. The result is that the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. There will be only one hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

Writ Petn. No. 65 of 1969, D/- 28-3-1969.

Civil Services — Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act (1957), Section 3 — Section in so far as it relates to Telangana and Rule 3 of the A. P. Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules 1959 framed under it are ultra vires Article 16 (3) — Clause (3) of Article 16 is an exception to the rule contained in Clauses (1) and (2) and must be strictly construed — Constitution of India, Articles 16 (3), 35.

Clause (3) of Article 16 enables Parliament to make a law in a special case prescribing any requirement as to residence within a State or Union Territory prior to appointment, as a condition of employment in the State or Union Territory. Under Article 35 (a) this power is conferred upon Parliament but is denied to the Legislature of the States, notwithstanding anything in the Constitution, and under (b) any law in force immediately before the commencement of the Constitution in respect to the matter shall subject to the terms thereof and subject to such adaptations that may be made under Article 372 is to continue in force until altered or repealed or amended by Parliament. The legislative power to create residential qualification for employment is thus exclusively conferred on Parliament. Parliament can make any law which prescribes any requirement as to residence within the State or Union Territory prior to employment or appointment to an office in that State or Union Territory. (Paras 6-7)

The claim for supremacy of Parliament is misconceived. Parliament in this, as in other matters, is supreme only in so far as the Constitution makes it. Where the Constitution does not concede supremacy, Parliament must act within its appointed functions and not transgress them. What the Constitution says is a matter for construction of the language of the Constitution. By the first Clause of Article 16 equality of opportunity in employment or appointment to an office is guaranteed. By the second clause, there can be no discrimination, among other things, on the ground of residence. Realising, however, that sometimes local sentiments may have to be respected or sometimes an inroad from more advanced States into less developed States may have to be prevented, and a residential qualification may, therefore, have to be prescribed, the exception in Clause (3) was made. Even so, that clause spoke of residence within the State. The words 'any requirement' cannot be read to warrant something which could have been said more specifically. These words bear upon the kind of residence or its duration rather than its location within the State. The Constitution, as it stands, speaks of a whole State as the venue for residential qualification and it is impossible to think that the Constituent Assembly was thinking of residence in Districts, Talugas, Cities, Towns or Villages. The fact that this clause is an exception and came as an amendment must dictate that a narrow construction upon the exception should be placed as indeed the debates in the Constituent Assembly also seem to indicate. Wide and liberal construction upon the words "any law" and "any requirement" cannot be placed. These words are obviously controlled by the words "residence within the State or Union Territory" which words mean what they say, neither more nor less. Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act 1957, in so far as it relates to Telangana and Rule 3 of the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules 1959 under it are therefore ultra vires the Constitution. Dadachanji and Co., for Respondent No. 46; M/s. P. A. Choudhury, K. Rajendra Chaudhuri and C. S. Sreenivasa Rao, Advocates, for Interveners.

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.:—The petitioners are persons employed in the Ministerial Services of the Andhra Pradesh Government. All of them were working in various offices located in the cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad. On January 19, 1969, leaders of all political parties in the Legislature of the Andhra Pradesh State appeared to have met and reached a decision that to implement what are called 'Telangana Safeguards', the following measures should be taken:

"All non-domicile persons, who have been appointed either directly, by promotion or by transfer to posts reserved under the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules 1959 for domiciles of Telangana region will be immediately relieved from service. The posts so rendered vacant will be filled by qualified candidates possessing domicile qualifications and in cases where such candidates are not available the posts shall be left unfilled till qualified domicile candidates become available. Action on the above lines will be taken immediately.

All non-domicile employees so relieved shall be provided employment in the Andhra region without break in service and by creating supernumerary posts, if necessary."

2. The Government of Andhra Pradesh then passed an order [G. O. Ms. 36, G. A. (SR) Dept.] on January 21, 1969 relieving before February 28, 1969 all non-domicile persons appointed on or after November 1, 1956 to certain categories of posts reserved for domiciles of Telangana under the Andhra Pradesh

Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules, 1959. Names of such incumbents were to be shown in a pro forma and they were to be employed in the Andhra region without break in service by creating supernumerary posts, if necessary. These supernumerary posts were to be treated as temporary addition to the strength of the office concerned and were to be adjusted against future vacancies in corresponding posts as they arose. The action was based upon Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957 (44 of 1957) which was an Act of Parliament made in pursuance of Clause (3) of Article 16 of the Constitution making special provision for requirement as to residence and brought into force on March 21, 1959. Section 3 of the Act gave the power to make Rules in respect of certain classes of employment in certain areas. It provided:

"3. Power to make rules in respect of certain classes of public employment in certain areas—

(1) The Central Government may by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules prescribing, in regard to appointments to—

(a) any subordinate service or post under the State Government of Andhra Pradesh, or any requirement as to residence within the Telangana area or the said Union Territory as the case may be, prior to such appointment.

* * * * *

(2) In this section,—

(a) * * * * *

(b) "Telangana area" comprises all the territories specified in sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the States Reorganisation Act 1956."

Under Section 4, the Rules had to be laid before each House of Parliament for a period of not less than 30 days and Parliament could make such alterations as it liked. Under Section 5 the Rules had a life of 5 years but by subsequent legislation the period was extended to 10 years. It is said that the period is to be extended by another 5 years. The Rules were made on March 21, 1959. They are called the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules, 1959. Rule 3 provides:

"3. Requirement as a residence Prior to Appointment:

A person shall not be eligible for appointment to a post within the Telengana area under the State Government of Andhra Pradesh or to a post under a local authority (other than a cantonment board) in the said area unless—

(i) he has been continuously residing within the said area for a period of not less than fifteen years immediately preceding the prescribed date; and

(ii) he produces before the appointing authority concerned, if so required by it, a certificate of eligibility granted under these rules;

Provided that in relation to posts in the secretariat Departments and the Offices of the Heads of Departments of the State Government of Andhra Pradesh situated in the cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad, the requirement as to residence laid down in this rule shall apply to the filling of only the second vacancy in every unit of three vacancies which are to be filled by direct recruitment;

Provided further that any period of temporary absence from the Telengana area for the purpose of prosecuting his studies or for undergoing medical treatment or any period of such temporary absence not exceeding three months for any other reason shall not be deemed to constitute a break in the continuity of such residence, but for purpose of calculating the said period of fifteen years any such period of temporary absence shall be excluded."

3. The petitioners were appointed between December 27, 1956 and July 4, 1968. They challenge the Act, the Rules and the proposed action as ultra vires the Constitution. Their case is that Article 16 (3) under which the Act and the Rules purport to be made has been misunderstood as conferring a power to make a law prescribing requirement as to residence in a part of a State. For this reason Section 3 of the Act is challenged as ultra vires the Constitution.

4. Article 16 on which the Act, the Rules and the present action are all based reads:

"16. Equality of opportunity in matters of public employment.

(1) There shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State.

"(2) No citizen shall, on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, descent, place of birth, residence or any of them, be ineligible for, or discriminated against in respect of, any employment or office under the State.

(3) Nothing in this article shall prevent Parliament from making any law prescribing, in regard to a class or classes of employment or appointment to an office under the Government of, or any local or other authority within, a State or Union territory, any requirement as to residence within that State or Union territory prior to such employment or appointment.

(5) * * * * *

5. The question is one of construction of this article, particularly of the first three clauses, to find out the ambit of the law-making power of Parliament. The first clause emphasises that there shall be in India equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters of employment or appointment to any office under the State. The word 'State' here is to be understood in the extended sense given to it by the definition of that word in Article 12. The second clause then specifies a prohibition against discrimination only on the grounds of religion, race, sex, descent, place of birth, residence or any of them. The intention here is to make every office or employment open and available to every citizen, and inter alia to make offices or employment in one part of India open to citizens in all other parts of India. The third clause then makes an exception. This clause was amended by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956. For the original words of the clause 'under any State specified in the First Schedule or any local or other authority within its territory any requirement as to residence within that State', the present words from 'under the Government' to 'Union territory' have been substituted. Nothing turns upon the amendment which seeks to apply the exception in the clause to Union Territory and to remove ambiguity in language.

6. The clause thus enables Parliament to make a law in a special case prescribing any requirement as to residence within a State or Union Territory prior to appointment, as a condition of employment in the State or Union territory. Under Article 35 (a) this power is conferred upon Parliament but is denied to the Legislatures of the States, notwithstanding anything in the Constitution, and under (b) any law in force immediately before the commencement of the Constitution in respect of the matter shall subject to the terms thereof and subject to such adaptations that may be made under Article 372 is to continue in force until altered or repealed or amended by Parliament.

7. The legislative power to create residential qualification for employment is thus exclusively conferred on Parliament. Parliament can make any law which prescribes any requirement as to residence within the State or Union territory prior to employment or appointment to an office in that State or Union Territory. Two questions arise here. Firstly, whether Parliament, while prescribing the requirement, may prescribe the requirement of residence in a particular part of the State; and, secondly, whether Parliament can delegate this function by making a declaration and leaving the details to be filled in by the rule-making power of the Central or State Governments.

8. Mr. S. V. Gupte, for the petitioners, points out that the Constitution is speaking of State and Union Territory. It has already made a declaration that no person shall be disqualified for any office in the territory of India because of his residence in any particular part of India. The exception, therefore, must be viewed narrowly and not carried to excess by interpretation. The article speaks of residence in a State and means only that. If it chose to speak of residence in parts of State such as Districts, Taluqas, cities, towns etc., more appropriate and specific language could have been used such as 'any requirement as to residence within that State or Union territory or part of that State or Union territory.' Having used the word State, the unit State is only meant and not any part thereof. Reference is made to the history of the drafting of the Article and the debates in the Constituent Assembly which bear out this contention.

9. On the other hand, Mr. Setalvad bases his argument on two things. He contends that the power is given to Parliament to make any law and, therefore, Parliament is supreme and can make any law on the subject as the article says. He very ingeniously shifts the emphasis to the words 'any requirement' and contends that the requirement may be as to residence in the State or any particular part of State.

10. The claim for supremacy of Parliament is misconceived. Parliament, in this, as in other matters, is supreme only in so far as the Constitution makes it. Where the Constitution does not concede supremacy, Parliament must act within its appointed functions and not transgress them. What the Constitution says is a matter for construction of the language of the Constitution. Which is the proper construction of the two suggested? By the first clause equality of opportunity in employment or appointment to an office is guaranteed. By the second clause, there can be no discrimination, among other things, on the ground of residence. Realising, however, that sometimes local sentiments may have to be respected or sometimes an inroad from more advanced States into less developed States may have to be prevented, and a residential qualification may, therefore, have to be prescribed, the exception in Clause (3) was made. Even so, that clause spoke of residence within the State. The claim of Mr. Setalvad that Parliament can make a provision regarding residence in any particular part of a State would render the general prohibition lose all its meaning. The words 'any requirement' cannot be read to warrant something which could have been said more specifically. These words bear upon the kind of residence or its duration rather than its location within the State. We accept the argument of Mr. Gupte that the Constitution, as it stands, speaks of a whole State as the venue for residential qualification and it is impossible to think that the Constituent Assembly was thinking of residence in Districts, Taluqas, cities, towns or villages. The fact that this clause is an exception and came as an amendment must dictate that a narrow construction upon the exception should be placed as indeed the debates in the Constituent Assembly also seem to indicate. We accordingly reject the contention of Mr. Setalvad seeking to put a very wide and liberal construction upon the words 'any law' and 'any requirement'. These words are obviously controlled by the words 'residence within the State or Union Territory' which words mean what they say, neither more nor less. It follows, therefore, that Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957, in so far as it relates to Telangana (and we say nothing about the other parts) and Rule 3 of the Rules under it are ultra vires the Constitution.

11. In view of our conclusion on this point it is not necessary to express any opinion whether delegation to the Central and/or State Governments to provide by rules for the further implementing of the law made by Parliament is valid or not.

12. It was argued that the Mulki rules existing in the former Hyderabad State must continue to operate by virtue of Article 35 (b) in this area. This point is not raised by the petitions under consideration and no expression of opinion by us is desirable.

13. For the reasons given above we quash the orders passed and declare Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957 as also Rule 3 of the Rules ultra vires the Constitution. The petitions shall be allowed but there shall be no order about costs.

Petitions allowed.

AIR 1970 SUPREME COURT 426 (V 57 C 94)

(From: Labour Court Delhi)*

J. M. SHELAT, V. BHARGAVA AND
C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

Bennett Coleman and Co. Pvt. Ltd., Appellant v. Punya Priya Das Gupta, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1702 of 1966, D/- 2-4-1969.

(A) Working Journalists (Conditions of Service) and Miscellaneous Provisions Act (1955), Sections 2 (c), (f), (g), 5, 17 — Expression “who is employed” in definition of “working journalist” in Section 2 (f) — It includes employee whose service has come to an end by resignation — Claim for gratuity from such employee is maintainable.

The expression “who is employed” in Section 2 (f) of the Act is not restricted to a newspaper employee who is presently employed in a newspaper establishment but it also relates to an ex-employee whose employment has come to an end as a result of acceptance of his resignation. Therefore such an ex-employee can also resort to the provisions of the Act.

AIR 1949 FC 111 and AIR 1957 SC 104, Rel. on; AIR 1957 SC 264 and AIR 1958 SC 353, Disting. (Para 6)

The claim for gratuity under Section 17 read with Section 5 of the Act would itself be one which accrues after the termination of employment. These provisions therefore, clearly indicate that it is not only a newspaper employee presently employed in a particular newspaper establishment who can maintain an application for gratuity. The scheme of all Acts dealing with industrial questions is to permit an ex-employee to avail of the benefits of their provisions, the only requirement being that the claim in dispute must be one which has arisen or accrued whilst the claimant was in the employment of the person against whom it is made. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the definitions of a “newspaper employee” and “working journalist” being subject to a context to the contrary, the benefit of Sections 5 and 17 is available to an ex-employee though he has ceased to be in the employment of that particular newspaper establishment at the time of his application for gratuity.

(B) Evidence Act (1872), Section 115 — Burden of proving ingredients of Section lies on party claiming estoppel — Representation must be clear.

The burden of proving the ingredients of Section 115 lies on the party claiming estoppel. The representation which is the basis for the rule must be clear and unambiguous and not indefinite, upon which the party relying on it is said to have, in good faith and in belief of it, acted. Under the Section the representation which estops a person making it from acting contrary to it is one on the belief of which the other person acts in a manner he would not have done but for it and on believing it to be true.

(Para 9)

(C) Working Journalists (Conditions of Service) and Miscellaneous Provisions Act (1955), Sections 2 (g) and 5 — Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (rr) — Term “wages” not defined in former Act — Definition of that term in Section 2 (rr) can be applied — Car allowance and benefit of free telephone and newspapers given to employee not only for his personal use but for use connected with his employment — Held, that both the items were relevant in fixation of fair wages as they were allowed to him to directly reduce the expenditure which would otherwise have gone into his family budget — These items could properly be regarded as part of the wages and had to be taken into account into calculation of gratuity payable to him. AIR 1967 SC 948, Rel. on. (Para 11)

SHELAT, J.: This appeal by special leave, is directed against the award of the Labour Court, Delhi in a reference made to it under Section 17 (2) of the Working Journalists (Conditions of Service) and Miscellaneous Provisions Act, 1955 (referred to hereinafter as the Act.)

2. The relevant facts leading to the said reference may first be stated.

3. By its letter dated 16-1-1953 the appellant-company appointed the respondent as a staff correspondent at Gauhati on a basic salary of Rs. 300 and dearness allowance at 40 per cent thereof in addition to a fixed conveyance allowance of Rs. 100 per month. Sometime thereafter the respondent was transferred to the company's branch office at Delhi where he worked as a special correspondent. By 1963 the remuneration payable to him came to Rs. 700 as basic pay, Rs. 497 as dearness allowance, Rs. 200 per month as car allowance in addition to a free telephone and free newspapers. On October 8, 1963, while he was on leave, the respondent tendered his resignation. On October 14, 1963 P. K. Roy, the company's General Manager, informed the respondent that his letter of October 8, 1963 could not be considered as one of resignation as under the company's rules he would have first to report on duty and then to give a notice. On October 21, 1963, however, the company accepted the resignation with effect from that date and thereupon the respondent joined the Indian Express on October 23, 1963. Meanwhile, one V. G. Karnik, on behalf of the company, informed the respondent by his letter dated November 19, 1963 that in the absence of a proper notice by him there could be no termination of employment and that "your reported acceptance of another employment in the circumstances is in contravention of the terms and conditions of service of this company". The respondent had, in the meantime, claimed compensation for leave due to him, to which claim the said letter of Karnik replied that the company's rules did not permit any such compensation where an employee had resigned. On November 21, 1963 the respondent wrote to the said Roy (Ex. W/4) that (1) after he had tendered his resignation there was a discussion between them when the matter of acceptance of his resignation was amicably settled and that it was thereafter that he joined the Indian Express, (2) the letter of Karnik that there was no termination of his employment was not correct, (3) after October 21, 1963 he had gone to the company's office to settle his accounts and collect the dues payable to him as also the letter of acceptance of his resignation but he was told that the accounts were not yet ready and he was not then paid even his salary and dearness allowance due up to October 20, 1963 although "I had asked for these amounts at least", (4) the letter accepting his resignation was held back until he was prepared to sign a document "purporting to waive all my rights to leave salary" which he had first refused to sign, (5) on receiving the said letter of Karnik he had thought necessary to get a written acceptance of resignation, that, as apprehended by him, that letter was handed over to him on that day only after he accepted a cheque for Rs. 2810.47 P. and had given receipt therefor "in full and final settlement of all my claims" and that he wanted to specify in that receipt that full and final settlement on his side did not include compensation for one month's leave due to him but the accountant did not allow him to do so. The statement of account which was given to the respondent on November 21, 1963 and on which he signed the said receipt stated that he had received the said cheque "in full and final settlement of all my claims against the company subject to the bonus for 1963 if declared and payable to me". The statement of account mentioned Rs. 901.34 only as remuneration for 20 days of October 1963 on the basis of his monthly remuneration being Rs. 1,397 comprised of Rs. 700 as basic salary, Rs. 497 as dearness allowance and Rs. 200 as car allowance. The statement of account thus shows that though he was on leave in October 1963, the company included the car allowance while calculating his wages due for these 20 days. But it also shows that no compensation for leave due to him was paid and further that in calculating the gratuity payable to him the monetary value of free telephone and free newspapers and the car allowance were not included as part of his wages. In reply to the respondent's letter of November 21, 1963, the said Roy, by his letter of December 5, 1963, wrote that as the respondent had not taken away the company's letter of acceptance of resignation by the time Karnik addressed the said letter, Karnik was "right on facts" but, in view of the settlement of his affairs and the subsequent settlement of accounts, "it was better to forget the past and part amicably". He also made it clear that the respondent's claim for leave compensation was not admissible under the company's rules.

4. The respondent thereafter applied to the Delhi Administration and the latter as aforesaid, referred his claim to the Labour Court for adjudication. In his statement of claim before the Labour Court, the respondent claimed that the monthly wages payable to him were Rs. 700 basic, Rs. 497 as dearness allowance, Rs. 200 conveyance allowance and Rs. 50 being the estimated value of the benefit of a free telephone and newspapers, aggregating Rs. 1,447 per month. He claimed gratuity computable on the basis of Rs. 1,447 as being his monthly wages, Rs. 1,447 as compensation for the month's leave, in all, Rs. 6,000.34 P. He did not deduct from the said claim the said amount of Rs. 2810.47 P. as he had not encashed the cheque given to him against the receipt dated November 21, 1963. The company in its written statement denied the claim relying on the said receipt and further denied that the car allowance and the monetary value for the free telephone and newspapers could be included in the wages payable to the respondent either as due to him or for calculating gratuity. Before the Labour Court the company did not dispute the value of the benefit of the free telephone and newspapers estimated by the respondent, but it raised the question whether the said value and the car allowance formed part of the respondent's wages and whether the amount of gratuity payable to him could be ascertained on the footing of their being part of his wages. The Labour Court held that there was no evidence that the car allowance was not payable to the respondent while he was on leave as was the case in respect of another working journalist, C. V. Vishwanath, whose claim also the Labour Court was trying along with that of the respondent. The Labour Court found this difference a significant one and held that the car allowance had to be taken as part of the wages. The Labour Court also held that the car allowance and the free telephone and newspapers were an allowance and an amenity respectively falling under the definition of Section 2 (rr) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, both forming the component parts of monthly wages payable to the respondent. As regards the leave, the respondent was undoubtedly entitled to 30 days leave. But the company's plea was, firstly, that its rules did not permit compensation for such leave and secondly, that it was set off against the period of notice which the respondent was required to give. No rules, however were produced to show that they contained any provision disallowing such compensation. As regards the notice period of one month, the Labour Court held that as the resignation dated October 8, 1963 was accepted with effect from October 21, 1963 there was compliance of 13 days only and therefore the management was not liable to pay for the balance of 17 days leave. The Labour Court rejected the company's plea that the receipt given by the respondent in full settlement of all his claims estopped him from making these claims on the ground that as these items were claimable under the Act there could be no estoppel against law. In the result, the Labour Court held that the respondent was entitled to claim car allowance at Rs. 200 per month, Rs. 50 per month for telephone and newspapers and compensation for 13 days leave, that the first two were parts of his wages, that his monthly remuneration was, therefore Rs. 1447 and gratuity equivalent to 5½ months wages would have to be calculated on the basis of Rs. 1447 being his wages per month and directed the company to pay on the aforesaid calculations Rs. 2002 over and above Rs. 2810.47 for which the company had issued the said cheque.

5. The first contention raised by counsel for the company against the award was that the respondent, not being in the company's employment at the time he filed his claim in the Labour Court, was not a working journalist, and therefore, was not entitled to avail himself of the provisions of the Act. Section 2 (c) provides that "unless the context otherwise requires" a newspaper employee "means any working journalist, and includes any other person employed to do any work in, or in relation to, any newspaper establishment". Clause (f) of that section defines a "working journalist" to mean a person whose principal avocation is that of a journalist and "who is employed as such in, or in relation to, any newspaper establishment." Clause (g) provides that all words and expressions used but not defined in this Act and defined in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 shall have the meanings respectively assigned to them in that Act. Counsel strenuously relied on the words "who is employed" as a journalist in, or in relation to, any newspaper establishment in Clause (f) of Section 2, his contention being that it is only a newspaper employee who is presently employed in a newspaper establishment who can resort to the Act and not an ex-employee whose employment has come to an end as a result of acceptance of his resignation. A question, similar to that raised by counsel, also arose in Western India Automobile Association v. Industrial Tribunal, 1949 FCR 321 = (AIR 1949 FC 111). The contention there was that in the light of the definitions of 'industrial dispute' and 'an employee' as they stood in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 before the Amending Act 36 of 1956 was passed, a dispute as to reinstatement of a discharged or dismissed workman could not fall within the scope of an industrial dispute. The contention was rejected. The Court observed that the definition of 'industrial dispute' used the words "employment or non-employment", that whereas one was a positive, the other was a negative act of an employer, that such an act related to an existing employment or to an existing non-employment. After giving certain examples to illustrate the four stages when a dispute could arise, the Court at page 330 (of SCR) = (at pp. 114, 115 of AIR) concluded thus:

"The failure to employ or the refusal to employ are actions on the part of the employer which would be covered by the term "employment or non-employment". Reinstatement is connected with non-employment and is therefore within the words of the definition. It will be a curious result if the view is taken that though a person discharged during a dispute is within the meaning of the word "workman", yet if he raises a dispute about dismissal and reinstatement, it would be outside the words of the definition "in connection with employment or non-employment"."

A similar question was canvassed in Central Provinces Transport Services Ltd. v. Raghunath, 1956 SCR 956 = (AIR 1957 SC 104) in connection with the C. P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, XXIII of 1947. Section 2 (10) of that Act defined an 'employee' in terms identical with those in the Industrial Disputes Act as it stood before the amendment in 1956, i. e., as meaning "any person employed by an employer to do any skilled or unskilled manual or clerical work for contract or hire or reward in any industry and includes an employee discharged on account of any dispute relating to a change—whether before or after the discharge". Section 2 (12) defined an 'industrial dispute' to mean "any dispute or difference connected with an industrial matter arising between employer and employee or between employers or employees". It was not disputed that the question of reinstatement was an industrial dispute but the controversy was as to whether it was an industrial dispute as defined by Section 2 (12) of that Act. The argument was that as the workman concerned was already dismissed and his employment had thereby come to an end, he could not be termed an employee as the intention of the legislature could not be to include in the definition of an employee even those who had ceased to be in service as otherwise there was no need for the further provision in Section 2 (10) which included those who were discharged from service on account of the dispute. The Court dismissed this contention following the decision in Western India Automobile Association, 1949 FCR 321 = (AIR 1949 FC 111) (supra) and held that a dispute between an employer and an employee regarding the latter's dismissal and reinstatement would be an industrial dispute within Sec. 2 (12) of that Act, that the inclusive clause in Section 2 (10) was not an indication that dismissed employees would not fall within the meaning of 'employee' or that the question of their reinstatement would not be an industrial dispute and that that clause was inserted ex abundanti cautela to repel a possible contention that employees discharged under Sections 31 and 32 of the Act would not fall within the meaning of Section 2 (10). Since the definitions of "an employee" in these two Acts were in language similar to the one used in the present Act, these decisions would be authorities for the view that an ex-employee would for the purposes of the present controversy be a working journalist.

6. It was, however, argued that though these two decisions considered a dismissed employee as a workman as defined by the Industrial Disputes Act and the C. P. and Berar Act, there are two decisions of this Court which express contrary views and that, therefore there is a conflict of opinion which should be resolved by a larger bench. The two decisions relied on in this connection are: Dharangadhara Chemical Works Ltd. v. State of Saurashtra, 1957 SCR 152 = (AIR 1957 SC 264) and Workmen v. The Management of Dimakuchi Tea Estate, 1958 SCR 1156 = (AIR 1958 SC 353). In Dharangadhara Chemical Works Ltd., the appellants were lessees holding a licence for manufacturing salt on the demised lands. The salt was manufactured by a class of professional labourers, known as agarias, from rain water that got mixed up with saline matter in the soil. The work was seasonal and commenced after the rains and continued till June when the agarias left for their villages. The demised lands were divided into plots which were allotted to the agarias with a sum of Rs. 400 for each plot to meet the initial expenses. Generally the same plot would be allotted to the same agarias every year, but if the plot was extensive in area it would be allotted to two agarias in partnership. After the manufacture of salt these agarias were paid at the rate of -/5/6 per maund. Accounts would be settled at the end of each season and the agarias would be paid the balance due to them. These agarias worked together with the members of their families and were also free to engage extra labour on their own account, the appellant company having no concern therewith. No hours of work were prescribed, no muster rolls were maintained nor were working hours controlled by the appellant company. There were also no rules as regards leave or holidays and the agarias were free to go out of the factory after making arrangements for the manufacture of salt. On these facts the question was whether the agarias were workmen as defined by S. 2 (s) or independent contractors. Bhagwati J. speaking for the Court, after quoting Section 2 (s) of the Industrial Disputes Act, as it stood prior to its amendment in 1956, said thus:

"The essential condition of a person being a workman within the terms of this definition is that he should be employed to do the work in that industry, that there should be, in other words, an employment of his by the employer and that there should be the relationship between the employer and him as between employer and employee or master and servant. Unless a person is thus employed there can be no question of his being a workman within the definition of the term as contained in the Act."

Relying in particular on the words "unless a person is thus employed", counsel argued that this decision was at variance with what was said in the Central Provinces Transport Services Ltd., 1956 SCR 956 = (AIR 1957 SC 104) (supra) and was, besides, an authority for the proposition that as the definition of a workman then stood, an ex-employee would not be a workman within the meaning of the Act. We are of the view that this decision does not warrant such a contention or that there is any conflict between this decision and the two earlier decisions. The question before the Court was the distinction between an employee and an independent contractor and it was only while describing the characteristics of the two relationships that the learned Judge observed that unless there was a relationship of master and servant and the person concerned "is employed" he could not be regarded as "a workman" as defined by the Act. The Court was not concerned in that case with the question posited in the Central Provinces Transport Services Ltd., 1956 SCR 956 = (AIR 1957 SC 104) (supra) whether an employee who has been discharged or dismissed and who claims a relief such as reinstatement is a workman or not. Not having to consider such a question and being only concerned with the distinction between an employee and an independent contractor, the observations made by the Court to delineate the features of the two relationships cannot be regarded either as laying down that an ex-employee is not a workman or as being in conflict with the two earlier decisions which are specific decisions on the definitions of "a workman" in the Act. In the case of Workmen of Dimakuchi Tea Estate, 1958 SCR 1156 = (AIR 1958 SC 353) (supra), the dispute related to the dismissal of one Dr. K. P. Bannerjee. The management in the written statement pleaded that Dr. Bannerjee was not a workman as defined by Section 2 (s) of the Industrial Dispute Act, that therefore his dismissal could not be an industrial dispute as defined in Section 2 (k) and the Tribunal could have no jurisdiction to decide whether the management were justified or not in dismissing the Doctor. The Tribunal as also the Labour Appellate Tribunal held, presumably because Dr. Bannerjee was not in the words of Section 2(s) a person employed in any industry to do any skilled or unskilled manual or clerical work, that he was not workman within the meaning of Section 2 (s), that the question of his dismissal was not an industrial dispute, and that therefore, his case was beyond the Tribunal's jurisdiction. The workman thereupon applied for special leave under Article 136 and though leave was granted, it was limited to the question whether a dispute in relation to a person who is not a workman was an industrial dispute as defined by S. 2 (k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. In view of the special leave being so limited, the Court proceeded on the assumption that Dr. Bannerjee was not "a workman" under the definition of that word as it then stood. The problem was, whether even so, the dispute regarding his dismissal could still be an industrial dispute, the contention of the workmen being that it would be so as by the use of the expression 'of any person' in the third part of Section 2 (k) a dispute relating to a person, though not a workman, would be an industrial dispute. In answering this problem the Court entered into an elaborate discussion of the several provisions and the scheme of the Act and came to the conclusion that though the clause defining 'industrial dispute' had used the expression "of any person", that expression must be given a restricted meaning, namely, that the dispute must be a real dispute between the parties thereto so as to be capable of settlement or adjudication by one party to the dispute giving necessary relief to the other and the person regarding whom the dispute was raised must be one in whose employment, non-employment, terms of employment or conditions of labour the parties to the dispute had a direct or substantial interest. In the absence of such an interest the dispute could not be said to be a real dispute between the parties. At page 1172 (of SCR) = (at p. 360 of AIR) of the Report, the Court however, has made certain observations which apparently appear to be in variance with the Western India Automobile Association, 1949 FCR 321 = (AIR 1949 FC 111) (supra) and in the Central Provinces Transport Services Ltd., 1956 SCR 956 = (AIR 1957 SC 104) (supra). The observations relied on by counsel are as follows:

"It is clear enough that prior to 1956 when the definition of 'workman' in the Act was further widened to include a person dismissed, discharged or retrenched in connection with, or as a consequence of the dispute or whose dismissal, discharge or retrenchment led to the dispute, a workman who had been discharged earlier and not during the dispute was not a workman within the meaning of the Act. If the expression "any person" in the third part of the definition clause were to be strictly equated with 'any workman', then there could be no industrial dispute, prior to 1956, with regard to a workman who had been discharged earlier than the dispute. That seems to be the reason why the Legislature used the expression 'any person' in the third part of the definition clause so as to put it beyond any doubt that the non-employment of such a dismissed workman was also within the ambit of an industrial dispute."

These observations, however, were made to show that as the definition of the workman stood before the 1956 amendment there was a gap between a workman and an employee, that though all workmen would be employees, the vice versa would not be correct as the supervisory staff would not fall within the definition of workman and that that gap was reduced to a certain extent by the Amendment Act of 1956 and that it would not be always correct to say that the workmen would have a direct and substantial interest in questions relating to all kinds of employees. At p. 1173 (of SCR) = (at p. 360 of AIR) S. K. Das, J. observed:

"The expression 'any person' in the definition clause means, in our opinion, a person in whose employment, or non-employment, or terms of employment, or conditions of labour the workmen as a class have a direct or substantial interest—with whom they have, under the scheme of the Act, a community of interest."

While dealing with the decisions in Western India Automobile Association, 1949 FCR 321 = (AIR 1949 FC 111) (supra) and Central Provinces Transport Services Ltd., 1956 SCR 956 = (AIR 1957 SC 104) (supra), the learned Judge clearly stated at page 1176 (of SCR) = (at p. 362 of AIR) that the problem in those cases was whether an industrial dispute included within its ambit a dispute with regard to reinstatement of certain dismissed workmen, a problem quite different from the one before them and that the illustrations given by Mahajan J. (as he then was) in the Western India Automobile Association, 1949 FCR 321 = (AIR 1949 FC 111) (supra) "to elucidate a different problem", could not be taken as determinative of a problem which was not before the Court in that case. The problem in each of these decisions being different and in view particularly of the fact that the case proceeded on the assumption that Dr. Bannerjee was not "a workman", it becomes difficult to agree that the observations relied on by counsel were meant to be or are in fact in variance with those in the two earlier decisions, or that therefore, there is any conflict of opinion on the question that a workman whose services are terminated would still be a workman as defined by Section 2 (a) before it was amended in 1956.

7. But assuming that there is such a conflict as contended, we do not have to resolve that conflict for the purposes of the problem before us. The definition in Sec. 2 of the present Act commences with the words "In this Act unless the context otherwise requires" and provides that the definitions of the various expressions will be those that are given there. Similar qualifying expressions are also to be found in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, the C. P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947 and certain other statutes dealing with industrial questions. It is, therefore, clear that the definitions of "a newspaper employee" and "a working journalist" have to be construed in the light of and subject to the context requiring otherwise. Section 5 of the Act, which confers the right to gratuity, itself contemplates in Clause (b) of subsection (1) a case of payment of gratuity to the nominee or the family of a working journalist who dies while he is in the service of a newspaper establishment. Section 17 (1) provides that where any amount is due under the Act to a newspaper employee from an employer, such an employee himself or a person authorised by him or, in case of his death, any member of his family can apply to the State Government or other specified authority for the recovery thereof. Similar provisions are also to be found in Section 33C (1) of the Industrial Disputes Act. Claims under that section include those for compensation in cases of retrenchment, transfer of an undertaking and closure under Ch. VA of that Act, all of which would necessarily be claims arising after termination of service and the claimant would obviously be one in all those cases who would not be presently employed in the establishment of the employer against whom such claims are made. Likewise the claim for gratuity under Section 17 read with Section 5 of the Act would itself be one which accrues after the termination of employment. These provisions, therefore, clearly indicate that it is not only a newspaper employee presently employed in a particular newspaper establishment who can maintain an application for gratuity. The scheme of all these acts dealing with industrial questions is to permit an ex-employee to avail of the benefits of their provisions, the only requirement being that the claim in dispute must be one which has arisen or accrued whilst the claimant was in the employment of the person against whom it is made. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the definitions of a "newspaper employee" and "working journalist" being subject to a context to the contrary, the benefit of Sections 5 and 17 is available to an ex-employee though he has ceased to be in the employment of that particular newspaper establishment at the time of his application for gratuity. The contention that the respondent was not entitled to maintain his application as he was not in the service of the appellant company on the date of his claim before the Labour Court cannot be sustained.

8. The next contention was that the respondent having signed the said receipt in full settlement of all his claims and having thereby induced the company to accept his resignation without insisting on a full month's notice was estopped from making claims in respect of his leave for one month, the car allowance and the free telephone and newspapers and for including them as part of his wages for calculating gratuity. Certain decisions of this Court seem, however, to have expressed doubt whether technical pleas such as acquiescence, estoppel and waiver suitably apply to industrial adjudication. But assuming that the rule of estoppel, as incorporated in Sec. 115 of the Evidence Act, were to apply, the foundation of that rule is that it is inequitable and unjust to a person, that if another person by a representation induces him to act as he would not have otherwise acted, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny the effect of his former statement to the loss and injury of the person who has acted on it. [See Sarat v. Gopal, (1892) 19 Ind App 203 (PC)]. The rule is one of evidence only and does not create any substantive right or confer any cause of action on the other. It comes into operation if a statement as to the existence of a fact has been made with the intention that the other person to whom it is made should believe and act on it and that that another person does in fact act upon the faith of it. The question whether the respondent is estopped from making his said claims may be looked at firstly, as regards his leave period, and secondly, as regards his claims for car allowance and free telephone and newspapers. As to the claim for leave due to him, the record of the case makes it clear that he had been making that claim from the very outset. Though the receipt given by him mentions that it was given in full settlement of all his claims, the respondent on that very day in his letter Ex. W/4 to the said Roy protested that though he wanted to clarify in that receipt that it was in full settlement of his salary and dearness allowance for the 20 days of October 1963 and gratuity only, he was not allowed to make that reservation although he had already preferred his claim for compensation for one month's leave due to him. We must note that though this letter went in as Ex. W/4 before the Labour Court the company led no evidence to controvert the statements made therein. The reason for not doing so seems to be that the respondent had made the claim before one Mitra, the accountant in the Delhi Office, and that claim was a matter of dispute. This position emerges from Roy's reply dated December 5, 1963 to the respondent's said letter of November 21, 1963 wherein the stand taken by Roy was that the respondent was not entitled to compensation for leave, not because he had given up that claim when he had signed the said receipt, but because the company's rules did not permit such compensation. It is, therefore manifest that the respondent did not make any representation when he signed the said receipt that he had waived his claim for leave period or that the company did any act on any such representation which otherwise it would not have done. In spite of the letter Ex. W/4, the company failed to produce before the Labour Court its rules under which it was said that such a claim was not permissible. In its special leave petition in this Court, the company, however, cited a rule but we could take no notice of it as no application for producing the rules or proving them as additional evidence was made and it was hardly fair or just to take notice of it at such a late stage without an opportunity to the respondent to verify or controvert it. Roy's reply also indicates that the company's case, that the respondent's claim for compensation for leave was at the time of preparing his statement of account adjusted or set off against its claim for the notice period, could not be correct. For, if that was so, he would have straightway said so in his said reply, or in any event the company would have led evidence of its accountant to that effect before the Labour Court. The rule of estoppel thus could not be invoked against the claim for compensation for leave period.

9. We next examine the question whether the respondent was precluded from making the rest of his claim. The burden of proving the ingredients of S. 115 of the Evidence Act lies on the party claiming estoppel. The representation which is the basis for the rule must be clear and unambiguous and not indefinite, upon which the party relying on it is said to have, in good faith and in belief of it, acted. The statement of account prepared at the time when the respondent gave the said receipt appears to indicate that the benefit of the free telephone and newspapers and the car allowance were not taken into account and gratuity due to the respondent was calculated on the amount of pay being comprised of basic wages and dearness allowance only. But the inference that the respondent had given up his aforesaid claims when he passed the said receipt appears to be rebutted by the following facts: (1) though the resignation was accepted on October 21, 1963 the letter of acceptance was not communicated to the respondent till November 21, 1963 when the company obtained from the respondent the said receipt, (2) in the meantime, the respondent received Karnik's said letter of November 19, 1963 to the effect that there was no termination of the respondent's service in the absence of a month's notice, and on receipt of which, according to the respondent, he considered it necessary to secure the letter of acceptance of his resignation from the company. If the termination of his service depended on the giving of a month's notice, how was it that the company's Manager, D'Souza, had accepted the resignation and signed the letter of acceptance Ex. W/1 on October 21, 1963; (3) the company was aware, as Karnik's said letter October 21, 1963 (shows that?) the respondent had joined the Indian Express on 23-10-1963. The respondent's case was that it was after he was told that his resignation had been accepted that he joined that Indian Express. But when he received Karnik's said letter he decided that he could not rest content without jeopardising his interests on the mere oral intimation of acceptance of his resignation, and therefore, went to the company's office to secure a written acceptance when he was told that unless he passed a receipt in full settlement of his claims, the letter of acceptance would not be issued to him. There appear to be two good reasons why the respondent's case cannot be easily discarded. Firstly, since his resignation was accepted with effect from October 21, 1963 and even a letter to that effect was made ready and signed by the company's manager, it would ordinarily have been communicated to him. If the company had any claim against him or if it wanted that his account should be settled before the letter was issued to him, surely an intimation to that effect would have been given to him. Secondly, though the respondent had put on record his version as to how the said receipt was obtained from him as early as November 21, 1963, i.e., on the very day that the said receipt was secured from him, no refutation of any of the allegations in that letter is to be found in Roy's reply to it dated December 5, 1963 save that the respondent's claim for compensation for leave period was not admissible under the company's rules. It is significant that there was no denial in that reply that the receipt was obtained from the respondent in the manner alleged in the said letter dated November 21, 1963. Even at the later stages the company did not examine its accountant before the Labour Court to refute the said allegations. The statements of the respondent in that letter having thus remained unchallenged, the Labour Court could not reject them. In these circumstances, it becomes doubtful whether he could be said to have been estopped from making the said claims on the ground only of the said receipt, if that receipt was obtained, as alleged by him, under the stress of circumstances. In this connection the fact that he kept the said cheque uncashed is not totally without relevance. Under Section 115 of the Evidence Act the representation which estops a person making it from acting contrary to it is one on the belief of which the other person acts in a manner he would not have done but for it and on believing it to be true. Such a conclusion is difficult in face of the uncontradicted statements in the letter Ex. W/4 that the management would not give him the letter of acceptance of his resignation unless he signed the said receipt in full settlement of all his claims. The plea of estoppel made on behalf of the company, therefore, cannot be accepted.

10. The third contention was that the monetary value of the free telephone and newspapers and the car allowance could not be included as part of his wages for calculating gratuity. The value in terms of money of the benefit of free telephone and free newspapers, as estimated by the respondent, was not in question. But the argument was that this benefit as also the car allowance were given to the respondent by way of reimbursement for expenses which as a special correspondent he would otherwise have had to incur for the proper and efficient discharge of his duties. The two items, therefore, were neither an allowance nor an amenity. The facts, however, are that the telephone was installed by the company at the respondent's residence and stood in his and not in the company's name. All payments connected with it, including charges for calls, were made by the company. There was no restriction that he could use the telephone only for his official work or that he could not use it for personal calls. He was not called upon to keep an account of personal calls, the payment of which he would be called upon to make. Nor was any estimated amount for such personal calls either demanded or deducted from his wages. The newspapers were subscribed by the respondent but the bills for them were paid by the company. It was not the case of the company that the bills for them would be paid by it provided they were made use of by the respondent for his work as a special correspondent. As regards the car allowance, the car belonged to and stood registered in his name but the company paid him a monthly allowance of Rs. 200/-. There was no evidence whatsoever, not even a suggestion in the correspondence, that that amount was estimated as being equivalent to the expenses of conveyance which the respondent would incur in the discharge of his duties. No such indication is to be found in the company's evidence, nor was such a suggestion put to the respondent when he examined himself before the Labour Court.

11. Since 'wages' has not been defined in the Act, its meaning is the same as assigned to it in the Industrial Disputes Act. Under Section 2 (rr) of that Act, 'wages' means all remuneration capable of being expressed in terms of money, which would, if the terms of employment, expressed or implied, were fulfilled, be payable to a workman in respect of his employment or of work done in such employment, and includes (i) such allowances (including dearness allowance) as the workman is for the time being entitled to; (ii) the value of any house accommodation, or of supply of light, water, medical attendance or other amenity or of any service or of any concessional supply of foodgrains or other articles; (iii) any travelling concession; but does not include any bonus and other items mentioned therein. Mr. Ramamurthi's argument was that the car allowance as also the benefit of the free telephone and newspapers would fall under the first part of the definition as they are remuneration capable of being expressed in terms of money. The argument, however, cannot be accepted as neither of them can be said to be remuneration payable in respect of employment or work done in such employment. Neither the car allowance nor the benefit of the free telephone was given to the respondent in respect of his employment or work done in such employment as the use of the car and the telephone was not restricted to the employment, or the work of the respondent as the special correspondent. There was no evidence that the car allowance was fixed after taking into consideration the expenses which he would have ordinarily to incur in connection with his employment or the work done in such employment. Even if the respondent had not used the car conveying himself to the office or to other places connected with his employment and had used other alternative or cheaper means of conveyances or none at all, the car allowance would still have had to be paid. So too, the bills for the telephone and the newspapers whether he used them or not in connection with his employment or his work as the special correspondent. Therefore, we have to turn to the latter part of the definition and see if the two items properly fall thereunder. So far as the car allowance is concerned, there was, as aforesaid, nothing to suggest that it was paid to reimburse him of the expenses of conveyance which he would have to incur for discharging his duties as the special correspondent, or that it was anything else than an allowance within the meaning of Section 2 (rr) of that Act. It would, therefore, fall under the inclusive part (i) of the definition. Likewise, the benefit of the telephone and newspapers was allowed to the respondent not merely for the use thereof in connection with his employment or duties connected with it. Both the car allowance and the benefit of the free telephone and newspapers appear to have been allowed to him to directly reduce the expenditure which would otherwise have gone into his family budget and were therefore items relevant in fixation of fair wages. (See Hindustan Antibiotics Ltd. v. Workmen, (1967) 1 SCR 652 at pp. 674, 675=(AIR 1967 SC 948 at pp. 961, 962)). That being the position, the two items could on the facts and circumstances of the present case be properly regarded as part of the respondent's wages and had to be taken into calculation of the gratuity payable to him.

12. These were the only points raised before us and since in our judgment none of them can be upheld the appeal must fail and has to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

M/s. Sobhag Mal Jain and V. S. Dave, Advocates, for Appellant; Mr. K. B.
Mehta, Advocate, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by

HEGDE, J.:— The appellant's conviction by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Jodhpur under Section 314 read with Section 109, Indian Penal Code, having been affirmed by the High Court of Rajasthan, he appeals to this Court after obtaining special leave. The charge on the basis of which he was tried was that some days prior to May 1, 1963, he abetted one Mst. Radha at Jodhpur to cause the miscarriage of one Miss Atoshi Dass alias Amola who as a result of administration of tablets and introduction of "laminaria dento" by the said Mst. Radha, died on May 1, 1963. The case for the prosecution is that in about the year 1962-63, the appellant was the President of Oramotthan Pratishthan at Jalore. Miss Atoshi Dass was a teacher working in Indra Bal Mandir, Tikhi, an institution under the management of appellant. She was young and unmarried. Illicit relationship developed between the aforementioned Atoshi Dass and the appellant as a result of which Miss Atoshi Dass became pregnant. With a view to cause abortion of the child in her womb, the appellant took Miss Dass to Jodhpur and there attempted to cause the miscarriage mentioned above through one Mst. Radha. The attempt was not successful. The insertion of "laminaria dento" in the private parts of Miss Dass caused septicaem as a result of which she died in the hospital on May 1, 1963.

2. The appellant's case is that he had no illicit relation with Miss Atoshi Dass nor did he abet the alleged abortion. He denies that Miss Atoshi Dass died as a result of any attempt at abortion.

3. As seen earlier the appellant was charged and tried for the offence of abetting Mst. Radha to cause the miscarriage in question but he was ultimately convicted of the offence of abetting Miss Dass in the commission of the said offence.

4. It may be stated at this stage that one Mst. Radha was tried along with the appellant in the trial Court but she was acquitted on the ground that there was no evidence to show that she had anything to do with the abortion complained of.

5. Despite the contentions of the appellant to the contrary, we think there is satisfactory evidence to show that the death of Miss Dass was due to septicaemia resulting from the introduction of "laminaria dento" into her private parts. On this point we have the unimpeachable evidence of Dr. A. J. Abraham, P. W. 4.

6. There is also satisfactory evidence to show that the appellant was in terms of illicit intimacy with Miss Dass. It is true that the principal witness on this point is Miss Chhayadass, P. W. 6, the sister of the deceased, a witness who has given false evidence in several respects. But as regards the illicit relationship between the appellant and Miss Atoshi Dass, her evidence receives material corroboration from the evidence of P. W. 7, M. B. Sen and P. W. 5, Misri Lal. Further it also accords with the probabilities of the case. It is not necessary to go into that question at length as we have come to the conclusion that the appellant is entitled to an acquittal for the reasons to be stated presently.

7. While we are of opinion that there was illicit intimacy between the appellant and the deceased, we are unable to accept the assertion of Miss Chhayadass that the appellant was her only paramour. Exh. D. 3 conclusively proves that the deceased had illicit relationship with one Sood at Delhi. In the committal Court Miss Chhayadass admitted that the address on Exh. D-3 is in the handwriting of the deceased. In that Court she was positive about it; but in the trial Court she went back on that admission. In many other respects also she had deviated from the evidence given by her in the committal Court. Hence we are unable to accept her statement in the trial Court that the address found on Exh. D-3, an inland letter is not in the handwriting of the deceased. Exh. D-3, appears to be a self-addressed letter sent by the deceased to one Sood. The fact that the deceased had more than one paramour is not a material circumstance though it may indicate that the appellant could not have had any compelling motive to abet the abortion complained of. The fact that the appellant was in terms of illicit intimacy with the deceased, an unmarried girl and that later became pregnant through him is without more, not sufficient to connect the appellant with the crime.

8. From the evidence of Misrilal and Sengupta, it is clear that the appellant and the deceased had gone together to Jodhpur on April 24, 1963. But from the evidence of Sengupta, it is also clear that the deceased had some work to attend to at Jodhpur. It is also clear from the evidence of Miss Chhayadass that the deceased and the appellant were going together to Jodhpur and other places off and on. It may be noted that while returning from Jodhpur to his native place, the appellant left the deceased with Mr. and Mrs. Sengupta. Hence the circumstance that the appellant and the deceased went together to Jodhpur on April 24, 1963, cannot be held to be an incriminating circumstance.

9. This leaves us with the evidence relating to the actual abetment. On this aspect of the case the only evidence brought to our notice is the evidence of Miss Chhayadass and the letter Ex. P. 4. Miss Chhayadass reposed in the trial Court that when the pregnancy of the deceased became noticeable, the appellant told the deceased in the presence of that witness that he would get the child aborted through Mst. Radha. As mentioned earlier Miss Chhayadass is a highly unreliable witness. She had admitted in the committal Court that she had been tutored by the police to give evidence. In fact she pointed out a police officer who was in the Court as the person who had tutored her. In the trial Court she denied that fact. There is no gainsaying the fact that she was completely under the thumb of the police. She deviated from most of the important admissions made by her during her cross-examination in the committal Court. Coming to the question of the abetment referred to earlier, this is what she stated during her cross examination in the committing Court:

"My sister did not tell Madan Raj about her illness (arising from her pregnancy) in my presence. On being enquired by me about my sister at Jalore I was informed that my sister had gone to Mst. Radha Nayan in the hospital for treatment. No talks about it were held before me prior to my talk at Jalore (talks between Madanraj and my sister about treatment)."

10. According to the admissions made by her in the committal Court she came to know for the first time about her sister's intention to cause miscarriage only after her death. No reliance can be placed on the evidence of such a witness.

11. Now coming to Exh. P. 4, this is a letter said to have been written by the deceased sometime before her death intending to send the same to the appellant which in fact was not sent. It was found in her personal belongings after her death. There was some controversy before the Courts below whether the same is admissible under Section 32 (1) of the Evidence Act and whether it could be brought within the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor, AIR 1939 PC 47. We have not thought it necessary to go into that question as in our opinion the contents of the said letter do not in any manner support the prosecution case that the appellant instigated the deceased to cause miscarriage. The letter in question reads thus:

"Shanti Bhawan
28-4-63.

I went with your letter to the father. Since I could not get money from him, I dropped you a letter. I went to Mst. Radha and asked her to give me medicine. I further said that the money would be received. She gave me a tablet and told me that injection would be given on receipt of full payment. This tablet is causing unbearable pain and bleeding but the main trouble will not be removed without the injection. How can I explain but the pain is intolerable. I have left Sen's residence. He and particularly neighbouring doctor would have come to know every thing by my condition, which is too serious. (Meri is halat se unaki vishesker pas me Daktarji ko sub kuch pata chal jati powon tak ulati ho jati). Firstly I intended to proceed to Jalore but on reaching the Station I could not dare to proceed. I feel that you are experiencing uneasiness and trouble for me. I am causing monetary as well as mental worries to you. I have been feeling this for a considerable longer period. Please do not be annoyed.

It has become very difficult for me to stay alone for the last several days.

Had you accepted me as your better half you would have not left me alone in my such serious condition. You cannot know what sort of trouble I am experiencing. Had you been with me I would not have felt it so much. Please do not be annoyed. Perhaps no one has given you so much trouble.

I will write all these facts to my mother. I will also write about our marriage.
28-4-63.

Today is Sunday. I cannot book a trunk call to you in the Court. Today I tried on the Phone number of Hazarimal but it was engaged, and later on it was cancelled. My Pranam.

Yours Ritu.

Today I have taken injection and have come from Shanti Bhawan".

12. No portion of that letter indicates that the appellant was in any manner responsible for the steps taken by the deceased for causing miscarriage. No other evidence has been relied upon either by the trial Court or by the High Court in support of the finding that the appellant was guilty of the offence of abetting the deceased to cause miscarriage.

13. For the reasons mentioned above we are of the opinion that there is no legal basis for the conviction of the appellant.

14. The learned Counsel for the appellant challenged the conviction of the appellant on yet another ground. As mentioned earlier he was charged and tried for the offence of abetting Mst. Radha to cause abortion of the child in the womb of the deceased but curiously enough he was convicted for abetting the deceased to cause miscarriage. Abetment as defined in Section 107 of the Indian Penal Code, can be by instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid. If the abetment was that of Mst. Radha, it could have been only by instigation or conspiracy but if it was an abetment of the deceased, it could either be by instigation or by conspiracy or by intentional aid. Throughout the trial the accused was asked to defend himself against the charge on which he was tried. At no stage he was notified that he would be tried for the offence of having abetted the deceased to cause miscarriage. It is now well settled that the absence of charge or an error or omission in it is not fatal to a trial unless prejudice is caused — see Willie (William) Slaney v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, 1955-2 SCR 1140 = (AIR 1956 SC 116). Therefore the essential question is whether there is any reasonable likelihood of the accused having been prejudiced in view of the charge framed against him. From what has been stated above one can reasonably come to the conclusion that the accused was likely to have been prejudiced by the charge on the basis of which he was tried. From the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, it is seen that the principal attempt made on behalf of the appellant was to show that he had nothing to do with the co-accused, Mst. Radha. He could not have been aware of the fact that he would be required to show that he did not in any manner abet the deceased to cause miscarriage. The facts of this case come within the rule laid down by this Court in Faguna Kanta Nath v. State of Assam, (1959) 2 Supp. SCR 1= (AIR 1959 SC 673). The case of Gallu Sah v. State of Bihar, 1959 SCR 861= (AIR 1958 SC 813) relied on by the High Court is distinguishable. Therein Gallu Sah was a member of an unlawful assembly. He was said to have abetted Budi to set fire to a house. One of the members of the unlawful assembly had set fire to the house in question though it was not proved that Budi had set fire to the house. Under those circumstances this Court held that the offence with which Gallu Sah was charged was made out. As observed by Calcutta High Court in Umadasi Dasi v. Emperor, ILR 52 Cal 112= (AIR 1924 Cal 1031) that as a general rule, a charge of abetment fails when the substantive offence is not established against the principal but there may be exceptions. Gallu's case was one such exception.

15. For the reasons mentioned above we allow the appeal and acquit the appellant. He is on bail. His bail bonds stand cancelled.

Appeal allowed.

Kalanka Devi Sansthan, Appellant v. The Maharashtra Revenue, Tribunal Nagpur and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 862 of 1966, D/- 19-8-1969.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Sections 2 (12) Explanation I and 2 (22) — Hindu idol is juristic person — It cannot cultivate personally within Explanation I to Section 2 (12).

When property is given absolutely for the worship of an idol it vests in the idol

itself as a juristic person. However, the idol cannot take advantage of the provisions contained in the Act by which possession can be claimed from the tenant on the ground that it is required for personal cultivation. The position of idol is not the same as minor and the idol does not fall within Explanation I to S. 2(12). (Para 4)

Physical or mental disability as defined by Section 2 (22) lays emphasis on the words "personal labour or supervision". The dominating idea of anything done personally or person is that the thing must be done by the person himself and not by or through some one else. It is true that the idol is capable of holding property in the same way as a natural person. It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. But the requirement of personal supervision under the third category of personal cultivation provided for in the definition under S. 2 (12) does not admit of an intermediary between the landlord and the labourer, who can act as agent of the landlord for supervising the operations of the agricultural worker. If that is not possible in the case of one landlord, it cannot be said that it is possible in the case of another landlord merely because the landlord in the latter case is a juristic person. The cultivation of the land concerned must be by natural persons and not by legal persons. The provisions of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act (C. P. Act 24 of 1951) which is already repealed, are of no help in deciding whether idol can cultivate personally within meaning of Explanation I to Section 2 (12) of the Bombay Act. L. P. A. No. 40 of 1965, D/- 8-4-1965 (Bom at Nag.), Affirmed; 1964 Mah LJ 589, Approved; AIR 1968 SC 1364, Disting.

(Paras 4, 5)

(B) Hindu Law — Religious endowments — Manager or shebait of idol and trustee — Distinction between.

The distinction between a manager or a shebait of an idol and a trustee where a trust has been created is well recognised. The properties of the trust in law vest in the trustee whereas in the case of an idol or a Sansthan they do not vest in the manager or the She-bait. It is the deity or the Sansthan which owns and holds the properties. It is only the possession and the management which vest in the manager. (Para 5)

(C) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Section 2 (12) — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Amendment Act (13 of 1956), Pre. — Both Acts are protected by Article 31A — Their validity cannot be challenged on ground of violation of Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) — Constitution of India, Articles 31A, 14, 19 (1) (f). Dr. W. S. Barlingay, Senior Advocate (M/s. R. Mahalingier and Ganpat Rai, Advocates with him), for Appellant; M/s. M. S. K. Sastri and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 5; Mr. M. Veerappa, Advocate, for Respondent No. 4.

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the High Court of Bombay dismissing a petition under Article 227 of the Constitution which had been filed by appellant Sansthan.

2. The appellant is a private religious Trust, which is managed by Laxman Anant Mulay who is described as a Wahiwatdar (Manager). The main source of income for performing the several acts including the daily worship of the family deity (Shri Kalanka Devi) is stated to be derived from endowed agricultural land. Respondent No. 4 is the tenant in field survey No. 94 with an area of 30 acres 8 gunthas in Mouza Malrajura, district Akola. On January 30, 1961 a notice was served on behalf of the appellant on respondent No. 4 under the provisions of Section 38 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereinafter called the Act. It was mentioned in the notice that an earlier notice under Section 9 (i) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act had been served in the year 1955 that the Sansthan required the aforesaid field for personal cultivation and, therefore, he should give up possession. Those proceedings were pending but a notice under Section 38 of the Act was given to terminate the tenancy without prejudice to the previous proceedings. As the notice was not complied with an application was filed on behalf of the appellant under Section 36 of the Act for possession which was opposed by respondent No. 4. The Naib Tehsildar rejected the application on the ground that the Sansthan was not a land-holder who could cultivate the land personally. His order was confirmed by the Sub-Divisional Officer and by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal to whom appeals were taken. The appellant ultimately filed a petition under Article 227 of the Constitution before the High Court which, as stated before, was dismissed.

3. The only point which has to be determined is whether the Sansthan could take advantage of the provisions contained in the Act by which possession can be claimed from the tenant on the ground that it is required for personal cultivation. Section 2 (12) of the Act defines the words "to cultivate personally" in the following manner:

S. 2 (12) "to cultivate personally" means to cultivate on one's own account—

- (i) by one's own labour, or
- (ii) by the labour of any member of one's family, or
- (iii) under the personal supervision of one-self or of any member of one's family by hired labour or by servants on wages payable in cash or kind but not in crop share;

Explanation I.—A widow or a minor or a person who is subject to any physical or mental disability, or a serving member of the armed forces shall be deemed to cultivate the land personally if it is cultivated by her or his servants or by hired labourer;

Explanation II.....
According to Section 2 (22) the "physical or mental disability" means physical or mental disability by reason of which the person subject to such disability is incapable of cultivating land by personal labour or supervision. The word "tenant" is defined by Section 2 (32) as meaning a person who holds land on lease including a person who is deemed to be a tenant under Sections 6, 7 or 8 and a person who is a protected lessee or occupancy tenant. It is provided that the word "landlord" shall be construed accordingly. Section 38 deals with termination of tenancy by landlord for cultivating land personally. It says that after giving notice to a tenant in writing at any time on or before February 15, 1961 and making an application for possession under Section 36 on or before March 31, 1961 the landlord may terminate the tenancy other than an occupancy tenancy if the landlord bona fide requires the land for cultivating it personally. Sub-section (3) gives the conditions subject to which the tenancy can be terminated.

4. Now it is well known that when property is given absolutely for the worship of an idol it vests in the idol itself as a juristic person. As pointed out in Mukherjea's Hindu Law of Religious and Charitable Trust at Pages 142-143 this view is in accordance with the Hindu ideas and has been uniformly accepted in a long series of judicial decisions. The idol is capable of holding property in the same way as a natural person. "It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir". The question, however, is whether the idol is capable of cultivating the land personally. The argument raised on behalf of the appellant is that under Explanation I in Section 2 (12) of the Act a person who is subject to any physical or mental disability shall be deemed to cultivate the land personally if it is cultivated by the servants or by hired labourer. In other words an idol or a Sansthan that would fall within the meaning of the word "person" can well be regarded to be subject to a physical or mental disability and land can be cultivated on its behalf by servants or hired labourers. It is urged that in Explanation (I) the idol would be in the same position as a minor and it can certainly cultivate the land personally within the meaning of Section 2 (12). It is difficult to accept the suggestion that the case of the appellant would fall within Explanation (I) in Section 2 (12). Physical or mental disability as defined by S. 2 (22) lays emphasis on the words "personal labour or supervision". As has been rightly pointed out in Shri Kesheoraj Deo Sansthan, Karanja v. Bapurao Deoba, 1964 Mah LJ 589 in which an identically similar point came up for consideration, the dominating idea of anything done personally or in person is that the thing must be done by the person himself and not by or through someone else. In our opinion the following passage in that judgment at p. 593 explains the whole position correctly:

"It should thus appear that the legislative intent clearly is that in order to claim a cultivation as a personal cultivation there must be established a direct nexus between the person who makes such a claim, and the agricultural processes or activities carried on the land. In other words, all the agricultural operations, though allowed to be done through hired labour or workers must be under the direct supervision, control, or management of the landlord. It is in that sense that the words "personal supervision" must be understood. In other words, the requirement of personal supervision under the third category of personal cultivation provided for in the definition does not admit of an intermediary between the landlord and the labourer, who can act as agent of the landlord for supervising the operations of the agricultural worker. If that is not possible in the case of one landlord, we do not see how it is possible in the case of another landlord merely because the landlord in the latter case is a juristic person".

In other words the intention is that the cultivation of the land concerned must be by natural persons and not by legal persons.

5. It has next been contended that in the provisions of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act 1951 public trusts of charitable nature were included among those who could claim possession from a tenant on the ground of personal cultivation. It is not possible to see how the provisions of a repealed statute which was no longer in force, after the enactment of the Act, could be of any avail to the appellant. The decision in Ishwardas v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, (1968) 3 SCR 441 = (AIR 1968 SC 1364) has also been referred to by the counsel for the appellant. In that case it was said that under Section 2 (18) of the Bombay Public Trusts Act a trustee has been defined as meaning a person in whom either alone or in association with other persons the trust property is vested and includes a manager. In view of this definition the properties of the trusts vest in the managing trustee and he is the landlord under Clause 32 of Sec. 2 of the Act. As he is the landlord, he can ask for a surrender from the tenant of the lands of the trust "to cultivate personally." In the present case it is common ground that the Sansthan is a private trust and is not governed by the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. The manager or the Wahiwardar of the Sansthan cannot, therefore, fall within the definition of the word "trustee" as given in Section 2 (18) of that Act. It may be mentioned that in Ishwardas case, (1968) 3 SCR 441 = (AIR 1968 SC 1364) the court refrained from expressing any opinion on the question whether a manager or a Shebait of the properties of an idol or the manager of the Sansthan can or cannot apply for surrender by a tenant of lands for personal cultivation. The distinction between a manager or a Shebait of an idol and a trustee where a trust has been created is well recognised. The properties of the trust in law vest in the trustee whereas in the case of an idol or a Sansthan they do not vest in the manager or the Shebait. It is the deity or the Sansthan which owns and holds the properties. It is only the possession and the management which vest in the manager.

6. It has lastly been contended that the relevant provisions of the Act which have the effect of debaring the appellant from claiming possession for personal cultivation violate the provisions of Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. It is urged that discrimination is writ large between animate and juristic persons who fall within the definition of the word "person". Such a contention, however, cannot be entertained in view of Article 31A of the Constitution. The Act had received the assent of the President and is rendered immune from attack or challenge on the ground of violation of Articles 14 or 19 of the Constitution. In Mahadeo Paikaji Kolhe Yavatmal v. State of Bombay, (1962) 1 SCR 733 = (AIR 1961 SC 1517) the constitutional validity of the Act itself was canvassed but the challenge failed. Similarly the validity of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Amendment Act, 1956 as applied to Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area was upheld in Sri Ram Ram Narain Medhi v. The State of Bombay, (1959) (Supp) 1 SCR 489 = (AIR 1959 SC 459).

7. The appeal consequently fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1970 SUPREME COURT 442 (V 57 C 97)

(From: Madhya Pradesh)*

V. BHARGAVA AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

Raghuvir Singh, Appellant v. Raghubir Singh Kushwaha, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1597 (NCE) of 1968, D/- 7-10-1969.

(A) Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 116A — Appeal to Supreme Court — No re-appreciation by Supreme Court unless there are special reasons.

In the matter of appreciating oral evidence, the appellate Courts attach great value to the opinion formed by the trial judges. That would be more so in the case of an election petition containing charges of corrupt practices, firstly because those charges are quasi criminal in character and secondly they are tried by a judge of the High Court. The Supreme Court does not reappreciate oral evidence unless there are special reasons for doing so. (Para 11)

(B) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sections 100 (1) (b) and 123 (4) — Publication of false statements of facts by election agent before his appointment as such — Consent of returned candidate not established — Publication held did not invalidate election.

The election of respondent, a returned candidate was challenged on the ground that his election agent, who was also the editor of a newspaper, had published false statements of facts relating the personal character and conduct of the petitioner but there was no allegation in the petition that the statements were published either with the consent or knowledge of the respondent or at his instance. The petitioner attempted to establish consent by showing that the relevant issues of the newspaper were distributed by the respondent but failed to establish satisfactorily that the respondent either personally or through others got distributed the issues. It was found that the statements were published by the election agent earlier to the date when he was appointed as such. Held, that publication of false statement in question did not invalidate the election. Election Petition No. 37 of 1967 (M. P. — Indore Bench) Affirmed.

(Paras 8, 9, 10, 15)

HEGDE, J.: This is an appeal under Section 116A of the Representation of the People Act 1951 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act). It arises from election petition No. 37 of 1967 in the High Court of Madhya Pradesh (Indore Bench). That was an application filed by the appellant under Section 81 of the Act challenging the validity of the election of the respondent from the Bhind Assembly Constituency of Madhya Pradesh on various grounds. The election in question took place in February, 1967. In that election as many as five candidates contested, amongst whom the respondent, the nominee of the S. S. P. was one. His main rival was the congress candidate Shri Narsingh Rao Dixit. The polling took place on February 17, 1967 and the votes were counted on February 21, 1967. The respondent secured 20928 votes and his nearest rival Shri Narsingh Rao Dixit secured 14873 votes. The other candidates secured much less and it is not necessary to refer to them in the course of this judgment. The respondent was declared duly elected.

2. The petitioner is one of the electors in the Bhind Assembly constituency. Obviously he is a supporter of Shri Dixit. From the facts and circumstances of the case it is clear he is fighting the battle of Shri Dixit.

3. The election of the respondent was challenged in the High Court on numerous grounds. On the pleadings, several issues were raised. As many as 35 witnesses were examined on behalf of the appellant, and 49 on behalf of the respondent. The learned trial judge came to the conclusion that none of the grounds alleged in the petition was established. He accordingly dismissed the election petition with costs. Hence this appeal.

4. Though various allegations of corrupt practices were made against the respondent, most of them were not pressed at the hearing of the appeal. Only three out of the many grounds taken in the petition were pressed for our acceptance. Hence we shall confine our attention only to those grounds.

5. It was alleged in the election petition that Shri Triyogi Narain Sharma, the election agent of the respondent who was also the Editor of the newspaper 'Udgar' had published false statements of facts, knowing them to be false regarding the personal character of Shri Dixit with a view to prejudice his chances in the election, in the 'Udgar' issues dated February 1, 1967, February 8, 1967 and February 15, 1967. It was further alleged that those issues were freely distributed by the respondent, Shri Sharma and other supporters of the respondent. In the election petition it was alleged that Shri Sharma had been appointed as the election agent of the respondent on January 25, 1967.

6. The High Court came to the conclusion that Shri Sharma was appointed as the election agent of the respondent only on February 16, 1967 and not on January 25, 1967. This finding was not challenged before us.

7. After a careful examination of the articles complained of, the High Court held that they contained false statements of fact relating to the personal character and conduct of Shri Dixit; those statements were known to be false to Shri Sharma and they were published with a view to prejudice Shri Dixit's chances in the election. On a reading of the articles in question, there can be hardly two opinions about those articles. We are in complete agreement with the High Court on this aspect of the case.

8. The question whether those articles were published with the consent or knowledge of the respondent does not arise for decision as it was not alleged in the election petition that they were published either with the consent or knowledge of the respondent or at his instance. It is clear from the evidence on record that Shri Sharma and Shri Dixit were bitter enemies from a very long time. Shri Dixit had filed a suit for defamation against Shri Sharma and had obtained a decree for damages against him. That matter was pending in appeal at the time of the election in 1967. It is also clear from the evidence that Shri Sharma had worked against Shri Dixit in the earlier elections as well. Therefore, Shri Sharma needed no provocation from any outside source for publishing scurrilous articles against Shri Dixit.

9. As mentioned earlier, Shri Sharma was appointed as the election agent of the respondent only on February 16, 1967. Therefore the publication of any false statement by him earlier to that date would not invalidate the election of the respondent unless it is proved that the respondent had consented to the same.

10. The respondent's consent to the publication of those statements was attempted to be established by showing that the relevant issues of 'Udgar' were distributed by the respondent. The allegations relating to the distribution of those issues are found in Paragraph 7A (ii) of the petition. The same reads thus:

"That the circulation of the said weekly paper was of fairly large during the election period and the copies of the said newspapers were distributed by the returned candidate and his election agent, Shri Triyogi Narain Sharma and M/s. Rajhans Singh, Padma Singh of the village Pandri, workers and agents of the returned candidate with the consent of the returned candidate and his election agent in villages Akoda, Bilav, Dahoha, Laholi, Pulaoli, Bajhai, Kanawar, Pandri, Bisalpora, Umri, Nunheta and the town of Bhind on 1-2-67, 10-2-67, 12-2-67, 15-2-67, 16-2-67 and 17-2-67 in order to prejudicially effect the prospects of the election result of Shri Narsingh Rao Dixit, the Congress candidate". The allegation in question is quite vague. The same does not make it clear as to which persons distributed which issues in which villages and on what date. We asked the learned Counsel for the appellant to make it clear to us as to whether all the persons mentioned in the petition distributed all the issues in all the villages and on all the dates mentioned therein. His answer was that they did so. Such an allegation appears to be wholly unbelievable. It is most unlikely that the candidate and his election agent could have concentrated on distributing Udgar issues on the election day as well as on the day previous to the election. Anybody who knows something about election can easily visualise the various duties that a candidate and his election agent have to perform on the day prior to the election. On the date of the election there is little time for canvassing. Moreover, it is most unlikely that all these people could have visited all the villages mentioned in the petition on all the dates mentioned. Evidently a wide net was thrown in the election petition to see if anything can be caught. Canvassing is forbidden for 24 hours before election. The allegation as regards the distribution of 'Udgar' issues appears to us to be artificial.

11. The learned judge of the High Court was unable to rely on the evidence adduced by the petitioner relating to the distribution of the Udgar issues mentioned earlier. He has rejected the evidence of all the witnesses examined by the appellant to prove the factum of distribution. In the matter of appreciating oral evidence, the appellate Courts attach great value to the opinion formed by the trial judges. That should be more so in the case of an election petition containing charges of corrupt practices, firstly because those charges are quasi-criminal in character and secondly they are tried by a judge of the High Court. This Court does not re-appreciate oral evidence unless there are special reasons for doing so.

12. If the evidence adduced by the appellant is true, then thousands of copies of Udgar should have been printed on the dates mentioned earlier. We have it from the testimony of the printer of those issues who was examined as a witness on behalf of the respondent that on each of those dates only 250 copies of 'Udgar' were printed. There is no reason to disbelieve his testimony. The same has been accepted as true by the learned trial judge. That circumstance largely falsifies the evidence adduced on behalf of the appellant.

13. In the course of the hearing of this appeal, only the evidence relating to the distribution of the issues in question in the town of Bhind was commended for our acceptance. We were not referred to the evidence relating to the distribution of those issues in other places. The witnesses who speak to the distribution of those issues in Bhind town are P. Ws. 1, 3, 4, 8, 9, 16, 18, 23, 26, 27, 31 and 33. P. W. 1's evidence is to the effect that the respondent, Shri Sharma and other workers of the respondent distributed those issues at Bhind every day during the 15 or 20 days prior to the date of poll. It is obvious that this statement is a highly exaggerated one. As seen earlier, the statements complained of are those published in the issues on 1st, 8th and 15th of February (Exhs. P-1 and P-3). P. W. 1 is a witness to support most of the corrupt practices alleged in the petition. The same is true of P. Ws. 3, 4, 9, 16, 18 and 23. These are all omnibus witnesses. P. W. 8 was one of the candidates at the election. From the admissions made by him it is clear that he was not a genuine candidate. It is likely that he had been put up by Shri Dixit to divide the votes. He is also an omnibus witness. P. W. 8, is a Congressman. He was an active congress worker. He was also the congress member of the Nagar Palika, Bhind. P. W. 16 says that he was an ex-Congress man but at the time of the election, he did not belong to the congress party, but he admitted that Shri Dixit had accompanied the Barat of his son's marriage from Bhind to Jhansi about 10 months before he gave evidence in the court. It also appears from his evidence that he had taken a loan of Rs. 15,000 from the Gramini project under the control of the Industries Minister. It may be noted at this stage that till the last election Shri Dixit was one of the Ministers of the Madhya Pradesh Government. It is clear from the evidence of P. W. 18, that he was interesting himself in the election and there can be hardly any doubt that he was siding with Shri Dixit. P. W. 26, is a member of the congress party. P. W. 27's evidence instead of helping the appellant supports the case of the respondent. He deposed that "five or 10 days before the polling date the respondent with 2 or 4 persons whose names, I do not know had visited my Mohalla at the time of the last election. He simply asked for votes from us, the Mohalla people and did nothing. I did not receive any issue of the newspaper from the respondent or his companions on that occasion." But he did add that respondent's companions distributed them in his Mohalla. Obviously this last statement refers to some occasion other than that referred to by him earlier. P. W. 31, is also a Congressman.

14. It is common knowledge that as a result of excitement and faction feelings generated during election, assistance of large number of seemingly disinterested witnesses can be availed of to support an election petition. It is regrettable that several candidates are not able to take their defeat sportingly. From the spate of election petitions coming to courts, one is almost left with the feeling as if an election petition is an essential part of the election itself. But that is not to say that no corrupt practice is employed during election. The task of the court to separate the grain from the chaff is an extremely difficult one.

15. On an assessment of the entire evidence in the case, we are in agreement with the trial court that the allegations that the respondent either personally or through others got distributed the 'Udgar' issues of the dates mentioned earlier is not satisfactorily established.

16. The next contention taken is the one relating to the alleged statement made by the respondent in a public meeting held at Bhind on January 23, 1967, accusing Shri Dixit as having procured the withdrawal of the candidature of P. W. 11, Shri Ramphal, the nominee of the Republican Party after paying him a bribe of Rs. 2,000. Shri Ramphal was nominated as one of the candidates for the election. He was put up as the nominee of the Republican Party. He withdrew his candidature on January 23, 1967. It is alleged that immediately after Shri Ramphal withdrew his candidature, the respondent held a public meeting in Bhind and at that meeting announced that Shri Dixit had procured the withdrawal of Shri Ramphal by giving him a bribe of Rs. 2,000. This allegation was denied by the respondent. He denied that he addressed any meeting on the 23rd of January, 1967. He also denied that in any of his meetings he had alleged that Shri Dixit had procured the withdrawal of the candidature of Shri Ramphal by paying him bribe. According to the respondent's case the withdrawal of the candidature of Shri Ramphal was resented by the Republican Party; consequently they arranged a procession and a public meeting on January 24, 1967 wherein slogans were raised and speeches made accusing Shri Dixit of having procured the same by bribing Shri Ramphal.

17. The High Court came to the conclusion that a meeting was held at Bhind on 23rd January, 1967. It also came to the conclusion that a procession was taken on the 24th with the effigy of Shri Ramphal which effigy was disgraced and burnt. From the facts proved, there is no doubt that Shri Ramphal's conduct had incensed the members of the Republican Party. They had condemned it as an act of betrayal. His effigy was taken out in a procession. It was beaten with sandals and burnt. There is also no doubt that the members of the Republican Party rightly or wrongly thought that Shri Dixit was responsible for the withdrawal of the candidature of Shri Ramphal. They also appear to have been under the impression that Shri Ramphal had been bribed. The petitioner seems to have exploited that incident and given it a different shape. The respondent's case in this regard is supported by the testimony of R. Ws. 35 and 39. R. W. 39, Raja Ram is the President of the Republican Party of Bhind District. On an overall appreciation of the evidence in this case, we are in agreement with the finding of the trial Court that it is not proved that the respondent had arranged for any public meeting in connection with the withdrawal of the candidature of Shri Ramphal or that he had accused Shri Dixit of having procured the said withdrawal by paying bribe. The witnesses examined in support of the said charge are again P. Ws. 1, 3, 4, 8, 9, 16, 18, 19 and 23. We have already considered their evidence. For the reasons earlier mentioned, we feel unable to rely on their testimony.

18. The only other plea taken is that in a public meeting held in the village Pulaoli, Shri Madho Rao Scindia of Gwalior who was supporting the respondent announced on the eve of the election a bribe of Rs. 20,000 for completing the school building of that place, if not even a single voter of that village voted for the congress. This allegation is unworthy of serious consideration. It is most improbable that any person would make an offer of that type. If any such offer had been made it would have been considered as a joke. None could seriously believe that not even a single voter of a village would vote for the congress candidate. The condition said to have been attached to the offer of bribe is such as to make the version unbelievable. That apart, the votes of each village are not counted separately. No one can find out whether the voters of any particular village have voted for any particular candidate or not. Pulaoli village was one of the many villages forming part of a single polling booth. If any supporter of the respondent had made an offer like the one complained of, immediately his opponents would have exploited the same by exposing its hollowness. The witnesses who support the petitioner's case on this part of his case are P. Ws. 2, 16, 17, 28 and 34. The respondent has examined R. Ws. 34, 45, 46 and 49 to repudiate the charge. We have already considered the reliability of the testimony of the P.W.16. We shall not refer to his evidence again. So far as P.W.2 is concerned, he was a worker in the J.C. Mill at Gwalior since 1946. His explanation for being in the Pulaoli village at the time of the meeting in question is that he was on leave at that time and had come to the Pandri village as his wife's health was not good. In cross-examination he admitted that during the period in question his wife was not under the treatment of any Doctor or physician nor was it necessary to give her any treatment at that time. He deposed that his wife was deranged in mind for the last about 13 years. It was suggested during his cross-examination that he had taken leave during elections in order to work for Shri Dixit. There appears to be force in this suggestion. P. W. 17 was a witness for Shri Dixit in the defamation case that he filed against Shri Sharma. P. W. 28, is one of those omnibus witnesses who have supported petitioner's case in several aspects. P. W. 34, is the petitioner himself. The trial Court has rejected the testimony of these witnesses and preferred to accept the testimony of the witnesses examined on behalf of the respondent. We are in agreement with the trial Court that the charge in question has not been established.

19. None of the other grounds taken in the election petition was pressed before us.

20. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

S. M. SIKRI AND V. RAMASWAMI, JJ.
Nanak Chand, Appellant v. Chandra Kishore Aggarwal and others, Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 6 of 1969, D/- 20-5-1969.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 488 — Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act (1956), Section 4 (b) — Section 4 (b) of Maintenance Act does not repeal or affect in any manner the provisions of Sec. 488, Cr. P. C.

Section 4 (b) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act (1956), does not repeal or affect in any manner the provisions of Section 488, Cr. P. C. There is no inconsistency between the Maintenance Act and Section 488, Cr. P. C. Both can stand together. The scope of the two laws is different. The Maintenance Act is an Act to amend and codify the law relating to adoptions and maintenance among Hindus. Section 488, Cr. P. C. provides a summary remedy and is applicable to all persons belonging to all religions and has no relationship with the personal law of the parties. AIR 1963 All 355 & (1962) 2 Cr LJ 528 (Cal) & AIR 1965 Pat 442, Approved. (Para 5)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 488 (1) — “Child”, meaning of — Does not mean a minor son or daughter — Real limitation is contained in expression “unable to maintain itself”. AIR 1967 Mad 77, Overruled.

The word “child” in Section 488 does not mean a minor son or daughter. The real limitation is contained in the expression “unable to maintain itself.” (Para 12)

The word “child” is not defined in the Criminal Procedure Code itself. This word has different meaning in different context. Where the word “child” is used in conjunction with parentage, it is not concerned with age. In Section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code the word is used with reference to the father. There is no qualification of age; the only qualification is that the child must be unable to maintain itself. There is no justification for saying that this section is confined to children who are under the age of majority. Case law discussed. AIR 1943 Bom 48, Foll.; AIR 1967 Mad 77, Overruled. (Para 7)

(C) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 488 — Maintenance grant to child — Court held rightly taken into consideration the existing situation, such as that one of the child was a student of M.Com., and the other was of M.B.B.S. Course, at the time of passing order. (Para 13)

Mr. Sardar Bahadur Saharya and Miss Yougindra Khushalani, Advocates, for Appellant; M/s. S. C. Mazumdar and Yogeshwar Dayal, Advocates, for Respondents.

SIKRI, J.:— This appeal by certificate of fitness granted by the High Court of Delhi arises out of an application under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, filed on September 4, 1963, in the Court of Magistrate, 1st Class, Delhi, by four children of the respondent, Nanak Chand. The first applicant, Chandra Kishore, was born on January 23, 1942, the second, Ravindra Kishore, was born on September 23, 1943, the third Shashi Prabha, was born on February 23, 1947, and the fourth, Rakesh Kumar, was born on September 21, 1948. The first two applicants were thus majors at the time of the application, the third though a minor at the time of the application was a major on the date of the order passed by the Magistrate, i.e., on March 26, 1965. The learned Magistrate allowed the application and ordered the respondent, Nanak Chand, to pay Rs. 35/- p. m. to Chandra Kishore for four months only, Rs. 35/- p. m. to Ravindra Kishore for 3 years only in case he continued his medicine studies, Rs. 45/- p. m. to Shashi Prabha as her maintenance allowance and education expenses and Rs. 45/- p. m. to Rakesh Kumar as his maintenance allowance and education expenses from March 26, 1965.

2. Both the applicants and the respondent, Nanak Chand, filed revisions against the order of the Magistrate, to the Additional Sessions Judge, who dismissed the revision petition filed by the respondent, Nanak Chand, and accepted the revision petition of the applicants. The Additional Sessions Judge submitted the case to the High Court with the recommendation to enhance the maintenance allowance of the applicants in terms of the proposals made by him. The Additional Sessions Judge observed that the maintenance under Section 488 did not include the costs of college education, and therefore he did not propose to allow Chandra Kishore and Ravindra Kishore the expenses of their college education. But taking into consideration the income of the respondent and the status of the family, the Additional Sessions Judge proposed to allow Chandra Kishore and Ravindra Kishore Rs. 100 p. m. each as maintenance allowance until they finished their courses of M. Com. and M. B. B. S., respectively. He further proposed to allow to Rakesh Kumar and Shashi Prabha each a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 50 until Shashi Prabha was able to earn or was married, whichever was earlier, and until Rakesh Kumar was able to maintain himself.

3. The High Court accepted the reference made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge and dismissed the criminal revision filed by the respondent. The High Court granted the certificate under Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution because there is conflict of opinion on the question of the interpretation to be given to the word 'child' in Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

4. The learned Counsel for Nanak Chand has raised three points before us: first, that Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code stands impliedly repealed by Section 4 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 (78 of 1956)—hereinafter referred to as the Maintenance Act—insofar as it is applicable to Hindus; secondly, that the word 'child' in Sec. 488 means a minor; and thirdly, that the maintenance fixed for Chandra Kishore and Ravindra Kishore was based on wrong principles and was excessive inasmuch as expenses for education have been taken into consideration.

5. Section 4 of the Maintenance Act reads:

"4. Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act,—

(b) any other law in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall cease to apply to Hindus in so far as it is inconsistent with any of the provisions contained in this Act."

The learned Counsel says that Sec. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, in so far as it provides for the grant of maintenance to a Hindu, is inconsistent with Chapter III of the Maintenance Act, and in particular, Section 20, which provides for maintenance to children. We are unable to see any inconsistency between the Maintenance Act and Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. Both can stand together. The Maintenance Act is an Act to amend and codify the law relating to adoptions and maintenance among Hindus. The law was substantially similar before and nobody ever suggested that Hindu Law, as in force immediately before the commencement of this Act, in so far as it dealt with the maintenance of children was in any way inconsistent with Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. The scope of the two laws is different. Section 488 provides a summary remedy and is applicable to all persons belonging to all religions and has no relationship with the personal law of the parties. Recently the question came before the Allahabad High Court in Ram Singh v. State, AIR 1963 All 355, before the Calcutta High Court in Mahabir Agarwalla v. Gita Roy, 1962 (2) Cri LJ 528 (Cal), and before the Patna High Court in Nalini Ranjan v. Kiran Rani, AIR 1965 Pat 442. The three High Courts have, in our view, correctly come to the conclusion that Section 4 (b) of the Maintenance Act does not repeal or affect in any manner the provisions contained in Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

6. On the second point there is sharp conflict of opinion amongst the High Court and indeed amongst the Judges of the same High Court. In view of this sharp conflict of opinion we must examine the terms of Section 488 ourselves. Section 488 (1) reads as follows:

"488(1):—If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate, not exceeding five hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs."

We may also set out sub-section (8) of Section 488 because some courts have placed reliance on it:

"488(8):—Proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife, or as the case may be the mother of the illegitimate child."

7. The word 'Child' is not defined in the Code itself. This word has different meanings in different contexts. When it is used in correlation with father or parents, according to Shorter Oxford Dictionary it means:

"As correlative to parent, 1. The offspring, male or female, of human parents."

Beaumont, C. J., in Shaikh Ahmed Shaikh Mahomed v. Bai Fatma, ILR (1943) Bom 38 at p. 40=(AIR 1943 Bom 48 at pp. 48, 49) observed:

"The word 'child' according to its use in the English language has different meanings, according to the context. If used without reference to parentage, it is generally synonymous with the word 'infant' and means a person who has not attained the age of majority. Where the word 'child' is used with reference to parentage, it means a descendant of the first degree, a son or a daughter and has no reference to age. In certain contexts it may include descendants of more remote degree, and be equivalent to 'issue'. But, at any rate, where the word 'child' is used in conjunction with parentage, it is not concerned with age. No one would suggest that a gift 'to all my children' or 'to all the children of A' should be confined to minor children. In Section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code the word is used with reference to the father. There is no qualification of age; the only qualification is that the child must be unable to maintain itself. In my opinion, there is no justification for saying that this section is confined to children who are under the age of majority."

8. We agree with these observations and it seems to us that there is no reason to depart from the dictionary meaning of the word.

9. As observed by Subba Rao, J., as he then was, speaking for the Court in Jagir Kaur v. Jaswant Singh, (1964) 2 SCR 73 at p. 84=(AIR 1963 SC 1521 at p. 1525), "Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure providing for maintenance of wives and children intends to serve a social purpose." If the concept of majority is imported into the section a major child who is an imbecile or otherwise handicapped will fall outside the purview of this section. If this concept is not imported, no harm is done for the section itself provides a limitation by saying that the child must be unable to maintain itself. The older a person becomes the more difficult it would be to prove that he is unable to maintain himself. It is true that a son aged 77 may claim maintenance under the section from a father who is 97. It is very unlikely to happen but if it does happen and the father is able to maintain while the son is unable to maintain himself no harm would be done by passing an appropriate order under Section 488. We cannot view with equanimity the lot of helpless children who though major are unable to support themselves because of their imbecility or deformity or other handicaps, and it is not as if such cases have not arisen. As long ago as 1873, Pearson, J., in the matter of W. B. Todd, 1873-5 NWP HCR 237 had to deal with a major son who was deaf and dumb, and he had no hesitation in granting an order of maintenance. The same conclusion was arrived at by Chevis, J., in 1910 in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor, (1910) 6 Ind Cas 960=(11 Cri LJ 427 (Punj)) and he allowed maintenance to a young man of about 20 who was very lame having a deformed foot. We have seen no case in which a man of 77 has claimed maintenance and we think, with respect, that unnecessary emphasis has been laid on the fact that it might be possible for a man of 77 to claim maintenance.

10. It is not necessary to review all the case law. The latest judgment which was brought to our notice is that of the Madras High Court in Amirithammal v. Marimuthu, AIR 1967 Mad 77 in which Natesan J., has written a very elaborate judgment. He has referred to all the Indian cases and a number of English cases and statutory provisions both in England and in India. We are unable to derive any assistance from the statutory provisions referred to by him or from the English Law on the point. He relied on the use of the word "itself" in Section 488 as showing that what was meant was a minor child. We are unable to attach so much significance to this word. It may well be that it is simpler or more correct to use the word "itself" rather than use the words "himself or herself".

11. We may mention that Das Gupta, J., in Smt. Puranasashi Devi v. Nagendra Nath, AIR 1950 Cal 455, and Mudholkar, J., in State v. Ishwar Lal, ILR (1951) Nag 474=(AIR 1950 Nag 231) came to the same conclusion as we have done.

12. In view of the reasons given above we must hold that the word "child" in Section 488 does not mean a minor son or daughter and the real limitation is contained in the expression "unable to maintain itself."

13. Coming to the third point raised by the learned counsel we are of the view that the learned Additional Sessions Judge and the High Court were right in taking into consideration the existing situation, the situation being that at the time the order was passed Chandra Kishore was a student of M. Com. and Ravindra Kishore was a student of M. B. B. S. course. We need not decide in this case whether expenses for education can be given under Section 488 because no such expenses have been taken into consideration in fixing the maintenance in this case. It has not been shown to us that the amount fixed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge and confirmed by the High Court is in any way excessive or exorbitant.

14. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 57 C 99)

(From: Punjab)

M. HIDAYATULLAH. C. J. AND
A. N. GROVER, J.

Lachman Dass, Appellant v. State of Punjab, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 118 of 1968, D/- 10-10-1969.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 423 — Appeal to Supreme Court — Accused found guilty on facts by Courts below concurrently — No interference by Supreme Court ordinarily — High Court however, brushing aside entire defence version briefly and failing to consider whether it is believable — Held, Supreme Court could appreciate evidence on facts to decide guilt or otherwise of accused.

(Para 2)

(B) Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), Section 5 (1) (d) read with Section 5 (2) — Penal Code (1860), Section 161 — Accused charged for taking bribe — His conviction on uncorroborated statement of complainant — Circumstantial and documentary evidence, however, supporting defence version — Conviction set aside — Decision of Punjab High Court, Reversed.

LM/LM/F178/69/DVT/M

Accused, an Accountant in Municipality, was charged for receiving ten rupee note as bribe from a municipal contractor. Accused, being entrusted with the work of scrutinising bills submitted by the contractor, had reduced the amounts of bills substantially. Case of the complainant i.e., Contractor, was that the accused demanded him 10 Rs. and threatened that on his failure to pay the amount, bills would be further scrutinised and reduced. The accused accepted receipt of Rs. 10/- but his defence was that he had actually deducted Rs. 8-12 p. for making good the over-payment already made to the complainant and has returned Rs. 1-88 p. to him. The record of the municipality as well as the evidence of three witnesses including the Executive Officer of the Municipality supported the defence case. The trial Court convicted the accused for taking bribe depending on the sole evidence of the complainant and the High Court maintained the conviction though the evidence of the Executive Officer was not disbelieved.

Held, as the conviction was based on the sole evidence of the complainant who had reason to harm the accused, having reduced the bills substantially, and as there was nothing to show why the Executive officer should give false evidence in order to extricate the accused, conviction of the accused should be set aside. Circumstantial and documentary evidence created room for doubt that the defence version was probably true and the statement of the complainant could not be accepted without corroboration. Decision of Punjab High Court, Reversed. (Para 8)

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.— The appellant Lachman Dass who was an accountant of the Municipal Committee, Budhlada has been convicted under Section 5 (1) (d) read with Section 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and Section 161 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years and to pay a fine of Rs. 250/- (in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months). His appeal to the High Court failed and he now appeals to this Court by special leave granted by this Court.

2. Ordinarily, this Court does not consider a case after the High Court and the Court below have concurrently found the accused guilty on facts. In this case, however, the judgment of the High Court merely brushes aside the entire defence version in one sentence which defence in our opinion merited close consideration with the prosecution case, to see which was believable. The learned Judge in the High Court who heard the appeal merely endorsed the findings of the Special Judge without attempting to weigh the evidence as was necessary in the appeal. We have accordingly allowed the appellant to read to us certain portions of the material evidence and have appraised it for ourselves. It is for these reasons that we shall narrate the facts a little more fully and then discuss the evidence in detail.

3. The incident is said to have taken place on the 24th March, 1964, at about 10 A. M. The complainant in the case is one Kishori Lal who was a plumber working in the Budhlada Municipality. For the work which he had done, he had submitted bills which it was the duty of the appellant to check and verify and certify for payment. It appears that the appellant had strictly verified these bills and reduced them from Rs. 935/- to Rs. 683/- and odd. In fact a cheque in payment of all the dues had been prepared and handed over to the complainant as far back as 16th March, 1964. The case of the complainant was that the appellant had made demands on him for bribe and had also told him that Rs. 10/- should be paid to him after the cheque had been encashed, threatening him at the same time that if the amount was not paid, the bills would be further scrutinised and reduced. This amount, it was stated, was paid by the complainant on 24th March in furtherance of this suggestion of the appellant and that is the foundation of the charge.

4. Before this amount was paid, the complainant made his report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who asked a police officer to arrange for a trap. The usual procedure for such traps was followed, the currency note of Rs. 10 which was the amount in demand was initialled by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the number of the note was taken down before it was made over to the complainant for passing it to the appellant in furtherance of his demand for bribe. The Sub-Inspector with the complainant, accompanied by two witnesses, went to the office of the appellant. None of the witnesses entered the office of the appellant. The complainant alone entered it. After some time, the complainant came out and raised his turban which was the signal that the amount had been paid. The raid followed and the currency note was found in the left hand pocket of the bush-shirt of the appellant. He was thereupon arrested. The two witnesses who accompanied the Sub-Inspector stated that the appellant had become pale and was trembling and that he gave no explanation at that time. It is however not clear whether any opportunity was given to him to explain how this money came to be with him.

5. The appellant admitted receipt of Rs. 10 in one currency note from the complainant. His explanation was that the complainant had complained to his superior officer about the strict scrutiny of the bills by the appellant. The bills were ordered to be scrutinised again. The last bill was found to be correct, but in the previous bill the appellant found an over-payment to the complainant of Rs. 8.12 p. Therefore the appellant was asked to recover this amount from the complainant or pay it himself. He thereupon sent a notice to the complainant to bring Rs. 8.12p. and pay it into the Municipal account. The complainant came and gave a currency note of Rs. 10. The appellant returned Rs. 1.88p. from the imprest with him and prepared a receipt for Rs. 8.12p. and gave to the complainant. This statement the appellant mentioned was borne out by numerous circumstances appearing in the evidence in the case.

6. First, there were two witnesses who claimed to be present when the money was paid. They are, Chaman Lal (D. W. 1) and Ambresh Narain (D. W. 2). Chaman Lal is the Municipal Commissioner of the Budhlada Municipality. He stated that he had gone to the office of the appellant on the morning of the 24th March to enquire from the appellant what rent was payable by his friend Hans Raj towards the 90 years lease of the site in front of his house. The appellant told him that the question could properly be answered only by Shri A. N. Dhanoka, Secretary of the Municipal Committee. He therefore brought Shri Dhanoka to the office and at that time, one person whom he identified as Kishori Lal the complainant, came to the office and gave a currency note of Rs. 10 to the appellant. The appellant then started preparing a receipt for him. This receipt according to the witness was given to Kishori Lal. This part of the statement of Chaman Lal was corroborated by the evidence of Ambresh Narain (D. W. 2). He is the Secretary of the Municipal Committee, Budhlada and he also stated that at that time, Kishori Lal came to the office and gave a currency note of Rs. 10 to the appellant saying that that was the amount which he had demanded through the peon. The appellant took the currency note and issued a receipt to Kishori Lal. Immediately afterwards, a Sub-Inspector came and arrested the appellant and conducted his search.

7. These two witnesses were disbelieved by the Special Judge who tried the case on the ground that the first witness — Chaman Lal seemed to be a chance witness and the second witness — Ambresh Narain Dhanuka need not have been called in, because the information could have been supplied by the appellant himself. There was no other reason assigned why these persons should have perjured themselves in support of the appellant. As we shall show presently, there is further corroboration of the testimony of these witnesses from quite an independent source and in documentary records of the Municipal Committee's office. The next defence witness is Siri Pal Jain. He is the Executive Officer of the Municipal Committee. He proved that the appellant had checked the bills of the complainant and reduced it from Rs. 935 to Rs. 683 and odd. He proved Exs. DE/1 and DE/2 which were the bills and his endorsements. He also proved that on 16th March, 1964 a cheque of about Rs. 216 was given to the complainant in full and final settlement of his account. After this bill was given, says the witness, the two bills were again checked and the witness told the appellant that he should ascertain what was the amount due. The appellant then went to him at 3.30 P. M. the same evening and told him that he had checked the account and that the second bill was correct, but that there was some overpayment in the first bill Ex. DE. The witness then asked him to make a report in writing and the report Ex. DF was made to him that Rs. 8.12 p. had been overpaid. The witness then passed an order Ex. DF/1 on 17-3-1964. Ex. DF has been produced before us. The endorsement of the Executive Officer on the report is:

"This is certainly very bad. It shows the lack of proper care and diligence. Either the recovery be made or deposit yourself."

As a result of this, the notice Ex. DG/1 was issued by the appellant. The witness proved the signature of the appellant on Ex. DG/1. This notice demanded from the complainant the sum of Rs. 8.12p. as excess payment to him. This notice had an endorsement on it of the office peon that the copy was attempted to be served upon Kishori Lal but he was not present in his house, that the peon met him in the Bazar but he refused to accept the notice and that the notice was pasted at his house. There was a cash receipt which was purported to be prepared on 24th March, 1964 Ex. DH on which the signature of the appellant was found. This receipt was the counterfoil in the office of the Municipality and it bore the name of the contractor Kishori Lal and the fact that excess payment was made to him vide Entry No. 48 dated 24-1-1964 and the amount shown was Rs. 8.12p. This was followed by a letter which Siri Pal Jain purports to have written to the appellant bringing to his notice that the amount of the cash was checked against the cash book and it was found by the Cashier that the receipt for Rs. 8.12p. existed but it had not been entered nor had the amount been deposited with the Cashier and what his explanation was. This explanation was given to the Executive Officer by the appellant on 25th March, 1964 in which he stated that it was true that a receipt No. 31/34 had been issued in the name of Kishori Lal for Rs. 8.12p. He also stated that he had been given Rs. 10 in currency note by Kishori Lal and he paid Rs. 1.88 p. as change to him from his imprest but that the Sub-Inspector immediately came and took away Rs. 10 note from him and it could not be deposited with the Cashier. All this evidence is certified to be existing by the Executive Officer. The Executive Officer also stated that after the arrest of the appellant, he got the office locked and left the key with the peon. He had questioned the peon if he had parted with the key to anybody else and the peon satisfied him that the key had not been handed over to anybody. All this evidence fitted in with the explanation of the appellant that he had received a Rs. 10 note towards payment of Rs. 8.12p. which had been demanded from the contractor, that he had paid Rs. 1.88p. as change to him and that the entry could not be made because both the money and the appellant were taken away by the police. There is evidence to show that on the checking of the money on the 26th March, 1964, there was a shortage of Rs. 1.88p. between the amount in the cash book and the amount found in the imprest. This shortage clearly shows that the amount of Rs. 1.88p. had been paid.

8. To this explanation of the appellant and the evidence adduced by the defence witnesses, the comment of the Special Judge was that all these witnesses were falsely supporting the appellant and trying to shield him. We have not been able to find why three persons including the Executive Officer should go out of their way to shield the appellant. Nothing has been suggested before us which would show that the Executive Officer in particular had any reason to forge documents and to give false evidence to extricate the appellant. In fact the learned Judge in the High Court tried more the case of the Executive Officer than the case of the appellant and after reasoning it fully, exonerated the Executive Officer but maintained the conviction of the appellant. If the Executive Officer is to be believed, it would be difficult to hold that all this story about Rs. 8.12p. being sought to be recovered from the complainant is entirely false. There is too much documentary evidence which has the support of the Executive Officer's sworn testimony to be brushed aside as the learned Judge in the High Court has done. If that story is accepted and if we compare it with the evidence of the Cashier that a sum of Rs. 1.88p. was found short in the cash and that a receipt for Rs. 8.12p. had already been prepared, we reach the conclusion that the explanation of the appellant is probably true. As against this, there is only the sworn testimony of Kishori Lal to compare, because none of the witnesses for the said ever heard any conversation. There is no other witness to support Kishori Lal in what he says. Kishori Lal had reason to harm the appellant as he had twice reduced his bills substantially. There ought to be some other evidence before his word can be accepted with so much other evidence to contradict him. In trap cases at least some panchas overhear the conversation or see something to which they can depose. In this case as against Kishori Lal's evidence we have circumstantial and documentary evidence and the evidence of the Executive Officer, of Chaman Lal and of Ambresh Narain in whose presence the receipt was prepared and given to Kishori Lal. On the whole, therefore, we are satisfied that there is considerable room for doubt in this case and that the statement of Kishori Lal which alone is the foundation of the charge against the appellant cannot be accepted without corroboration. We are satisfied that his conviction and sentence should be set aside. We order accordingly. The appellant is acquitted. The appellant is on bail. His bail bonds are cancelled. If the fine has been paid by the appellant, it shall be refunded to him.

Appeal allowed.

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J.: This is an appeal by special leave against the judgment of the Bombay High Court confirming the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Kolhapur who reversed the judgment and decree of the civil judge of Junior Division at Gadhinglaj whereby the suit of the plaintiff-respondent was dismissed. The respondent had filed a suit against the appellant Shivagonda Subraigonda Patil and his sons Nijappa Shivagounda Patil, Virgonda Shivagounda Patil, Bhimappa Shivagounda Patil and Rayappa Shiva-gonda Patil with the allegation that on 27-5-1921 the first defendant, Shiva-gounda who was the karta of the joint family consisting of himself and his four sons, sold by a registered sale deed for a sum of Rs. 2400 the suit properties ad-measuring 6 acres and 37 guntas out of R. S. No. 62/2 and 62/3 to the plaintiff's father Bhimgonda. The properties sold to the plaintiff's father were previously mortgaged and it was averred that the first defendant had undertaken to pay the mortgage debt and hand over the suit property to the plaintiff's father. It ap-pears that part of the property out of R. S. 62/2 to the extent of four acres, 36 guntas was mortgaged to Hanmgond Balgonda Patil for Rs. 1000 and two acres and one gunta out of S. No. 62/3 was mortgaged to Virgonda and four other persons. It was the case of the plaintiff that after the death of Hanmgond Bal-gonda the first defendant repaid the debt to his widow Gangabai and obtained pos-session of the hypotheca but instead of handing over possession to the plaintiff's father as stipulated in the sale deed he retained the possession. In respect of the other two acres and one gunta which was mortgaged to Virgonda and others he alleged that the first defendant re-deemed the mortgage and handed over the possession to the plaintiff's mother as the guardian of the plaintiff who was then a minor and that after the plain-tiff's mother got into possession of the property the Kolhapur government at-tached the property and took possession of it in 1928 on the ground that the mortgage in favour of Virgonda and others was contrary to Wat Hukums. However, it appears that on or about 3-3-51 attachment was vacated but the possession of this land was handed over by the collector to the first defendant in-stead of the plaintiff from whose posses-sion it was taken. It was the plaintiff's case that both in respect of the pro-perty that was mortgaged to Hanmgonda Balgonda and that which was mortgaged to Virgonda and others it was the first defendant that retained possession of the said lands contrary to the stipulation and the sale effected in favour of the plain-tiff's father. It was also the plaintiff's case that Bhimgonda who was a hissadar bhauband of the suit land which was a part of Patilki watan inam land on the date of the sale deed dated 27-5-21 was entitled to claim possession of the pro-perty on the strength of his title deed; as such the revenue court erred in hand-ing over possession of the portion of the suit property to the first defendant on 3-3-51.

2. The first defendant respondent No. 1 contended in his written statement that the suit being patilki watani service inam property, its transfer was declared by Wat Hukums of the Kolhapur State to be il-legal and void because neither the plain-tiff nor his father was either the 'nawa-wala' of the patilki watani service inam lands or the male members of the senior branch of the senior family. It was also contended that the mortgage in 1915 by the first defendant in favour of Hanam-gonda was also contrary to wat hukums and therefore void. Even apart from this defect the suit property was never in the possession of the deceased Hanam-gonda in his capacity as the mortgagee but that it has always been in his pos-session as the owner thereof. Accord-ingly the suit was barred by limitation. On these pleadings several issues were framed but for the purposes of this appeal having regard to the arguments addressed before us only two issues are relevant, namely whether the sale under exhibit 37 in favour of the father was void under the then prevailing law in Kolhapur State and whether the suit was in time. It may be mentioned that the trial court had dismissed the suit of the plaintiff but the District Judge in appeal allowed it, set aside the decree and remanded the suit to the trial Court for fresh disposal according to law with the direction that the parties should be allowed to amend their pleadings. After remand, the trial Court reframed the issues having regard to the amendment of the pleadings but in so far as the issues with which we are concerned it held against the plaintiff and again dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Court which allowed the appeal, holding that the impugned alienation was legal and did not offend any of the provisions of the wat hukumts that were in force and that the suit was within time. The appeal to the High Court of Bombay was unsuccessful. The High Court held that under the law in force alienation of service inams were alone declared to be invalid but since the subject matter under appeal did not pertain to the service inam land, the alienation was not void, nor was the suit barred by reason of the defendant's adverse possession.

3. The question we are called upon to determine in this appeal is whether according to the law in force as can be ascertained from the relevant wat hukumts and the provisions of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act III of 1874, as subsequently amended in so far as it is applicable to the State of Kolhapur, the alienation of the patel-ki-watan inam land, is void and whether the suit of the plaintiff-respondent is barred by limitation. Before we embark upon an enquiry in respect of these two questions, it would be necessary to understand the nature and significance of the wat hukumts and the terms used therein, appertaining to watans and inams. In the princely State of Kolhapur, the word wat hukum has been used not only for the firmans or decrees of the ruler but also for the orders issued by several authorities. This indiscriminate use of the words has caused a great deal of confusion, and no wonder the Supreme Court of that State had occasion to observe that they constituted a "wilderness". This term, it was noticed was not confined to orders passed by the ruler, but also referred to those orders which were issued by the Chief Justice, by Sarsubha (the Commissioner of Revenue Division) and also even by sub-divisional officers like the Prant Officer who corresponded to the Deputy Collector. But it was not every wat hukum that had the force of law. Only those wat hukumts which were purported to have been expressly issued by the authority of the ruler whether they emanated from the Prime Minister, the Political Agent, Sarsubha or the Prant Officer, had the force of law. All the other wat hukumts which were issued by the several officers as executive orders, did not have any legal force. We shall refer to those relevant wat hukumts which pertain to the inams in order to determine whether those inam grants were inalienable and subject to the rule of primogeniture. A watan or inam which in its primary sense means a gift was a grant made by a ruler who had the power or authority to make these inams. These inams were of several kinds, namely, religious endowments, saranjams, service inams, etc., but we are here concerned only with service inams. These service inams have an origin of antiquity and go back to a feudal era where the ruler administered the government through village administration by compensating various services required to be performed by it generally by the grant of lands. The servants or officers of the village who rendered these services were known as 'balute' and the number of them generally were twelve known collectively as 'bara balute' of which in Maratha villages and others where it was adopted the village headman was one of such balutas known as patel. There were others like Kulkarni (accountant) Deshpandya (district accountant) washerman, barber, etc., with which we are not here concerned (vide Wilson's Glossary of Judicial and Revenue terms). The land which was granted for the performance of each of these services was hereditary and held subject to the terms of the grant in the sanad which governed inheritance, inalienability, etc. The subject matter of the suit as already noticed formed part of the patelki watan land and was situated in the Kolhapur State, where it is contended that according to the wat hukumts then in force a sale in favour of a bhauband of the vendor but not a 'nawawala' was valid. The bhauband we are informed by the learned advocate for the appellant, Shri Karkhanis, and it is not denied by the respondents' learned advocate, literally means kinsman or relative, has been translated as watandar of the same watan in the Supreme Court, and kinsman by the translator in the High Court. A reference to Wilson's Glossary shows that the word Bhau means a brother, a cousin. There is no doubt that it refers to relatives of the vendor. The word nawawala means the registered holder of the watan. An excerpt from page 12 of V. S. Desai's book—The Kolhapur Inam Law—has been cited before us namely that whenever the holder of an inam died, it became necessary to undertake a succession inquiry "in order to ascertain the person upon whom the inam should descend" and "the person so designated was called the nawawala". He was the holder of the inam and had the right to render service, if service had to be rendered. It was therefore urged by the plaintiff that as both the vendor and the vendee belonged to the watandar's family the transaction was valid under the wat hukums of the Kolhapur Darbar, as such we will have to examine these wat hukums.

4. The first of the documents upon which reliance is placed is wat hukum No. 76 of 1282 fasli issued on 13-4-1873. This prohibits by cancelling all prior orders pertaining to service inams, the partition and mortgage of watan lands. Para. 7 of this wat hukum states that the owner of the lands above-mentioned not being private property has no right to alienate by way of mortgage, sale, gift, etc., and such transfer will not be recognised by civil or revenue courts in the Kolhapur State. Only the right of the person taking such land will be recognized. If deeds alienating by way of mortgage, etc., as mentioned above are got executed from the owner and registered in the government offices, such registration should not be construed as approval of the government to such transfers. On 13-9-1876, the Political Agent issued circular No. 28 of 1286 fasli with reference to the wat hukum No. 12 of 1283 fasli issued on July 12, 1871. It said even though the wat hukum issued in the year 1871 had declared that a person in whose name the watan was continued should not give or take by way of mortgage, gift, etc., that provision is not complied with and it was, accordingly, made known by that circular that those who had mortgaged, etc., their lands should redeem within three months failing which the lands will be forfeited. It added that even if the lands were mortgaged hereafter they would be forfeited. Again on 4-8-1887, Sarsubha issued wat hukum No. 19 of 1297 fasli, after referring to the orders issued from time to time that the watan lands of patel kul-karni, mahdra, etc. should not be mortgaged or sold, it proceeded to make an exception in these words: "It should not be understood that this order puts any restrictions on village officers, patel kul-karni, etc., mortgaging etc., their lands with bhaubands". While all the previous wat hukums appear to have prohibited alienations whether by way of sale or mortgage absolutely on pain of their being forfeited if the provisions were not complied with, this wat hukum seems to make an exception in favour of mortgages between bhaubands. Thereafter in 1896, wat hukum No. 9 of 1306 issued by Sir Nayadhish (Chief Justice) cancelled all wat hukums pertaining to service wat hukums issued prior to 1876. A subsequent wat hukum No. 39 of 1305 issued on 26-2-1896 states that as some doubts had been raised because of the use of vernacular words in wat hukum No. 19 of 4-8-1887 pertaining to watans of the watandars performing service, it was decided to prohibit the watandars or his pot bhaubands from alienating watan in any form. It was directed that an endorsement to this effect should be made on wat No. 19 dated 4-8-1887 and that the same be brought into force. This Sarsubha wat was a huzur resolution having the force of law. There are several other wat hukums namely sarsubha wat hukum 35 of 1335 fasli dated March 12, 1904, sarsubha wat hukum 28 of 1318 fasli, but it is not necessary to deal with them as they do not refer to this aspect of the matter. By sarsubha wat hukum No. 44 of 1322 fasli, dated 23-5-1913, it was made known that "every inam of whatever type was impartible and was to be continued with eldest son only. If any partition takes place hereafter, Government will not approve of it. Every partition effected prior to this order will not be affected as this order will not have retrospective effect." It is, therefore, seen that by this date not only the alienation of service inams was prohibited but it was made impartible, succession to which was to be governed by the law of primogeniture. Then we get sarsubha wat No. 4 of 1323 fasli issued on 11-6-1913 approved by huzur resolution No. 5 of 1913. This wat is translated thus:

Be it known that there is a ban on mortgaging or disposing of in any manner like other service watans the inams which have been declared impartible by the foregoing wat hukum and that all the wat hukum prohibiting such alienation issued so far are applicable to the inams declared impartible by the wat No. 44. This will come into force from date of the Gazette."

The trial court points out that there were certain decisions of the Kolhapur High Court which lay down that alienation of whatever type of inam was prohibited except a sale to the nawawala but they are based on the presumption that these two wat hukum 44 of 1322 and 4 of 1323 are in existence. It was further stated that these wat hukum were omitted by wat hukum 40 of 1917, as can be seen from the list of the non-existing wat hukum given at p. 10 of appendix to Vol. II of the collection of wat hukum. Though it is stated that the wat hukum 40 of 1917 was not available but from the first column it appears that it was not in force in respect of two categories of inams mentioned in it which categories do not include the service inams. There is another Sarsubha wat 4 of 1333 fasli issued on 28-3-24 for granting permission only to nawawala wajirdars, watandars to purchase lands from pot bhaubands. These two wats Nos. 4 of 1323 and 4 of 1333, it is said, vary the absolute prohibition against alienation by permitting patelki-watan service inam to be mortgaged like other service inams, though alienation would be void if it is made in favour of any one other than bhauband and without permission even to bhaubands. It was sought to be contended before the High Court and also before us that though initially under the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act III of 1874, which was made applicable to the State of Kolhapur by notification of 1297 fasli published in the Karvir State Gazette (Kolhapur) on 3-3-1888, Section 5 which prohibited the alienation if not made with the sanction of the government, was substituted by a subsequent amendment by Bombay Act V of 1886. This amended section, however, only prohibited alienations in any form in favour of any person who was not a bhauband beyond the natural lifetime of the watan holder. This amended provision also was applied to the Kolhapur State in the same way as the main Act was applied. It is, however, urged that the Bombay Watan Act and the amendment were only applied in spirit that is according to the obvious meaning or import unlike other Acts which were applied to the Kolhapur State in their entirety without any limitation. But the High Court of Bombay did not find it necessary to go into the question as to whether the Bombay Act or its amendment applied in letter or spirit, because according to it, the Kolhapur law was also precisely the same as the law prevailing in the Bombay State. We have already set out the various wat hukum and are of the view that the alienations by way of sale at any rate were prohibited; in so far as application of the Bombay Act and its amendment is concerned, we are one with Gajendragadkar, J., as he then was, who, when delivering the judgment of the Full Bench consisting of himself, Chagla, C. J. and Shah, J. as he then was, in R. Vanappa Akale v. Laxman M. Akale, 52 Bom LR 839 at p. 841 = (AIR 1951 Bom 258 at p. 259), observed:

"The decision of this question has been made somewhat difficult by reason of the fact that in the State of Kolhapur the Watan Act has been made applicable 'in spirit' and there are a large number of wat-hukums issued in respect of questions relating to inami lands from time to time In dealing with the questions pertaining to the watans the courts in Kolhapur have therefore to consider this mass of wat-hukums and apply them to the facts before them. In doing so they have also to bear in mind the fact that the spirit of the Watan Act had also been made applicable to the State. Mr. Justice Madgavkar who presided over the Supreme Court at Kolhapur for several years strongly criticised the application of the Watan Act in spirit only on the ground that he was unable to understand what such an application of the spirit of the Act really meant. 'Either an Act in any or all of its sections, applies, or it does not', observed Madgavkar, J. 'To apply it in the spirit but not in the letter is beyond the power of the courts'..... With respect we agree with this criticism made by Mr. Justice Madgavkar."

What the Full Bench was dealing with was the question whether under the wat hukums of the Kolhapur State, the sanadi inam land which was impartible reverts to the State on the death of the holder, and after an examination of all the wat hukums it expressed the view that whatever the restrictions may be upon that land which does not make the property the absolute property of the watandar, that property does not revert to the State but descends to the next heir by the rule of primogeniture. We are not concerned with that aspect of the matter but only with the question whether the alienation in favour of the plaintiff's father was valid, and we think on the construction of the various wat hukums that it was not. We agree with the Full Bench that the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Watan Act) did not apply to the Kolhapur State so as to override the specific directions of the wat hukums which had legal and binding force in that State. It may be observed that notification of 3-3-1888 whereby certain laws in force in what was then British India were applied in toto with modifications but the Watan Act is applied only "to go according to the obvious meaning or import". What was perhaps intended was that where there were no specific hukums the general principles of the Watan Act may be applicable. At any rate in this case as there is a specific prohibition from alienating patel-ki-watan and other similar inams we need not rely on the provisions of the Bombay Act.

5. On the other question namely whether the suit is barred by limitation, we are of the view that it is not. The facts as narrated will show that in one case possession was given to the plaintiff's widow after the mortgage was redeemed. But the Collector under a misapprehension effected a forfeiture and took possession but subsequently perhaps realising the mistake, released the property but handed over possession to the wrong person namely the defendant. It is only after that, that a right would accrue to the plaintiff to file a suit for ejectment and for recovery of possession on the ground of his title. There is no validity in the submission made on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff was out of possession from 1928 till the date of suit — April 17, 1953. Article 142 has no application because the suit is not against the defendant on the ground that he has been dispossessed by him but against a person who is not entitled to possession. The defendant did not dispossess the plaintiff, and as such Article 142 is not applicable at all. In any case, it is not necessary to go into this question in any great detail, because in the view we have taken upholding the defendant's plea that the said alienation is void the plaintiff's suit must fail.

6. The appeal is accordingly allowed, the judgment and decree of the High Court, set aside and that of the trial court, restored with costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

J. M. SHELAT, C. A. VAIDIALINGAM
AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

Ramchandra Shukla, Appellant v. Shree Mahadeoji and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1393 of 1967, D/- 15-10-1969.

Hindu Law — Trust — Religious or charitable purpose — Dedication — Essentials — Dedication for purpose of promoting games not as part of education of those participating but for promotion of games simpliciter — Purpose is not charitable — Trust created for maintaining Akhara though idols and Tasweer installed, held, was not a religious Trust. Decision of High Court (All) D/- 5-8-65, Reversed.

A dedication of property for a religious or a charitable purpose can, according to Hindu law, be validly made orally and no writing is necessary to create an endowment except where it is created by a will. It can be made by a gift inter vivos or by a bequest or by a ceremonial or relinquishment. An appropriation of property for specific religious or charitable purposes is all that is necessary for a valid dedication. A trust in the sense in which it is understood in English law is unknown in the Hindu system. Hindu piety found expression in gifts to idols, to religious institutions and for all purposes considered meritorious in the Hindu social and religious system. Therefore, although Courts in India have for a long time adopted the technical meaning of charitable trusts and charitable purposes which the Courts in England have placed upon the term 'charity' in the Statute of Elizabeth, and therefore, all purposes which according to English law are charitable will be charitable under Hindu law, the Hindu concept of charity is so comprehensive that there are other purposes in addition which are recognised as charitable purposes. Hence, what are purely religious purposes and what religious purposes will be charitable purposes must be decided according to Hindu notions and Hindu Law. AIR 1957 SC 797 & AIR 1922 PC 123 & AIR 1953 SC 491, Rel. on. (Para 16)

A dedication for the promotion of a particular game or sport is not a charitable trust under the Hindu Law. The decisions lay down a distinction between cases where the object of the dedication was the promotion of games as part of the education of those who participate in them and cases where the object was promotion of games simpliciter, the former only having been upheld on the ground that such promotion or encouragement is part of the educational training and the latter not having been upheld. 1891 AC 531 & 1895-2 Ch 649 & (1932) 1 Ch 133 & 1915 (2) Ch 284 & (1945) 114 LJ Ch 1, Ref.; AIR 1939 PC 208 & AIR 1944 PC 88 & AIR 1959 Cal 296, Dist.

Where a settler, settled some properties for establishment of an Akhara and installed two idols and one Taswir in order to attract wrestlers of both communities viz., Hindus and Muslims.

Held, on construction of the deed, that the trust was not a religious trust in favour of the idols and the Tasweer, the dominant intention of the settler was to set up and maintain an Akhara, the said two idols as also the tasweer of Hazrat Ali having been installed there only to attract wrestlers of the two communities.

SHELAT, J.— This appeal, by certificate, is directed against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Allahabad D/- 5-8-1965 and relates to a piece of land together with buildings thereupon including an Akhara (wrestling ground). The property is situate in Kanpur and bears at present Municipal No. 26/72, its original No. being 26/30.

2. Sometime prior to 1830, one Mani Ram, well-known during his life-time as a wrestler, purchased a groveland with trees standing thereon. Whether he purchased one such groveland and divided it into two, or purchased two such grovelands and amalgamated them into one is not quite certain. Along with this land he was possessed of other properties adjacent to the said groveland. It appears that being himself a wrestler and fond of that sport Mani Ram purchased the said groveland for setting up and maintaining an Akhara where wrestlers of both Hindu and Muslim communities could come for wrestling. Besides the income from the said groveland, Mani Ram spent large amounts for promoting wrestling and to that end made a number of disciples.

3. He had by his first wife six sons and a seventh son, Mangali Prasad, a wrestler of repute, from his second wife, Rahas Kaur. By a deed of partition dated June 23, 1830 he divided all his properties into eight shares giving one share to each of his seven sons and retained the 8th share for himself and the said Rahas Kaur. This 8th share included the said groveland on which stood the said Akhara as also certain other structures. The Akhara ground was bounded by a compound wall with an archgate to enter into. It appears that with the object of attracting wrestlers he installed on the archgate an idol of Mahabirji, a Shiv Lingam over a small room which stood next to the said gate, and a tasweer of Hazrat Ali. The two idols and the tasweer were obviously intended to give a religious bias to the Akhara, the first two to attract Hindu wrestlers and the third to attract Muslim wrestlers. The said deed of partition stated with regard to the $\frac{1}{8}$ th share and the said groveland that none of his seven sons would have any interest or right in them as the "one-eighth ($\frac{1}{8}$ th) share and the grove, which is a waqf property and which I, the executant, have taken for myself. I, the executant and my second wedded wife shall remain owner thereof till our lifetime." It would thus appear that even before 1830 Mani Ram had already dedicated the said groveland for the purposes of the said Akhara and that was why he referred to it as waqf property. Mani Ram managed the said groveland in the aforesaid manner using the income thereof for the said Akhara. On his death the property came under the management of his widow, the said Rahas Kaur. On May 12, 1862 Rahas Kaur made a will in which after reciting the partition deed of 1830 she stated as follows:

"He (Mani Ram) dedicated two groves — situate in Philkhana Bazar, which has Asthan of Mahadeoji and Mahabir and Akhara and tasweer of Hazrat Ali — The Akhara and Asthan — up to this day are continuing as heretofore, and Mangli Prasad, my son, is unparalleled in wrestling. In order that it may continue — I execute a will that (paper torn) shall be spent over it as mentioned in the will of my husband. The Akhara and Asthan shall continue as heretofore".

The will then provided that the management of the Akhara and the Asthan should remain with Mangli Prasad and authorised Mangli Prasad to appoint managers after him from the issues of Mani Ram and thus the management should go on from generation to generation.

4. From a deed of lease dated June 28, 1862, executed by one Mst. Teja, it appears that the said groveland was given on lease to her at the annual rent of Rs. 23 by Mangli Prasad. The deed of lease also described the said groveland as having "Asthan of Mahadeoji and Mahabir and Akhara and tasweer of Hazrat Ali" and as having been dedicated to them.

5. In 1862, one Bansgopal filed suit No. 490 of 1862 against Mangli Prasad and others for partition and for $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the said groveland. Mangli Prasad filed a written statement therein explaining how the groveland was purchased by Mani Ram from out of his own funds and how he had dedicated it and referred to the said partition between Mani Ram and his sons. He also described how after Mani Ram's death in 1849, the property was administered first by Rahas Kaur and after her death under the directions of her said will by him. Mangli Prasad in this written statement denied that the plaintiff in that suit had any right or interest in the said groveland, the same having been dedicated by Mani Ram for the purposes aforesaid.

6. It appears that after Mangli Prasad's death his widow, Janki Kaur, entered into possession of the said property. From the judgment in First Appeal No. 279 of 1901 of the High Court of Allahabad dated December 23, 1903 it would appear that Janki Kaur left a will in favour of one Kishan Sarup and on the latter claiming the property Mangli Prasad's daughter, Sheodei Kaur, filed a suit for a declaration of her right of possession to the said property. That judgment has some bearing on the question as to the nature of the property in this appeal as it clearly stated that the groveland in question was an endowed property, and that therefore, Sheodei Kaur could not claim that property by inheritance, but was entitled to the possession thereof as the manager since Mangli Prasad had not appointed any one as such manager. By this judgment the High Court declared that "as regards the two grovelands and Akhara — we declare that the plaintiff is entitled to be the manager of the said property". From the description in the decree of the property declared by the High Court as the endowed property there can remain no room for doubt that the endowed property consisted of the two grovelands and the enclosure known as Baug-Akhara.

7. The property came into possession of Ishwar Narain, the son of the said

Sheodei Kaur, in 1906. In 1914 he applied to the Kanpur Municipality for permission to build a theatre in a part of the Baug-Akhara and in September 1915 he executed a mortgage to secure repayment of a loan of Rs. 6,000/- he had borrowed to complete the said theatre. Though the Akhara and the Asthan continued to be maintained by him, it appears that he treated the endowed property as belonging to him. In or about 1937 the Improvement Trust of Kanpur acquired the whole of the property which consisted of the said two grovelands, Baug-Akhara and the structures standing thereon and the property lying outside and around them. The award of the Collector dated February 19, 1937 shows that for the entire property compensation was calculated at Rs. 94,934/-. Ishwar Narain, thereafter, filed a reference under Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. Pending the reference, a compromise was entered into between the Improvement Trust and Ishwar Narain under which in consideration of the latter not pressing the reference the Improvement Trust agreed to sell to him the portion corresponding to the said endowed property for Rs. 25,000/-. In accordance with this compromise, the said land together with the Akhara, the Asthan, the said theatre and certain other structures were conveyed to Ishwar Narain who was paid Rs. 94,934/- less Rs. 25,000/- as compensation for the rest of the acquired property. Ishwar Narain died in 1948 having prior thereto made his will dated November 11, 1947, claiming therein that on the death of his mother, the said Sheodei Kuar, he had become the absolute owner of the said property and bequeathed the said property to Balaji and Ram Chandra, the sons of his sister, Narayani Devi, with directions to them to maintain the said Akhara and the Asthan.

8. The principal question which was agitated before the Trial Court was as to the existence of a valid trust and the nature of possession of Mani Ram during his lifetime and his successors thereafter. To the latter part of the question, the answer of the Trial Court was that possession of the property in question by Mani Ram and those who came into possession after him was that of managers or trustees. As to the first part of the question, the Trial Court held:

"The next part of the issue is about the endowment being valid It is true that Mani Ram Pande was not competent to make a dedication in favour of Hazrat Ali but he had not done so in this case. The various documents referred above do not prove that the dedication was made in favour of Hazrat Ali or even Mahadeoji and Mahabirji. Wherever there is an allegation of the dedication it is mentioned that the Ahata in question is a dedicated property and there are "Asthana" of Mahadev Ji and tasweer of Hazrat Ali and also an Akhara. It means that the dedication was not made in favour of any juristic person such as Mahadev Ji or Mahabir Ji or even to the Akhara or Hazrat Ali. No dedication even in favour of Akhara could have been made as the Akhara was also not a juristic person. The intention of Mani Ram Pande, as appears from the partition deed, Ex. 6, was that the dedication was in favour of a trustee or manager, the objects of which was to maintain the Akhara and the worshipping of Mahabirji and Hazrat Ali by the wrestlers of the two communities, Hindus and Muslims. The main purpose of dedication was the maintenance of the Akhara which was meant for the wrestlers of both the communities." In this view the Trial Court decreed the suit and directed the appellants to hand over possession and pay Rs. 23,000/- as mesne profits in addition to Rs. 1,100/- a month as further mesne profits for the period pending the suit.

9. In appeal against the judgment and decree of the Trial Court, the High Court took the view that though there was no deed of dedication available the evidence on record was clear that Mani Ram had dedicated the said property, that he and those who succeeded him right upto Ishwar Narain held the properties as trustees or managers, that the said judgment of the High Court of Allahabad of 1903 also held that the said Sheodei Kuar was to hold the property in the capacity of a manager, and lastly, that the dedication was in favour of the two idols of Shri Mahadeoji and Mahabirji. In this connection the High Court expressed itself in the following terms:

"It may be that establishing an Akhara is not a religious or a charitable purpose. But this was not the only object of the trust now in question. There was an Asthan in addition to the Akhara. Dedication of property for the benefit of an idol is recognized in Hindu law as religious object. Mr. V. P. Misra further contended that Mani Ram was not competent to create a trust for the benefit of Hazrat Ali. On this point, the learned Civil Judge observed that Mani Ram was not competent to make dedication in Hazrat Ali's favour. But Hazrat Ali is not the sole plaintiff in this case. Sri Mahabirji, Sri Mahadeoji and Hazrat Ali have come to Court as co-plaintiffs. If the dedication in Hazrat Ali's favour cannot be recognized, there should be no difficulty in treating the endowment as a trust for the benefit of Mahadeoji and Mahabirji. The decree passed by the Trial Court can well be treated as a decree in favour of Sri Mahadeoji and Sri Mahabirji only."

10. In disputing the correctness of the High Court's judgment and decree, Dr. Agarwala for the appellants raised the following contentions: (1) that the endowment was in respect of the grove and not the groveland, i.e., only of the income from the trees which existed during Mani Ram's lifetime; (2) that on acquisition of the entire property including the Akhara-buag by the Improvement Trust, the trust, in any event, was extinguished and the purchase by Ishwar Narain after the acquisition from the improvement Trust did not and could not revive the trust; (3) that the trust was invalid by reason of one of its objects being the image or tasweer of Hazrat Ali, and (4) that the dominant object of the trust was to establish and maintain in perpetuity the said Akhara, which object in Hindu Law is neither religious nor charitable, and therefore, the trust was not a valid trust.

11. So far as the first and the second contentions are concerned, we have no difficulty in rejecting them. The documents on record as also the evidence as to the conduct of Mani Ram and those who held the property after him clearly show that Mani Ram dedicated the groveland and not merely the trees standing thereon. The purchase of part of the said property after its acquisition was from out of the compensation received by Ishwar Narain and not out of his personal funds, so that if the trust was in law a valid one, the property purchased by him out of the trust funds would be stamped with the trust and he would in that event be holding that property as a trustee or manager and not as an owner.

12. The question, therefore, on which the result of this appeal would turn is whether the trust created by Mani Ram and which he referred to in the said deed of partition was a valid trust recognised in public benefit would not be the determining factor, but the Hindu notions of what a religious or a charitable purpose is. The Court further held that to the extent that any purpose is claimed to be a valid one for perpetual dedication on the ground of religious merit though lacking in public benefit, it must be shown to have a Shastraic basis so far as Hindus are concerned. To the argument that new religious practices and beliefs may have since then grown up and obtained recognition, the Court answered that if they are to be accepted as being sufficient for valid perpetual dedication they should have obtained wide recognition and constituted the religious practice of a substantially large class of persons and that the heads of religious purposes determined by belief in acquisition of religious merit cannot be allowed to be widely enlarged consistently with public policy and the needs of modern society. In the result, the Court confirmed the High Court's view that the settlement was invalid.

Hindu law as religious and/or charitable. The principle of law applicable to trusts made by Hindus is succinctly stated by this Court in Saraswathi Ammal v. Rajagopal Ammal, 1954 SCR 277= (AIR 1953 SC 491). A Hindu widow there settled certain properties for the following trusts, (1) expenses in connection with the daily pooja of the samadhi where her husband's body was entombed in accordance with his last wishes and the salary of the person conducting the said pooja; (2) Gurupooja and annadhanam to be performed annually at the samadhi on the anniversary day of his death; and (3) any balance left over after meeting the above expenses to be spent for matters connected with education. The contention was that though the first object was not a religious object, the performance of Gurupooja and the feeding at the annual shraddha and the utilisation of the balance, if any, for educational purposes were the main destination of income, and therefore, the main object of the settlement and that accordingly the dedication was valid. This contention was negatived and it was held that notwithstanding that the major portion of the income may have to be spent for Gurupooja and annadhanam in connection with the annual shraddha, the dominant purpose of the dedication was the samadhi kainkarivam, i.e., the worship of and at the tomb. The validity or otherwise of the dedication, therefore, had to be determined on that footing and not as though it was dedication for the performance of the annual shraddha on a substantial scale or for annadhanam as such. It was held that it did not make any difference that the surplus was to be utilised for educational purposes. That surplus was contingent, indefinite as well as dependent on the uncontrolled discretion of the manager as to the scale on which he chose to perform the services at the samadhi. The dominant purpose of the settlement thus being the pooja of and at the samadhi, the validity of the settlement had to be decided on that footing, namely, whether such trust was recognized in Hindu Law. On that question the Court relied on a passage from Mayne's Hindu Law, (11th Edn.) at p. 192, which states that what are purely religious purposes and what religious purposes will be charitable must be entirely decided according to Hindu law and Hindu notions. The Court observed that in finding out such purposes, the insistence of English Law on the element of actual or assumed

13. There being no deed of endowment, the intention of Mani Ram in settling the property in question has to be principally gathered from the said deed of partition and the said will of Rahas Kaur, the rest of the documents executed by Mangli Prasad and others being useful only in aid of the interpretation of that deed of partition and the said will. There can be no doubt whatsoever that Mani Ram, being an eminent wrestler and fond of that game, purchased out of his own money the said groveland for the purpose of setting up an Akhara thereon. The question then would be whether he settled that property upon trust, and if so, for what trust.

14. As already seen, Mani Ram recorded in the said partition deed the fact of his having partitioned the property into eight shares, his having given one share to each of his seven sons and having retained the eighth share for himself and his second wife and the said groveland as waqf property. The deed, however, does not set out the purpose or purposes for which the said groveland was regarded by him as waqf property. But it does show that he regarded that property as already dedicated. The purposes for which the groveland was so dedicated are to be found in the said will of Rahas Kaur, wherein she has in clear terms stated that Mani Ram had dedicated the groveland "which has Asthan of Mahadeo Ji and Mahabir Ji and Akhara and tasweer of Hazrat Ali, that the Akhara and the Asthan were upto that date maintained and that they should continue as heretofore. The will thus provides a key to the mind of Mani Ram who, as aforesaid, had purchased the said property and set up thereon the said wrestling arena. Obviously, he was anxious that wrestlers of both Hindu and Muslim communities should take part in that Akhara. It is equally obvious that to attract wrestlers from both the communities he installed in that Akhara the tasweer of Hazrat Ali and the idols of Shri Mahadeo and Mahabir, the two patron deities of wrestling. Once these idols were put up in the Akhara, their worship had to be provided for, for, it is well known amongst Hindus that it is irreligious to let such idols remain unworshipped. It is not possible to know from the evidence as to where Hazrat Ali's tasweer was installed, but it is clear from the evidence that the idol of Mahabirji was located at the top of the archgate which led into the Akhara and the Shiva Lingam was installed over a small room built next to the gate. Clearly, the purpose of installing the two idols and the tasweer was to enable the wrestlers to pay their homage and salutations to the patron deities of the game before entering into the wrestling arena. The dominant object of the dedication was thus the Akhara and the Asthan of God Shiva and Mahabir, spoken of in the will of Rahas Kaur, was only an adjunct to the Akhara. There is evidence, no doubt, to show that pooja and shringar of the two idols were performed. But that apparently was because the idols once installed could not be left unworshipped. On these facts we are inclined to take the view that the dominant object of the dedication was the Akhara and the said idols and the tasweer were installed only to attract persons of both the communities to the Akhara and to provide for them the facility for invoking the divine benefaction before they participated in wrestling. As laid down in Saraswathi Ammal's case, 1954 SCR 277=(AIR 1953 SC 491), it is on this footing that the validity or otherwise of the trust has to be considered.

15. It must be made clear at very outset that although the will of Rahas Kaur provided that persons who are to manage the trust were to be in the first instance her son, Mangli Prasad, and later on those appointed by him from amongst the issues of Mani Ram, the trust was obviously not a private but a public trust in the sense that it was for the benefit of those who are devoted to the sport of wrestling irrespective of whether they are Hindus or Muslims. But the contention was that in spite of the trust being a public trust, it was not one recognised by Hindu Law as being a religious and/or a charitable one. As stated earlier, the fact that the Akhara ground had the two idols installed in it makes no difference as the dominant object of the dedication was the Akhara and not the worship of the idols or the tasweer of Hazrat Ali.

16. A dedication of property for a religious or a charitable purpose can, according to Hindu Law, be validly made orally and no writing is necessary to create an endowment except where it is created by a will. (cf. Dasaratharami Reddi v. D. Subba Rao, 1957 SCR 1122 at page 1128=(AIR 1957 SC 797 at p. 800). It can be made by a gift inter vivos or by a bequest or by a ceremonial or relinquishment. An appropriation of property for specific religious or charitable purposes is all that is necessary for a valid dedication. As stated by the Privy Council in Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami Ayyar, 48 Ind App 302 at p. 311=(AIR 1922 PC 123 at p. 126) a trust in the sense in which it is understood in English law is unknown in the Hindu system. Hindu piety found expression in gifts to idols, to religious institutions and for all purposes considered meritorious in the Hindu social and religious system. Therefore, although Courts in India have for a long time adopted the technical meaning of charitable trusts and charitable purposes which the Courts in England have placed upon the term 'charity' in the Statute of Elizabeth, and therefore, all purposes which according to English law are charitable will be charitable under Hindu law, the Hindu concept of charity is so comprehensive that there are other purposes in addition which are recognised as charitable purposes. Hence, what are purely religious purposes and what religious purposes will be charitable purposes must be decided according to Hindu notions and Hindu law.

17. As observed by Mukherjea in Hindu Law and Religious and Charitable Trust (2nd Edn.), p. 11, there is no line of demarcation in the Hindu system between religion and charity. Indeed, charity is regarded as part of religion, for, gifts both for religious and charitable purposes are impelled by the desire to acquire religious merit. According to Pandit Pran-nath Saraswati these fell under two heads, Istha and Purta. The former meant sacrifices and sacrificial gifts and the latter meant charities. Among the Istha acts are Vedic sacrifices, gifts to the priests at the time of such sacrifices, preservations of Vedas, religious austerity, rectitude, Vaisnavdev sacrifices and hospitality. Among the Purta acts are construction and maintenance of temples, tanks, wells, planting of groves, gifts of food, dharamshalas, places for drinking water, relief of the sick, and promotion of education and learning. (cf. Pandit Prannath Saraswati's Hindu Law of Endowments, 1897, pp. 26-27). Istha and Purta are in fact regarded as the common duties of the twice born class. (Cf. Pandit Saraswati, p. 27).

18. Though Pandit Saraswati sought to enumerate from different texts various acts which would fall under either of the two categories of Istha and Purta, no exhaustive list of charitable purposes can be possible as the expression 'Istha' and 'Purta' themselves are elastic and admit no rigid definition. As times advance, more and more categories of acts considered to be beneficial to the public would be recognised depending on the needs and beliefs of the time. (Cf. Mukherjea, p. 74). Neither the Statute of Elizabeth nor the Law relating to Superstitious Uses was applied at any time to India. Consequently, the English decisions based on one or the other of these statutes would not be applicable nor can they be commensurate with the conditions prevailing in India though those decisions might undoubtedly be of some guidance.

19. Is then the trust for the maintenance and up-keep of a wrestling ground a valid charitable trust? The evidence shows that Mani Ram, being personally fond of wrestling had a number of disciples and attracted several wrestlers to the Akhara. But that, according to Rahas Kaur's will, he did out of his own love for this particular sport and by spending large amounts out of his own moneys. The only thing which seems to have been done by his successors was to hold wrestling tournaments and award prizes to the successful ones out of the income of the property and to maintain the Akhara. It may be that people might have come to these tournaments and even practised wrestling but there is no evidence whatsoever that wrestling was taught or its knowledge was imparted to those wishing to know it. At best, therefore, it can be said that by maintaining the Akhara and holding therein the tournaments wrestling was sought to be encouraged or fostered. But there is nothing to show that the promotion of a particular game either for entertainment of the public or as encouragement to those who take part in it has ever been recognised as a charitable trust according to Hindu Law. Neither Pandit Prannath Saraswati, nor Mukherjea, nor Mayne suggests in his treatise that a dedication for the promotion of a particular game or sport is charitable trust under the Hindu law.

20. In England it is held not to be so, of course within the scope of the Statute of Elizabeth as interpreted in Commrs. for Special Purposes of the Income-tax v. Pemsel, (1891) AC 531 at p. 583. Thus, In re, Notage; Jones v. Palmer, 1895-2 Ch 649 a gift for encouraging the sport of yacht-racing was not upheld as a charitable trust, though as Lindley, L. J., remarked every healthy sport is good for the nation. In re, Hadden; Public Trustee v. More, 1932-1 Ch 133 while acknowledging the principle laid down in In re Notage, 1895-2 Ch 649 the Court held that a trust providing for recreation grounds and parks for the benefit of working classes was valid on the ground, however, that such uses were intended for the health and welfare of the working classes. So too, in In re Mariette; Mariette v. Governing Body of Aldenham School, 1915-2 Ch 284 where bequests for building squash racket courts or some similar purpose within the school premises and for a prize to the winner in the school athletics were held valid on the ground of its being essential in a school of learning that there should be organised games as part of the daily routine. It is clear from the judgment of Eve, J., that he upheld the bequest on the ground not of promoting athletic games but on the ground that the object of the charity was education in the school and that training in such games would be part of the educational activities of the school. There is, however, one decision of a marginal nature, if we may say so, namely, in Daley v. Llyods Bank Ltd., (1945) 114 LJ Ch 1 where a gift for holding an annual chess tournament limited to boys and youngmen under the age of 21 years residing in a particular locality was upheld. But that was done after a good deal of hesitation and only by basing it on the ground that training of youth in a game of skill which also required concentration was part of their education.

21. Coming to the cases in India, the decisions in the Trustees of the Tribune Press v. Commr. of Income-tax, 66 Ind App 241 = (AIR 1939 PC 208); All India Spinners Association v. Commr. of Income-tax, ILR (1945) Bom 153=(AIR 1944 PC 88) and Cricket Association Bengal v. Commr. of Income-tax, Calcutta, AIR 1959 Cal 296 were all cases under Section 4 (3) (i) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 and therefore would have no relevance to the present case arising under the Hindu Law.

22. The decisions above referred to thus lay down a distinction between cases where the object of the dedication was the promotions of games as part of the education of those who participate in them and cases where the object was promotion of games simpliciter, the former only having been upheld on the ground that such promotion or encouragement is part of the educational training and the latter not having been upheld. In the case of Cricket Association, Bengal, AIR 1959 Cal 296 though arrangements of cricket tournaments of both domestic and foreign teams were said to promote and foster love for a healthy game, Section 4 (3) (i) was held not to be applicable.

23. On a reading of the relevant documents on record and the oral testimony led by the parties we are not in a position to agree with the High Court that the trust created by Mani Ram was a religious trust in favour of the two idols of Lord Shiva and Mahabirji. As aforesaid, our conclusion is that the dominant intention of the settlor was to set up and maintain an Akhara, the said two idols as also the tasweer of Hazrat Ali having been installed there only to attract wrestlers of the two communities. That being the position, reluctant though we are, particularly in view of the fact that the said Akhara has been maintained for nearly a century, we find it extremely difficult, in the absence of any authority, textual or by way of a precedent, to hold that the dedication in question was for either a religious or charitable purpose as recognised by Hindu Law. For the reasons aforesaid we are constrained to allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and decree passed by the High Court. In the circumstances of the case, however, we consider it just that there should be no order as to costs. Collector will be at liberty to recover the Court-Fees payable on the plaint from the next friend of the plaintiffs.

Appeal allowed.

(V 57 C 102)

J. C. SHAH AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.
Delhi Transport Undertaking, Appellant v. Zamindar Motor Transport Co. (P) and another, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1324 of 1966, D/- 8-10-1969.

(A) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Sections 48 and 57 — Scope — Application for variation of conditions of permit for including new route or area — Provisions of Section 57 (3), (4) and (5) cannot be ignored.

By Section 48 (3) (xxi) it is open to the Regional Transport Authority, after giving notice of not less than one month, (a) to vary the conditions of the permit, and (b) to attach to the permit further conditions. But an application for variation of the conditions of the permit for including a new route or routes or a new area has to be treated as an application for the grant of a new permit under Section 57 (8) of the Act and the State Transport Authority cannot ignore the provisions of Section 57 sub-sections (3), (4) and (5). (Para 11)

(B) Municipalities — Delhi Municipal Corporation Act (66 of 1957), Sections 288, 289 — Scope — Plying vehicles by Corporation over entire area of Union Territory of Delhi — Sections do not dispense with compliance with provisions of Motor Vehicles Act — (Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Section 57).

Sections 288 and 289 of the Delhi Municipal Corporation Act (66 of 1957) do not authorise the Corporation, without recourse to the Motor Vehicles Authorities, to ply its vehicles over the entire Union Territory of Delhi. Section 288 merely authorises the Corporation to take steps from time to time for providing or securing or promoting an efficient, adequate, economical and properly co-ordinated system of road transport services; it does not dispense with compliance with the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939. Section 289 merely confers upon the Corporation power to acquire services operated by others. But in exercising that power, the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act, insofar as the exercise of the power is required to be made in consonance with the provisions of the Act, is not dispensed with.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: The Delhi Municipal Corporation took over the organisation of the Delhi Transport Authority established under Section 3 of the Delhi Transport Authority Act 13 of 1950, and administered it in the name of Delhi Transport Undertaking—hereinafter called D. T. U. Even though the jurisdiction of the Delhi Municipal Corporation extends only to the municipal area, by Section 288 of Act 66 of 1957 it is authorised to set up transport services for passengers and goods in the entire Union Territory of Delhi and even outside by virtue of Sections 288 and 292 of the Act.

2. The respondent Company held in 1960 permits on three routes— (1) Delhi-Bawana-Narela, (2) Delhi-Bawana-Auchandi and (3) Delhi-Bawana-Kharkhoda. Since May 9, 1956, the Delhi Transport Authority and its successor D. T. U. were holding stage carriage permits valid for certain areas but not including the routes on which the respondent Company held permits to ply its stage carriages. On October 19, 1959 the D. T. U. addressed a letter to the Secretary State Transport Authority, Delhi, stating that it considered "it necessary to approach x x with the request to place the matter before State Transport Authority x x to validate" its road permits to cover the entire Union Territory of Delhi. The State Transport Authority treated this letter as an application for validation of the existing permits so as to cover the entire area of the Union Territory of Delhi. After considering the objections filed by existing operators on the routes outside the Municipal Corporation area, the State Transport Authority passed the following order on February 10, 1960:

"The representatives of the D. T. U. point out that under the Municipal Act they were required to provide efficient and adequate services in the entire territory of Delhi and therefore the area of their permits should be altered accordingly. The authority considered the request of the D. T. U. reasonable. It was decided to alter the permits and make them valid for entire territory of Delhi but they should be informed that they should not operate new services parallel to the existing services of the private operators without the approval of the State Transport Authority”.

3-4. On June 17, 1961 the D. T. U. issued a circular that it was decided to operate its services on Delhi Bawana route with effect from June 19, 1961, and informed the State Transport Authority of its intention to do so. The respondent Company lodged a protest with the State Transport Authority and asked the Authority to order that the running of the proposed service be stopped, and in the meantime the procedure under the Motor Vehicles Act be complied with, and an opportunity for making representations against the proposals of the D. T. U. be afforded. On June 20, 1961 the State Transport Authority gave notice to the respondent Company that the application made by the D. T. U. for operating services between Delhi-Bawana will be considered by the State Transport Authority in its meeting to be held on June 21, 1961 at 11 a. m. On June 21, 1961 the respondent Company wrote a letter to the Secretary, State Transport Authority intimating that it was not aware of the contents of the application of the D. T. U., that the application had not been published and objections and representations had not been invited, that the “notice of hearing was very short” and that proper opportunity for filing objections should be given after due publication of the application of the D. T. U. On June 21, 1961, the State Transport Authority resolved that:

“The Delhi Transport Undertaking already held permits for Delhi territory and they can ply on any route in the territory under these permits. No fresh permits are necessary. In the meeting held on 10-5-61, the State Transport Authority, while reviewing the requirements of services on various routes, decided that the Delhi Transport Undertaking should be asked to provide service on Delhi-Bawana-Narela route and if they are unable to do so, additional permits may be issued. Since the Delhi Transport Undertaking have started plying 2 buses x x x in public interest, the operation of such service was approved but there should be no overlapping of the timings of the services.”

5. On June 27, 1961, the respondent Company moved a petition in the High Court of Punjab at Delhi for a writ of prohibition restraining the D. T. U. from plying stage carriages on the three routes in respect of which the respondent Company was holding permits. This petition was dismissed by Pandit, J. holding that the conditions mentioned in the resolution dated February 10, 1960 that the D. T. U. would operate new services parallel to the existing services of the private operators after getting the approval of the State Transport Authority was merely in the nature of an administrative instruction and that the letter dated October 19, 1959 was validly treated as a formal application for grant of a new permit under Section 57 (8) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939. In appeal under the Letters Patent the judgment of Pandit, J., was reversed. The High Court held that the D. T. U. had applied to vary the conditions of its permit, by the inclusion of a new route or routes or a new area within the meaning of Section 57 (8) of the Act, and by the resolution dated February 10, 1960, the D. T. U. was not entitled to operate new services without the approval of the State Transport Authority; that such approval could be given after following the procedure prescribed by Sec. 57, sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) and not otherwise; that there was not even substantial compliance with the provisions of Section 46 of the Motor Vehicles Act and Rule 47 of the Delhi Motor Vehicles Rules; and that in dispensing with the requirements of Section 57 the State Transport Authority acted illegally. With special leave, the D. T. U. has appealed to this Court.

6. By Section 45 of the Motor Vehicles Act 1939, every application for a permit shall be made to the Regional Transport Authority of the region in which it is proposed to use the vehicle or vehicles. By Section 46 an application for a permit in respect of a service of stage carriage or to use a particular motor vehicle as a stage carriage shall, as far as may be, contain the particulars set out in Clauses (a) to (f). Section 47 provides that the Regional Transport Authority shall, in considering an application for a stage carriage permit, have regard to the matters specified in Clauses (a) to (f) of sub-section (1) and shall take into consideration any representation made by persons providing passenger transport facilities along or near the proposed route or area. Sub-section (1) of Section 48 provides that subject to the provisions of Section 47, a Regional Transport Authority may, on an application made to it under Section 46, grant a stage carriage permit in accordance with the application or with such modifications as it deems fit or refuse to grant such a permit. By sub-section (2) it is provided that every stage carriage permit shall be expressed to be valid only for a specified route or routes or for a specified area. By sub-section (3) it is provided that the Regional Transport Authority may grant a permit for a stage carriage of a specified description or for one or more particular stage carriages and may, subject to any rules that may be made under the Act, attach to the permit any one or more of the conditions Nos. (i) to (xxiii) set out in that sub-section, and by condition (xxi) the Regional Transport Authority may, after giving notice of not less than one month—(a) vary the conditions of the permit; and (b) attach to the permit further conditions. Sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 57 provide:

“(2) an application for a stage carriage permit x x x shall be made not less than six weeks before the date on which it is desired that the permit shall take effect, or, if the Regional Transport Authority appoints dates for the receipt of such applications, on such dates.

(3) On receipt of an application for a stage carriage permit x x x the Regional Transport Authority shall make the application available for inspection at the office of the Authority and shall publish the application or the substance thereof in the prescribed manner together with a notice of the date before which representations in connection therewith may be submitted and the date, not being less than thirty days from such publication, on which, and the time and place at which the application and any representations received will be considered.

Provided x x x x x
Under sub-section (4) representations made in writing in connection with an application for grant of a permit, before the appointed date, and a copy whereof is furnished to the applicant, only may be considered. By sub-section (5) the representations made under sub-section (3) must be disposed of at a public hearing at which the applicant and the person making the representation shall have an opportunity of being heard either in person or by a duly authorised representative. Sub-section (8) provides:

“An application to vary the conditions of any permit, other than a temporary permit, by the inclusion of a new route or routes or a new area or, in the case of a stage carriage permit, by increasing the number of services above the specified maximum, x x x shall be treated as an application for the grant of a new permit.

Provided x x x x x x x x”

7. Rule 47 of the Delhi Motor Vehicles Rules provides that every application for a permit in respect of a transport vehicle shall be in one of the prescribed forms.

8. The proceedings taken by the State Transport Authority in making the decisions dated February 10, 1960, and June 21, 1961 were informal and also irregular. On October 19, 1959 the D. T. U. requested the Secretary, State Transport Authority, asking it to validate road permits held by the D. T. U. to cover the entire area of the Union Territory of Delhi. Such a request may be made only by an application in the prescribed form. After hearing objections thereto to the State Transport Authority by order dated February 10, 1960, validated the permits for the entire Union Territory of Delhi with a condition that the D. T. U. shall not operate new services parallel to the existing services of private operators without the approval of the State Transport Authority. Against this resolution no appeal was preferred by the respondents. By the resolution the permits were extended to make them valid for the entire territory of Delhi but subject to the condition that the D. T. U. was not to operate new services parallel to the existing services of the private operators. If thereafter it was intended to remove the condition, the prescribed procedure under Section 57 sub-secs. (3), (4) and (5) had to be followed, for, an application to vary the conditions of any permit, by the inclusion of a new route or routes or a new area, is by sub-section (8) required to be treated as an application for the grant of a new permit.

9. By the order dated February 10, 1960 the permits were extended throughout the Union Territory of Delhi, but the D. T. U. still required the permission of the State Transport Authority to ply its stage carriages on routes covered by the permits granted to the respondent Company. Before granting that permission it was necessary to publish the application and to invite and consider objections thereto. The D. T. U. did not even ask for permission of the State Transport Authority but merely intimated by letter dated June 17, 1967 that it will start service on the Delhi-Bawana route from June 19, 1961. After the D. T. U. started plying its stage carriages, the State Transport Authority gave intimation to the respondent Company and others that the application of the D. T. U. will be considered in its meeting to be held on June 21, 1961. And disregarding the protests raised by the respondent Company and others the State Transport Authority on June 21, 1961 ordered that the D. T. U. should be asked to provide service on Delhi-Bawana-Narela route, and if it was unable to do so, additional permits may be issued. There was no application for grant of permit for plying stage carriages under Section 57; there was no publication of a request by the D. T. U.; representations or objections were not invited; and no opportunity of a hearing to the objectors in the manner contemplated by the Act was given. The proceedings of the State Transport Authority were wholly irregular.

10. Mr. Daphtary appearing on behalf of the D. T. U. contended that the order dated February 10, 1960 which was made after hearing the objections of the respondent Company became final, and since no appeal was preferred, the D. T. U. was competent to extend its services with the approval of the State Transport Authority over the entire Union Territory of Delhi. The order dated June 21, 1961, merely extended the permits to cover the Union Territory of Delhi; it did not authorise the plying of stage carriages on routes already served by private operators. The existing operators were entitled to be heard when the condition in the permits of the D. T. U. was removed.

11. By Section 48 (3) (xxi) it is open to the Regional Transport Authority, after giving notice of not less than one month, (a) to vary the conditions of the permit, and (b) to attach to the permit further conditions. But an application was made by the D. T. U. for variation of the conditions of the permit including a new route or routes or a new area had to be treated as an application for the grant of a new permit under Section 57 (8) of the Act and the State Transport Authority could not ignore the provisions of Section 57 sub-sections (3), (4) and (5).

12. Sections 288 and 289 of the Delhi Municipal Corporation Act 66 of 1957 on which reliance was placed by Mr. Daphtary do not authorise the Corporation, without recourse to the Motor Vehicles Authorities, to ply its vehicles over the entire Union Territory of Delhi. Section 288 merely authorises the Corporation to take steps from time to time for providing or securing or promoting an efficient, adequate, economical and properly co-ordinated system of road transport services: it does not dispense with compliance with the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939. Section 289 enables the Delhi Transport Committee to take steps, amongst others to acquire in accordance with schemes prepared under the Act either compulsorily in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by bye-laws or by agreement, the whole or any part of any transport service operated by any other person to the extent to which the activities thereof consist of the operation of road transport services or ancillary services in the Union territory of Delhi or in any extended area, and to do all other things to facilitate the proper carrying on of the business of the Undertaking. But Section 289 merely confers upon the Corporation power to acquire services operated by others. But in exercising that power, the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act, insofar as the exercise of the power is required to be made in consonance with the provisions of the Act, are not dispensed with.

13. The D. T. U. was conscious of these requirements of the Motor Vehicles Act and had moved by an informal letter the State Transport Authority on October 19, 1959 for extension of its permits. But thereafter even without obtaining the concurrence of the State Transport Authority or its approval proceeded to start the services on the overlapping routes as from June 19, 1961.

14. In our judgment, the order passed by the State Transport Authority dated June 21, 1961 was without jurisdiction and must be set aside. We confirm the order passed by the High Court and dismiss this appeal.

15. The respondent Company sought to defend the appeal by filing an appearance at a very late stage. The Company has not even filed a statement of case. In the circumstances we direct that there will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 57 C 103)

M. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J., S. M. SIKRI, G. K. MITTER, A. N. RAY AND P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, JJ.

Rabindra Nath Bose and others, Petitioners v. Union of India and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 146 of 1967, D/- 9-10-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Articles 13, 14 and 16 — Article 13 has no retrospective operation — Appointments to posts of Income Tax Officers Class I Grade II and preparation of Seniority Lists of such officers under Seniority Rules of 1949 and 1950 — Question as to violation of Articles 14 and 16.

It is settled that Article 13 of the Constitution has no retrospective effect and therefore, any action taken before the commencement of the Constitution in pursuance of the provisions of any law which was a valid law at the time when such action was taken cannot be challenged and the law under which such action was taken cannot be questioned as unconstitutional and void on the score of its infringing the fundamental rights enshrined in Part III of the Constitution. AIR 1957 SC 397, Rel. on; AIR 1955 SC 624, Dist. (Para 26)

Held that the petitioners the confirmed Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax, could not, therefore, complain of the breach of Articles 14 and 16 in respect of these acts: (1) appointment of respondents to the posts of Income-tax Officers Class I Grade II Service (2) Seniority List of those Officers as existing on 1-1-1950 and (3) the Seniority Rules of 1949 and 1950 insofar as they had effect upto January 26, 1950. (Para 32)

The fact that the seniority list of the Officers was finally settled after the Constitution came into force, would not enable the petitioners to appeal to Articles 14 and 16; the rules applicable for preparing the seniority List being the Seniority Rules of 1949 and 1950. (Para 32)

(B) Constitution of India, Articles 32, 14, 16 — Inordinate delay — Seniority List of Income Tax Officers Class I Grade II — Changes effected in, on 1-8-1953 as a result of change in 1952 Seniority Rules — Petition filed after fifteen years attacking changes as violative of Arts. 14 and 16 held not maintainable.

LM/LM/F175/69/CWM/D

No relief can be given to petitioners who, without any reasonable explanation, approach Supreme Court under Art. 32 of the Constitution after inordinate delay. The highest Court in this land has been given Original Jurisdiction to entertain petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution. It could not have been the intention that Supreme Court would go into stale demands after a lapse of years. Though Article 32 is itself a guaranteed right, it does not follow from this that it was the intention of the Constitution makers that Supreme Court should discard all principles and grant relief in petitions filed after inordinate delay. (1969) 1 SCC 110 and AIR 1955 SC 3, Rel. on.

Where the changes were made in the Seniority List of Income-tax Officers Class I Grade II as a result of change in the 1952 Seniority Rules and the petition attacking the changes was filed fifteen years after the 1952 Rules were promulgated and effect given to them in the seniority list prepared on 1-8-1953, it will be unjust to deprive the officers of the rights which have accrued to them. Each person ought to be entitled to sit back and consider that his appointment and promotion effected a long time ago would not be set aside after the lapse of a number of years. (Para 35)

The fact that in respect of those matters representations were being received by the Government all the time was not sufficient to explain the delay. There is a limit to the time which can be considered reasonable for making representations. If the Government has turned down one representation, the making of another representation on similar lines will not explain the delay. (Para 36)

SIKRI, J.: 16 Officers of the Income-tax Department have filed this petition under Article 32 of the Constitution praying for various reliefs on the ground that their rights under Articles 14 and 16 have been infringed. They are all confirmed Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and respondents 6 to 39 are also confirmed Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax. Respondents 1 to 5 are the Union of India, Secretary, Ministry of Finance, Central Board of Direct Taxes, Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, and the Union Public Service Commission. The practical object of the petition is to gain some seniority so that they can be promoted as Commissioners of Income-tax earlier than the respondents 6-39. The petitioners were all confirmed as Assistant Commissioners in 1959. Apart from respondents 28, 29 and 30, all other respondents were confirmed in earlier years. In brief, the case of the petitioners is this: The Government in breach of the rules governing the service of Income-tax Officers Class I, Grade II, appointed respondents 6 to 39. Their initial appointments were irregular and illegal being outside the quota prescribed by Government for regulating recruitment to the service. Not only were they thus illegally absorbed into service but were also given preferential treatment in the matter of seniority in Class I Grade II itself and for further promotion to higher grades by framing rules which were discriminatory and which made hostile discrimination against Class I direct recruits like the petitioners. It is urged before us that their case is covered by the principle laid down by this Court in the case of S. G. Jaisinghani v. Union of India, 1967-2 SCR 703 =

(AIR 1967 SC 1427). These contentions are controverted by the respondents. The learned Attorney General further contends that (1) all acts which have been challenged in this petition happened before the advent of the Constitution and cannot be challenged under Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution; (2) the petition merits dismissal on the ground that there has been gross delay in bringing the petition; and (3) the relief which has now been claimed would be against the decision in Jaisinghani's case, 1967-2 SCR 703 = (AIR 1967 SC 1427) (Supra).

2. In order to appreciate the above contentions and the other points raised before us, it is necessary to set out the relevant facts chronologically.

3. Before September 29, 1944, when the re-organisation scheme was launched, the conditions of service and pay-scales of Income-tax Officers were different and the method of recruitment was also different in different Provinces. By letter dated 23-3-43, it was decided that pending the constitution of Class I and Class II Service of Income-tax Officers, the latter of which will include also officers hitherto called Assistant Income-tax Officers, the existing grade of Assistant Income-tax Officers should be designated as Income-tax Officers, Grade II. There was disparity not only in pay but also in prospects and conditions of service. The Government therefore felt it necessary to re-organise the entire service and to create a Central Service and uniform pay-scales for different constituent grades. The main idea was to create Class I cadre Officers Service and to make selection to it from the existing Class II officers. This re-organisation scheme was formulated in a letter dated 29-9-44 from the Government of India, addressed to all Commissioners of Income-tax. The Central Service Class I was to consist of Commissioners of Income-tax—(No. of posts 8— 7 permanent and 1 temporary). Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax—(No. of posts 378— 360 permanent and 18 temporary).

Income-tax Officers Grade I:

(No. of posts 151— 125 permanent and 26 temporary).

Income-tax Officers Grade II:

(No. of posts 183— 125 permanent and 63 temporary).

Class II was to consist of Income-tax Officers Grade III: (No. of posts 83— 9 permanent and 74 temporary).

4. Regarding Income-tax Officers Grade I (Class I Service) it was stated that these officers will be appointed by selection from Grade II which will come into being under the new scheme and till the re-organisation is complete from the existing Grade I of Income-tax Officers in Class II Service,

xx xxx xxx xx
xx xxx xxx xx
Regarding Income-tax Officers Grade II (Class I Service) — it was provided that—

2 (d) "Recruitment to Grade II will be made partly by promotion and partly by direct recruitment. 80 per cent of the vacancies arising in this Grade will be filled by direct recruitment via the Indian Audit and Accounts and Allied Services Examination. The remaining 20 per cent of vacancies will be filled by promotion on the basis of selection from Grade III (Class II Service) provided that suitable men upto the number required are available for appointment. Any surplus vacancies which cannot be filled by promotion for want of suitable candidates will be added to the quota of vacancies to be filled by direct recruitment via the Indian Audit and Accounts etc. Services Examination.

All direct appointment via the Indian Audit and Accounts and Allied Service Examination to Grade II will, during the period of the war, be subject to such general orders as have already been or may hereafter be issued by the Government of India with a view to safeguarding the interest of 'war service' candidates."

5. It is necessary also to set out Para 8 of the letter which is headed— 'General'—

"The new classification (insofar as it relates to Income-tax Officers, Grades I and II) indicated in paragraph I above will apply to officers who are recruited under the new scheme including those who are selected from the existing Grade I Income-tax Officers, Class II Service. The present Grade I income-tax Officers in Class II Service, who are not thus selected, and the officers who will be appointed to this grade before the introduction of the new scheme, will remain in Class II service. This service of Income-tax Officers will be ultimately abolished as soon as these officers leave their posts either by substantive promotion to Class I Service or by retirement or through other causes and the Class II Service will essentially consist only of Income-tax Officers, Grade III."

6. We may at this stage consider the question mooted at the Bar whether recruitment to the Service under the scheme was to be confined only to direct recruitment through the Examination and promotion from Grade I Class II service. As we read this scheme, it is quite clear that the intention was not to confine recruitment to the Service through these sources because from Para 3 'General', which we have reproduced above, it is quite evident that selections were to be made also from the existing Grade I Income-tax Officers Class II Service. This method of recruitment did not come within Para 2 (d) of the Scheme set out above as it was neither direct recruitment through combined competitive examination nor promotion from Class II Grade III Service. Therefore, the statement in the counter-affidavit of Mr. M. G. Thomas Ministry of Finance, "Recruitment to Grade II of Class I was to be made partly by direct recruitment (through the combined Competitive Examination as also selection from existing Grade I of Class II Service) and partly by promotion on the basis of selection from Class II (Grade III) Service", is quite correct. It is further stated that, 80 per cent of the vacancies were to be filled by direct recruitment and the remaining 20 per cent were to be filled by promotion by selection from Class II (Grade III) Service." .. It appears that selection from the existing Grade I of Class II Service was treated as a form of direct recruitment within the quota of 80 per cent mentioned above. This constitution of the New Service was by an executive order and there were no statutory rules governing the Service at this stage. On 29-9-1944 the Government wrote to the Federal Public Service Commission to approve of 100 officers considered suitable for selection to the new Class I Service of Income-tax Officers (Grade I). The Government also requested the Commission to recruit for the Class I, Grade II Income-tax Service 10 Officers on the result of the competitive examination that will be held in October 1944. Considering that there were 183 posts, permanent and temporary to be filled in by Income-tax officers Grade II, the number was insignificant. The idea seems to have been to take the officers from existing Grade I of Class II as far as possible as they had experience and the direct recruits would not be able to cope with the work for some years to come. On 26-5-1945, the Government framed rules for recruitment to the Income-tax Officers (Class I, Grade II) Service. These were conceded to be statutory rules in Jaisinghani's case, 1967-2 SCR 703 = (AIR 1967 SC 1427) (Supra). In the opening paragraph, it was stated that these rules were liable to alteration from year to year. Rules 3 and 4 read as follows:—

3. The services shall be recruited by the following methods:—

(i) By competitive examination held in India in accordance with Part II of these Rules.

(ii) By promotion on the basis of selection from Grade III (Class II Service) in accordance with Part III of these Rules.

4. Subject to the provision of Rule 3, Government shall determine the methods or methods to be employed for the purpose of filling any particular vacancies, or such vacancies as may require to be filled during any particular period, and the number of candidates to be recruited by each method.

It is clear that this Service had already been constituted by an Order. It is remarkable that Rule 3 did not mention the third method of recruitment which was being followed at that time and which it was intended to follow for some time. It seems to us that the intention was that these rules would come into effect fully only when the Service had been completely re-organized, because otherwise we are unable to understand why the third method of recruitment which was being followed, was not mentioned. It may be that at that time sufficient number of men qualified under the other two categories were not available. The Government probably interpreted Rule 4 to mean that the recruitment by the methods mentioned in Rule 3 was not exclusive, and under Rule 4 the Government could decide whether particular vacancies could also be filled by selection from the existing Class II grade I service officers. That this was the understanding both of the Government and the Federal Public Service Commission, seems to be quite clear from the correspondence which has been brought to our notice.

7. On 8th November 1945, the Government wrote to the Federal Public Service Commission that— "In a like manner, it is proposed to continue promotions to the grade II of Class I also for the next two or three years from amongst those who were in service in the pre-existing Class II, Grade I, on the date of re-organisation even outside the 20 per cent limit fixed for such promotion in the orders regarding re-organisation. The Government feel that this will not interfere with direct recruitment via the examination. It is presumed that the Commission will not have any objection to the proposals in the immediately two preceding paragraphs."

This letter clearly shows that the Government was recruiting officers to grade II of class I from the pre-existing class II grade I, and they meant to continue this for the next two or three years. The Federal Public Service Commission replied on 23-5-46 as follows:—

"With reference to paragraphs 8 and 9 of your letter dated the 8th November, 1945, I am to say that the Commission will have no objection if during the next two or three years the names of a few more officers are put forward for consideration for promotion to grades I and II in Class I where special circumstances seem to justify such a course. They suggest, however, that this should be exceptional"

8. We may mention here that respondents 31 to 39 were appointed as I. T. Os Class I, grade II in 1945, respondents 11 and 25 in 1946, but the original date of appointment of respondent No. 25 is 1-6-47. All the petitioners were either appointed I. T. Os. Class I Grade II in 1946 or 1947. Respondents 6 to 10, 26, 27 and 28 were appointed in 1947.

9. On 3-1-47 the Government forwarded to the Secretary Federal Public Service Commission the names of officers then considered suitable for appointment to Class I, grades I and II. It was further stated that there were a large number of temporary posts in each grade and it may not be fair to limit promotions to the available permanent posts only as that might result in a large number of temporary men who may be eligible for higher scales of pay being kept down.

10. In Feb. 1949, in discussing the draft scheme for regulating the seniority of Income-tax officers, Class I, on an all-India basis, the Government explained that "there are still 51 old Class II, Grade I officers, who have not yet been selected to Class I, as almost all of them have been found unfit at three successive selections. As technically they still continue to hold Class I posts and block promotions of other deserving officers, it is proposed to make a final selection from them and revert those who are not considered fit for retention in Class I to Class II, grade III posts. These persons would be considered later for promotion to Class I posts along with others against the 20% vacancies reserved for departmental candidates." Thus, it appears that it was in 1949 that it was decided that final selections were to be made from the remaining Class II grade I officers by interviewing them to find their fitness for Class I Service.

11. Although the appointments, according to the petitioners, were irregular, they do not challenge the validity of the appointments but what they do challenge is the recognition of the date of appointments for the purpose of seniority. In other words, they say that we may treat an officer having been appointed as Class I, grade II, validly but for the purpose of seniority his appointment should be post-dated to a date when he would have been appointed had the 'quota rule' mentioned in Para 2 (d) of the Scheme dated 29-9-44, been fully implemented.

12. We may at this stage deal with this particular question. It seems to us that apart from the above limited concession, we cannot at this time declare that the appointments were invalid in any respect. Assuming that these appointments were made contrary to statutory Rules, the petitioners are incompetent to challenge the validity of these appointments for various reasons. Firstly these appointments were pre-Constitution appointments and they cannot be challenged in a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution. Secondly, there has been inordinate delay. A suit to challenge the validity of the appointments would be hopelessly time-barred, and the respondents have acquired various rights since their appointments. Thirdly, in Jaisinghani's case, 1967-2 SCR 703 = (AIR 1967 SC 1427) (Supra), this Court said that the order in that case "... will not affect such Class II officers who have been appointed permanently as Assistant Commissioners of Income Tax." We will presently give our reasons in detail for coming to this conclusion. To resume the narrative, the petitioners completed their probationary periods on different dates in 1949 and were confirmed as I. T. Os Class I, Grade II in 1949 and 1950, except petitioner No. 9 Shri D. N. Pande, who was confirmed on 22-12-51. Most of the respondents had already been con-

13. On 29-4-49 a meeting of the Departmental Promotion Committee took place and the Committee agreed that promotions to Income Tax Officers Class I Service, of officers recruited in 1944 on the results of the I. A. and A. S. and Allied Services examination held in 1943, and on other bases, should be given effect to from the 1st August 1948. This decision affected respondents Nos. 12 to 24, 29 and 30. On 14-6-49 representations were made by direct recruits including petitioners Nos. 5, 6, 8, 10 and 12 and respondent No. 28 (Sheriff who is a petitioner in W. P. No. 242/67 under Article 32), regarding proposed Seniority Rules.

14. On 9-9-1949 Seniority Rules were framed and a seniority list of Class I, Grade II, Income-tax Officers, as on the 1st January 1950, was drawn up and circulated by a letter dated 24-1-50. It appears that the seniority rules of 1949 had in the meantime been revised and a copy thereof was enclosed with the above mentioned letter dated 24-1-1950. It was stated in this letter that Government was prepared to consider any representation that they may have to make in regard to the accuracy of the data contained therein, upto the 28th February 1950, but no representation against the principles for the determination of seniority will be entertained.

15. On 18-10-51, the Government decided on the recommendations of the U. P. S. C. and in modification of para 2 (d) of the Finance Department (Central Revenues) letter dated 29-9-44, that, for a period of five years in the first instance, 66.2/3% of the vacancies in Class I, Grade II, will be filled by direct recruitment via Combined Competitive Examination and the remaining 33.1/3% by promotion on the basis of selection from Grade III (Class II service). This order was held to be statutory by this Court in Jaisinghani's case, 1967-2 SCR 703 = (AIR 1967 SC 1427).

16. On 1-1-52 all the petitioners were promoted as I. T. Os., Class I, Grade I, and confirmed also as such on the same date. In February 1952, a committee met for four days to consider the Rules governing the seniority of Income-tax Officers, Class I, Grade II and representations received against the draft seniority list. They made alterations in the Seniority rules and in one of these meetings, it was decided:

"As regards the representations made by some of this batch of direct recruits regarding the date of approval by the Union Public Service Commission of the 1948 batch of promotees, the position is that four of them (S. Nos. 67 to 70) were actually promoted on the recommendations of the Departmental Promotion Committee held on 21-7-48. Fifteen others (S. Nos. 72 to 86) were promoted on the recommendations of the Departmental Promotion Committee held on 29-4-1949, but the records show that the meeting was originally convened for 6-9-48 and the agenda etc. had been circulated in advance of this date. The meeting had, however, to be postponed several times due to the personal inconvenience of the Members of the U. P. S. C. and of the Central Board of Revenue. In these special circumstances, it was considered that the proper thing would be to treat the recommendations of this Departmental Promotion Committee as if it had actually been held in September 1948. The result is that both batches of promotees of 1948 will remain senior to the direct recruits from the 1945 Examination who joined in 1946."

17. In the Serial Nos. 72-86 mentioned above, exist the names of the present respondents 12-24 and respondents 29 and 30. It is contended before us that this decision was arbitrary and not warranted by any rules or principles. It is further contended that the decision was made in 1952 and therefore it is liable to be challenged in a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution.

18. On the material on record it is not possible to say that this decision was actually taken in 1952 and not on 29-4-49 or thereabout when the Departmental Promotion Committee met and the list was prepared on 24th January 1950. The fact is that the seniority of the respondents (Srl. Nos. 72 to 86) seems to have been fixed on the basis that the Departmental Promotion Committee meeting took place on 6-9-1948.

19. We may here reproduce the relevant Seniority rules made in 1949, 1950 and 1952:—

Rules regulating Seniority of Class I, Grade II, Income Tax Officers.

Rule 1 (f), 1 (i) and 1 (ii) remain the same in the three years and read thus:—

1 (f): The seniority of direct recruits recruited on the results of the examinations held by the F. P. S. C. in 1944, and subsequent years shall be reckoned as follows:—

(i) Direct recruits of an earlier examination shall rank above those recruited from a subsequent examination.

(ii) The Direct recruits of any one examination shall rank inter se in accordance with the ranks obtained by them at that examination.

20. There was a change in Rule (iii), and the three different versions are reproduced below:—

As on 9-9-1949:

(iii) The promotees who have been certified by the Commission in any calendar year shall be senior to all direct recruits who complete their probation during that year or after and are confirmed with effect from a date in that year or after.

As on 24-1-1950:

(iii) The promotees who have been certified by the Commission in any calendar year shall be senior to all direct recruits who complete their probation during that year or after and are confirmed with effect from a date in that year or after.

Provided that a person initially recruited as Class II Income-tax Officer, but subsequently appointed to Class I on the results of a competitive examination conducted by the Federal Public Service Commission shall, if he has passed the departmental examination held before his appointment to Class I Service, be deemed to be a promotee for the purpose of seniority.

As on 5-9-1952.

(iii) officers promoted in accordance with the recommendation of the Departmental Promotion Committee before the next meeting of the Departmental Promotion Committee shall be senior to all direct recruits appointed on the results of the examinations held by the Union Public Service Commission during the Calendar year in which the Departmental Promotion Committee met and the three previous years.

21. On 1-8-53, a revised seniority list was issued. In the meantime, the I. R. S. Association objected to the weightage principle and suggested changes in it and also desired a revision of the seniority list to correct the disadvantage due to excess promotions.

22. Various representations were made by individual direct recruits as well as the Indian Revenue Service (Income Tax)

Association. The case of the Government is that these representations were not acceptable because in fact there were no excess promotions during the period 1945-50.

23. In 1955 and 1956, the petitioners were promoted as Assistant Commissioners on different dates. Representations continued to be made in 1954, 1955, 1956, 1958, 1959. Not only were the representations made but an interview with the Finance Minister also took place in 1960. In spite of the Government rejecting the representations, fresh representations continued to be made.

24. On 25-4-62 Jaisinghani filed a Writ Petition in the High Court and the High Court delivered its judgment on 11-3-64. Against this decision Jaisinghani filed an appeal to this Court. A writ petition was filed by Joshi in the Supreme Court and this Court delivered its judgment in Jaisinghani's Appeal and Joshi's Writ Petition on 22-2-67, and the present Writ Petition was filed in July 1967.

25. It seems to us that there is force in the preliminary points raised by the Attorney General, and it is not necessary to decide the various points raised by the petitioners. It is settled law that the Constitution has no retrospective operation.

26. In Pannalal Binraj v. Union of India, 1957 SCR 233 at p. 236 = (AIR 1957 SC 397 at p. 412), Bhagwati, J. speaking for the Court says:

"It is settled that Article 13 of the Constitution has no retrospective effect and if, therefore, any action was taken before the commencement of the Constitution in pursuance of the provisions of any law which was a valid law at the time when such action was taken, such action cannot be challenged and the law under which such action was taken cannot be questioned as unconstitutional and void on the score of its infringing the fundamental rights enshrined in Part III of the Constitution. See Keshvan Madhava Menon v. State of Bombay, (AIR 1951 SC 128)."

27. The decision of this Court in Shanti Sarup v. Union of India, AIR 1955 SC 624 is distinguishable. In that case the facts were that the Government of U. P. passed an order purporting to be u/s. 3 (f), U. P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, by which they appointed one of the partners of the firm as 'authorised controller' of the undertaking. In 1952 the Union of India passed an order purporting to be made under Section 3 (4), of Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, by which the Central Government appointed the same person, as an authorised controller under the provisions of that section and directed him to run the said undertaking to the exclusion of all the other partners. The petitioner before the court under Article 32 contended that both the orders were illegal and conflicted with the fundamental rights of the petitioner under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution. The Attorney General appearing for the Central Government conceded before the Court that the impugned orders did not come within the purview of and were not warranted by the provisions of the Acts, under which they purported to have been passed. The only point he took was that the petitioner could not come before the court under Article 32 of the Constitution inasmuch as there was no fundamental right in existence when the first order of the U. P. Government was passed in July 1949 and no fresh act of dispossession had taken place since the Constitution came into force. This Court repelled the contention observing that in the first place, the order against which this petition was primarily directed was the order of the Central Government passed in October 1952 and whether or not the earlier order of the U. P. Government was formally withdrawn, it was this later order upon which the respondent 3 based his right to retain possession of the properties. The order of the Central Government must, therefore, be deemed to have deprived the petitioner of his property within the meaning of Article 31 of the Constitution as construed by this Court. It was further observed:

"But even assuming that the deprivation took place earlier and at a time when the Constitution had not come into force, the order effecting the deprivation which continued from day to day must be held to have come into conflict with the fundamental rights of the petitioner as soon as the Constitution came into force and became void on and from that date under Article 13 (1) of the Constitution."

It is this passage which is strongly relied on by the learned Counsel for the petitioners.

28. In our view this passage has no application to the facts of this case. In a number of subsequent decisions of this Court the passage has been held to be applicable only to the facts in that case.

29. In Sri Jaga-guru Kari Basava Rajendraswami of Govimutt v. Commissioner of Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments, Hyderabad, 1964-8 SCR 252 = (AIR 1965 SC 502) Gajendragadkar, C. J. observed thus regarding the aforesaid passage:

"With respect, we are not prepared to hold that these observations were intended to lay down an unqualified proposition of law that even if a citizen was deprived of his fundamental rights by a valid scheme framed under a valid law at a time when the Constitution was not in force, the mere fact that such a scheme would continue to operate even after the 26th January 1950, would expose it to the risk of having to face a challenge under Article 19. If the broad and unqualified proposition for which Mr. Sastri contends is accepted as true, then it would virtually make the material provisions of the Constitution in respect of fundamental rights retrospective in operation."

30. In Guru Datta Sharma v. State of Bihar, 1962-2 SCR 292 = AIR 1961 SC 1684, Shanti Sarup's case, AIR 1955 SC 624 (Supra) was distinguished in the following words:—

"We are unable to construe these observations as affording any assistance to the appellant we have held that the legislation under which the appellant's rights were extinguished, subject to his claim for compensation, was a valid law. It would therefore follow that the appellant could have no rights which could survive the Constitution so as to enable him to invoke the protection of Part III thereof."

31. In AIR 1961 SC 1684 at p. 1698 Shanti Sarup's case, AIR 1955 SC 624 was again distinguished. Ayyangar, J. speaking for the Court observed:

"We are unable to construe these observations as affording any assistance to the appellant."

We have held that the legislation under which the appellant's rights were extinguished, subject to his claim for compensation, was a valid law. It would, therefore, follow that the appellant could have no rights which could survive the Constitution so as to enable him to invoke the protection of Part III thereof. On this point also we must hold against the appellant."

32. It seems to us that the petitioners cannot complain of the breach of Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution in respect of acts done before the Constitution came into force. These acts in this case were (1) appointments of the respondents to Income Tax Officers Class I, Grade II Service; (2) Seniority List as existing on 1-1-1950; and (3) the Seniority Rules of 1949 and 1950, in so far as they had effect upto January 26, 1950. It will be recalled that the first seniority list was prepared as on January 1, 1950 and even if the seniority list was finally settled after the Constitution came into force, the Rules to be applied were the Seniority Rules of 1949 and 1950. In other words, if the list had been finally settled on January 1, 1950, it is clear that no appeal could be made to Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution. The fact that the List was prepared after the Constitution came into force would not enable the petitioners to appeal to Articles 14 and 16. The position is however, different in so far as changes were made in the seniority List as a result of change in the 1952 Seniority Rules. These changes were post-Constitution and if they are hit by Article 14 and Article 16 of the Constitution, the petitioners would have the right to complain of the breach of their fundamental rights under these Articles.

33. But in so far as the attack is based on the 1952 Seniority Rules, it must fail on another ground. The ground being that this petition under Article 32 of the Constitution has been brought about 15 years after the 1952 Rules were promulgated and effect given to them in the Seniority List prepared on August 1, 1953. Learned Counsel for the petitioners says that this Court has no discretion and cannot dismiss the petition under Article 32 on the ground that it has been brought after inordinate delay. We are unable to accept this contention. This Court by majority in M/s. Trilokchand and Moti Chand's case, (1969) 1 SCC 110 held that delay can be fatal in certain circumstances. We may mention that in Laxmanappa Hanumanappa Jamkhandi v. Union of India, 1955 SCR 769 = (AIR 1955 SC 3), Mahajan, C. J. observed as follows:—

"From the facts stated above it is plain that the proceedings taken under the impugned Act XXX of 1947 concluded so far as the Investigation Commission is concerned in September 1952, more than two years before this petition was presented in this Court. The assessment orders under the Income-tax Act itself were made against the petitioner in November 1953.

In these circumstances, we are of the opinion that he is entitled to no relief under the provisions of Article 32 of the Constitution. It was held by this Court in Ramjilal v. Income-tax Officer, Mohindergarh, AIR 1951 SC 97 that as there is a special provision in Article 265 of the Constitution that no tax shall be levied or collected except by authority of law, Clause (1) of Article 31 must therefore be regarded as concerned with deprivation of property otherwise than by the imposition or collection of tax, and inasmuch as the right conferred by Article 265 is not a right conferred by Part III of the Constitution, it could not be enforced under Article 32. In view of this decision it has to be held that the petition under Article 32 is not maintainable in the situation that has arisen and that 'even otherwise in the peculiar circumstances that have arisen, it would not be just and proper to direct the issue of any of the writs the issue of which is discretionary with this Court' (emphasis here in 'supplied).

34. The learned counsel for the petitioners strongly urges that the decision of this Court in Trilokchand and Motichand's case, (1969) 1 SCC 110 (Supra) needs review. But after carefully considering the matter, we are of the view that no relief should be given to petitioners who without any reasonable explanation, approach this Court under Article 32 of the Constitution after inordinate delay. The highest Court in this land has been given Original Jurisdiction to entertain petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution. It could not have been the intention that this Court would go into stale demands after a lapse of years. It is said that Article 32 is itself a guaranteed right. So it is, but it does not follow from this that it was the intention of the Constitution makers that this Court should discard all principles and grant relief in petitions filed after inordinate delay.

35. We are not anxious to throw out petitions on this ground, but we must administer justice in accordance with law and principles of equity, justice and good conscience. It would be unjust to deprive the respondents of the rights which have accrued to them. Each person ought to be entitled to sit back and consider that his appointment and promotion effected a long time ago would not be set aside after the lapse of a number of years. It was on this ground that this Court in Jaisinghani's case, 1967-2 SCR 703 = (AIR 1967 SC 1427) observed that the order in that case would not affect Class II officers who have been appointed permanently as Assistant Commissioners. In that case, the Court was only considering the challenge to appointments and promotions made after 1950. In this case we are asked to consider the validity of appointments and promotions made during the periods of 1945 to 1950. If there was adequate reason in that case to leave out Class II officers, who had been appointed permanently Assistant Commissioners, there is much more reason in this case that the officers who are now permanent Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and who were appointed and promoted to their original posts during 1945 to 1950, should be left alone.

36. Learned Counsel for the petitioners, however, says that there has been no undue delay. He says that the representations were being received by the Government all the time. But there is a limit to the time which can be considered reasonable for making representations. If the Government has turned down one representation, the making of another representation on similar lines would not enable the petitioners to explain the delay. Learned counsel for the petitioners says that the petitioners were under the impression that the Departmental Promotion Committee had held a meeting in 1948 and not on April 29, 1949, and the real true facts came to be known in 1961, when the Government mentioned these facts in their letter dated December 28, 1961. We are unable to accept this explanation. This fact has been mentioned in the minutes of the meeting of the Committee which met in February 1952 and we are unable to believe that the petitioners did not come to know all these facts till 1961. But even assuming that the petitioners came to know all these facts only in December 1961, even then there has been inordinate delay in presenting the present petition. The fact that Jaisinghani's case, 1967-2 SCR 703 = (AIR 1967 SC 1427) was pending before the High Court and later in this Court is also no excuse for the delay in presenting the present petition. In the result, the petition fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

(From Allahabad)

J. M. SHELAT, C. A. VAIDIALINGAM
AND I. D. DUA, JJ.Sheikh Abdual Sattar, Appellant v.
Union of India, Respondent.Civil Appeal No. 1956 of 1966, D/- 10-10-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 8, Rule 3 — Law of pleadings — Certain para in plaint not admitted — Failure to specifically deal with facts alleged therein in corresponding para of written statement — Facts however, dealt with in additional pleading — Effect.

According to the law of pleadings, the defendant is bound to deal specifically with each allegation of fact, the truth of which is not admitted. If certain para in the plaint is merely not admitted but the facts therein are not specifically dealt with, it cannot be said that they are denied. Where the truth of the facts alleged in the plaint, though not specifically dealt with in the corresponding para of the written statement were dealt with in the additional pleadings, held, the allegations in the plaint must be considered to have been traversed. (Para 9)

(B) Contract Act (1872), Section 10 — Construction of contract — Contract for supply of meat to military authorities —
One of conditions of contract providing for enhanced rate subject to approval by Tribunal as described under that condition — Application by contractor for enhanced rate on ground of rise in market rate — Recommendation by C. R. I. A., Supply Corps for enhancement of rate — Reference by authorities to Controller of Military Accounts — Held, on evidence on record that condition of contract for enhanced rate was complied with —
C. R. I. A. S. C. was proper sanctioning authority — Contractor could not be deprived of claim to enhanced rate merely because authorities chose to consult Controller of Military Accounts, who did not
of Allahabad H. C., Reversed.

(Para 13)

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by

DUA, J.: The appellant in this appeal with certificate from the judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court, had in February 1944 submitted a tender for the supply of meat to the army authorities at Allahabad and Banaras. This tender was accepted in March 1944 for the supply of meat for one year from April 1, 1944 to March 31, 1945. The formal acceptance was conveyed on May 18, 1944.

The controversy centres round the condition contained in para 51 of the special conditions for the meat supply. This condition reads as under:

"51. (a) No enhancement of rates will be considered in the case of contracts concluded for periods of 3 or 6 months.

(b) In the case of annual contracts, revision of rates i. e. increases or decreases, will be provided for, but no revision will be considered or allowed within six months of the commencement of the contract.

(c) Rates for annual contracts will be subject to review, according to the rise or fall of market rates by referees appointed by Government, the reviewing Tribunal for contracts to consist of the Deputy Commissioner or his representative, the C. R. I. A. S. C. or his representative and the local purchase officer (Military). The three members will constitute a quorum.

The contractor will attend to present his case, but will not be a member of the Tribunal.

The final recommendation in all cases reviewed, shall rest with the officer sanctioning the contract."

2. On September 4, 1944 the appellant wrote a letter to C. R. I. A. S. C. (Commander Royal Indian Army Supply Corps)
Lucknow, requesting for increase of rates.
In October, 1944 he sent a reminder praying for immediate increase of the existing rates as contemplated by condition 51(b).
In December, 1944 a Tribunal was constituted at Allahabad for the purpose of reviewing the contract rates of the supply of meat at Allahabad. After considering the matter from the various aspects brought to the notice of the Tribunal, recommendation was made for enhancing the rates as contained in Ex. G. On April 24, 1945 the appellant applied for the refund of the security amount of Rs. 18,100 paid by him along with the tender. Along with this application a 'No Demand Certificate' was given by the appellant. The appellant thereafter sent several reminders to C. R. I. A. S. C. regarding enhancement of the contract rates. On January 2, 1946 the appellant inquired from C. R. I. A. S. C., Lucknow as to when the question of enhancement of rate would be finally settled (Ex. 15). In reply to this inquiry on January 9, 1946 the headquarters at Lucknow informed the appellant that his case had been held up at the headquarters pending inquiry from the civil authorities about the market rates (Ex. 19). A copy of this letter was also sent to the O. C. I. S. S. D., Banaras, with the following note:

"Reference your No. 0709-C of 9th December, 1945. Please obtain the Civil Market rates personally in consultation with the Civil Authorities and arrange to hold tribunal with reference to this office No. 8601-ST of 3rd July, 1945. The proceedings of tribunal together with the documents referred to in this office No. 8601-ST. 13th of April, 1944 should immediately be forwarded to this H. Q. for submission to higher authorities."

After some further correspondence between the appellant and the headquarters at Lucknow on March 26, 1946, the latter wrote to O. C. I. S. S. D., Allahabad that the prayer for the revision of contract rates for the supply of meat by the appellant at Allahabad had been rejected by the higher authorities (Ex. 25). On April 7, 1946 the appellant wrote a letter to the headquarters at Lucknow requesting them to supply him the reasons for the rejection of his claim by the higher authorities. On April 15, 1946 the appellant was asked to attend the meeting of the Tribunal on April 29, 1946 for representing his case. This letter was received from the O. C. I. S. S. D., Banaras. On April 17, 1946 the appellant was informed by the headquarters, Lucknow that he should take up the matter direct with the headquarters Central Command. In the meantime on March 30, 1946 a notice was issued by the B. R. I. G. on behalf of the Major General Incharge Administration Central Command, notifying, inter alia that no fresh claim for revision of R. I. A. S. C. contract rates or for the reopening of cases on which decision had already been made would be entertained after May 15, 1946 in regard to contracts for the period ending March 31, 1945 (Ex. 73). On May 6, 1946 the appellant wrote to C. R. I. A. S. C. at Lucknow for the enhancement of rates. On May 10, 1946 the appellant served a notice through his lawyer on the headquarters demanding revision of the department's decision rejecting his claim for enhancement failing which legal action was threatened. A copy of this notice was also sent to C. R. I. A. S. C. at Lucknow with reference to their letters dated March 26, 1946 and April 17, 1946 (Ex. 29). On May 14, 1946 the Tribunal at Banaras also recommended enhancement of rates (Ex. H). On June 10, 1946 the appellant wrote a letter to the Controller of Military Accounts, Central Command, Meerut, stating that his 'No Demand Certificate' accompanying his request for the refund of security money had been inadvertently furnished and should be treated as cancelled because the matter regarding enhancement of rates was under consideration with the authorities. It was added that the appellant would submit a 'No Demand Certificate' for refund of the security money as soon as his claim for enhancement of rates was settled. On June 21, 1946 the appellant sent an express telegram to B. R. I. A. S. C. Command, Agra requesting for expeditious payment of his dues without resorting to litigation. On June 22, 1946 B. R. I. A. S. C., Central Command wrote to the appellant's lawyer in answer to the letter dated May 10, 1946 and telegram June 21, 1946, stating that the claim was being investigated and the decision arrived at would be communicated to him in due course (Ex. 32). Thereafter repeated inquiries were made by the appellant about the probable date of the settlement of his claim but every time it was said that the matter was still under consideration and that the decision would be communicated in due course. It is unnecessary to refer to the correspondence in detail. The last reply on these lines was sent to the appellant on December 13, 1947 (Ex. 50). After serving another reminder on March 15, 1948 the appellant sent a statutory notice under Section 80, Civil P. C. on May 3, 1948 and instituted the present suit in November, 1948, claiming a decree for Rs. 1,15,735/6/8 with future interest. This amount included enhanced rates for the supply of meat and security deposit and interest thereon. The claim in regard to enhanced rates was resisted by the respondent. It was pleaded in the written statement, inter alia, that the final recommendation in regard to enhanced rates rested with the officer sanctioning the contract, who was stated in the additional pleadings to be the Commander Lucknow District, and that the said officer had declined to sanction enhanced rates. The appellant's right to the refund of the security money was conceded but it was pleaded that he could receive that money only on furnishing a 'No Demand Certificate' as required by the agreement.

3. The following issues were settled at the trial:

1. Whether there was a rise in the market rates of goods supplied by the plaintiff as alleged by him?

2. If so, was plaintiff entitled to enhancement in the contractual rates in terms of the tender and agreement?

3. What is the effect of the reference to the Tribunal?

4. Were the old rates mentioned in the tender abandoned?

5. Is the suit not maintainable as pleaded in paragraph 24 of the written statement?

6. What is the effect of the revocation by the plaintiff of the 'No Demand Certificate'?

7. (a) Is the claim excessive as pleaded?

(b) Is the plaintiff not entitled to any interest?

8. To what relief if any is the plaintiff entitled?

9. Is the plaintiff's suit barred by time?

4. On issues Nos. 1 and 2 the trial Court came to the conclusion that there was an appreciable rise in the market rates of meat, beef, mutton and live animals and the appellant was entitled to enhanced rates from October 1, 1944 in accordance with the terms of the contract. In arriving at this conclusion the court placed reliance, inter alia, on the proceedings of the Tribunals (Exs. G and H) and on a letter written by B. R. I. A. S. C. (whom the court considered to be the final authority on the subject) to the Controller of Military Accounts which contained a proposal to increase the rates (Ex. 57). The appellant's plea that the 'No Demand Certificate' had been sent by him under misapprehension was also accepted. Issues Nos. 3 and 4 were considered unnecessary. Under issue No. 7 it was observed that there was no dispute between the parties in regard to the different kinds of meat supplied by the appellant during the second half of the year of supply and the recommendations of the B. R. I. A. S. C. were considered to be fair and proper for calculating the enhanced rates. The appellant was thus held entitled to Rs. 64353/10/- on account of the supplies at Allahabad and to Rs. 9858/10/2 in respect of the supplies at Banaras. Adding to this amount the security money and interest at 3% per annum the suit was decreed for Rs. 88214/6/3.

5. On appeal the High Court agreed with the trial Court that the market rates of meat during the year of supply were higher than the contract rates. It also accepted the appellant's case that the two tribunals had recommended payment at enhanced rates but it disagreed with the trial Court on the question of approval by the sanctioning authority. This is how the High Court expressed itself on this point:

"According to Ex. "C" the plaintiff's tender was accepted by Major-General Hammond, who was commander, Lucknow District. According to Ex. 57, some officer of the rank of a Brigadier or a Lieutenant Colonel was inclined to sanction enhanced rates. It is not clear whether in terms of paragraph 51 of exhibit 'D' Major-General Hammond or some other officer of Eastern Command was entitled to sanction enhanced rates. But from an examination of the various documents produced by the parties it appears that the officer sanctioning the contract did not definitely approve of the recommendations by the two tribunals."

6. The decision on the plea of limitation and on the appellant's right to the security deposit was upheld. The appeal was accordingly allowed in part and the appellant's suit in regard to enhanced rates dismissed.

7. In this Court the sole controversy centres round the appellant's claim to the enhanced rates. The question which therefore requires determination by this Court is whether the special condition No. 51 (c), reproduced earlier in this judgment, has been fulfilled. In order to properly appreciate and appraise the material on the record we may first turn to the pleadings. According to para 1 of the plaint the service corp described as (B. R. I. A. S. C.), Eastern Command, Ranchi had on behalf of the defendant entered into the contract in question with the appellant. This para was admitted in the written statement. Para 13 of the plaint contained the following averment:

"That in spite of the findings of the aforesaid Tribunal nothing has so far been done by the authorities concerned even though the plaintiff has been sending representations after representations to them. Neither on the occasion of the first Tribunal's findings nor on the occasion of the second Tribunal's findings was any final recommendation made by the officer sanctioning the contract in accordance with the last para of Clause 51 of the special conditions attached to the tender form as quoted in paragraph 2 above. The officer sanctioning the contract was the B. R. I. A. S. C., Eastern Command, Ranchi."

8. In reply in para 13 of the written statement it was pleaded as under:

"That para 13 of the plaint as it stands is not admitted."

9. Now according to the law of pleadings the defendant was bound to deal specifically with each allegation of fact, the truth of which was not admitted. The allegation that B. R. I. A. S. C., Eastern Command, Ranchi was the officer sanctioning the contract was not specifically dealt with and was therefore not specifically denied. If its truth was not admitted then it should also have been stated in this para as to who, according to the defendant, was the officer sanctioning the contract. Had the matter rested here the question of taking the appellant's allegation that B. R. I. A. S. C., Eastern Command was the sanctioning officer to have been admitted, would have required consideration. But we find that in para 26 of the additional pleadings in the written statement it was pleaded that the Commander, Lucknow District was the officer sanctioning the contract and in para 27 it was added that the said officer had not sanctioned enhancement of contract rates. The appellant's plea in question would therefore have to be considered to have been traversed though we cannot complement the respondent or its law officer entrusted with the task of drafting the written statement for the manner in which it was drafted.

10. We now turn to the evidence on this point. From the printed document described as acceptance of tender (Ex. C) it is not possible for us to know with certainty as to who was the officer sanctioning the contract. The original is not available on the record in this Court, with the result that we do not have the advantage of having a look at it. The appellant's counsel suggested that it was B. R. I. A. S. C., whereas, according to the respondent's counsel it was Major General A. V. Hammond, D. S. O. I. A.

11. Let us see whether oral evidence throws any light on it. Moti Ram Dingra, Subedar in the army appeared as witness for the defendant. He was Superintendent, Contract Section in the office of C. A. S. C., U. P. Area, Lucknow. In cross-examination he stated as follows:

"A Tribunal is only a recommending authority and not a sanctioning authority. Lucknow is the headquarter of the U. P. Area. The area commander used to be called District Commander previously. The C. R. I. A. S. C. is the administration officer of the Royal Indian Army Service Corps. The area officer at Lucknow is the Commander U. P. Area. Ranchi is the headquarter of Eastern Command. The Commander, Eastern Command is called the army Commander. The B. R. I. A. S. C. is under the army Commander and deals with R. I. A. S. C. matters. The final recommending authority for the enhancement of rates is the Area Commander, Lucknow. He is the sanctioning authority for the enhancement of rates and also of the contract itself upto the amount of rupees three lakhs. For contracts of over three lakhs he recommends the enhancement to the B. R. I. A. S. C. and it is he who sanctions the contract. Before sanctioning enhancement of rates in respect of contracts valued at over three lakhs he takes the advice of the Controller of Military Accounts. I cannot say if the contract of Abdul Sattar was over three lakhs, but as it was sanctioned by the Commander of Lucknow District it should be within the value of Rs. 3,00,000. The matter of enhancement of rates of Abdul Sattar was referred to the B. R. I. A. S. C."

12. The witness thereafter expressed ignorance as to whether in the instant case the B. R. I. A. S. C. took advice of the C. M. A. or sought the opinion of the Legal Remembrancer. He also admitted in his cross-examination that his statement that the appellant's claim had been rejected was based only on a letter produced in this case and that he had no other source of information. According to his testimony the matter of enhancement of rates was referred to the B. R. I. A. S. C. who was the higher authority than the Area Commander, Lucknow. Our attention was not drawn on behalf of the respondent to any other evidence on the record which would indicate that the B. R. I. A. S. C. was not the authority sanctioning the contract. We, therefore, hold in disagreement with the High Court that B. R. I. A. S. C. is the authority sanctioning the contract.

13. Now on the present record there can be little doubt that the B. R. I. A. S. C. had recommended the enhancement of rates in respect of the appellant's contract. If, therefore, he is the sanctioning authority, then the appellant can safely be held entitled to the enhanced rates. Turning to the plain language of the special condition 51 we find that in case of annual contracts, after six months from their commencement there has to be a provision for revision, which means increase or decrease, according to the rise or fall in the market rates. It is not disputed and it was also found by the High Court, that in the present case the market rates did rise and were indeed so found by the reviewing Tribunal as well. The reviewing Tribunal entrusted with the duty of inquiring into the question of rise or fall of market rates having found the rates to have risen, it would be for the respondents to show by convincing evidence as to who was the officer sanctioning the contract and for what reasons he had disagreed with the conclusions of the reviewing Tribunal. The appellant could not be deprived of his right to claim the enhanced rates merely because the respondent chose to consult the Controller of Military Accounts who does not figure in special condition No. 51: nor can the appellant be made to suffer by reason of the respondent's omission to enlighten the Court by precise evidence clearly showing as to which Officer other than B. R. I. A. S. C. is the sanctioning authority and for what reasons that officer declined to accept the recommendation of the reviewing Tribunal. Our attention was not drawn to any material on the record nor was any principle of law cited on the basis of which the appellant could justifiably be deprived of his right. The High Court was thus in error in allowing the appeal of the Union of India in respect of the appellant's claim to enhanced rates.

14. Considerable arguments were addressed at the bar of this Court on the question whether the sanctioning authority was a referee or an umpire and whether his decision was subject to review by the Court in the present proceedings. On the view that we have taken that question does not arise for decision as there is no dispute in regard to actual amounts, if the appellant is held entitled to claim enhanced rates. We accordingly allow the appeal with costs and setting aside the judgment and decree of the High Court restore the decree of the trial Court. The respondent is allowed three months' time to pay the decretal amount.

Appeal allowed.

Nathu Prasad, Appellant v. Ranchhod Prasad and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 2111 of 1966, D/- 6-10-1969.

Tenancy Laws — Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code (Act 20 of 1959), Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) — Madhya Bharat Ryotwari Sub-lessee Protection Act (29 of 1955), Sections 3 and 2 (b) — "Ryotwari sub-lessee", meaning of — Person inducted as a sub-lessee contrary to provisions of M. B. Act 66 of 1950 — His possession not protected by Act 29 of 1955 — Such a person is not a "Ryotwari sub-lessee" as defined in Act 29 of 1955 and hence cannot acquire status of occupancy tenant under Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) of M. P. Land Revenue Code — (Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act Smt. 2007 (66 of 1950), Sections 73, 78 — Second Appeal No. 254 of 1962, D/- 9-7-1965 (M. P.), Reversed; 1963 MPLJ 314, Overruled.

A person inducted as a sub-lessee, but who by express provision contained in Section 73 read with Section 78 of Act 66 of 1950 is declared a trespasser, does not acquire the status of an occupancy tenant under Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code. M. B. Ryotwari Sub-lessee Protection Act (29 of 1955) which was repealed by M. P. Land Revenue Code conferred protection only upon a ryotwari sub-lessee, and a ryotwari sub-lessee was defined in that Act as meaning a person in whose favour the land was settled. Section 3 of Act 29 of 1955 excluded from the protection granted by the Act, amongst others, a sub-lessee deemed to be a trespasser under Section 78 of Act 66 of 1950. Hence a person, the lease in whose favour was declared void by virtue of Act 66 of 1950, could not claim the status of a sub-lessee.

(Para 5)

A person inducted as a sub-lessee contrary to the provisions of Section 73 of Act 66 of 1950 did not therefore acquire any right under a contract of sub-letting, and his possession was not protected under Act 29 of 1955. Such a person is not a ryotwari sub-lessee as defined in Act 29 of 1955 and it is only on "Ryotwari sub-lessee" as defined in that Act that the right of occupancy tenant is conferred by Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code. LJ 318, Rao Nihalkaran v. Ram-chandra I, 6

SHAH, J.: Of Khasra Nos. 33 and 34 of Maheshwar, District Khargaon, Madhya Pradesh, Nathu Prasad—hereinafter called 'the plaintiff'—is the recorded pattadar tenant. On May 20, 1955 he granted a sub-lease of the land, for a period of five years, to Ranchhod Prasad and Onkar Prasad — hereinafter collectively called 'the defendants'. On June 30, 1960 the plaintiff commenced an action in the Court of the Civil Judge, Maheshwar against the defendants claiming that the sub-lease being in contravention of Section 73 of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act 66 of 1950 the defendants were trespassers in the land. The defendants contended that the lease was valid; and since the plaintiff had received consideration, he was estopped from setting up the plea of invalidity of the lease. The Trial Court decreed the action, holding that the defendants were trespassers and could not acquire Bhumi-swami rights claimed by them. The District Court agreed with the Trial Court. In second appeal the High Court of Madhya Pradesh allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's action. In the view of the High Court the defendants had acquired rights as occupancy tenants under Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code. In so holding the High Court relied upon the judgment of the Madhya Pradesh High Court, Rao Nihalkaran v. Ramchandra, 1963 MPLJ 314. With special leave, the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

2. Section 73 of the Revenue Administration and Ryotwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, Samvat 2007 (Act No. 66 of 1950) provides:

"No Pakka tenant shall sub-let for any period whatsoever any land comprised in his holdings except in the cases provided for in Section 74.

Explanation:— x x x x"
Section 74 deals with sub-letting by disabled persons. Since the plaintiff is not a disabled person, the section need not be read. Section 75 provides:

"A sub-lease of the whole or any part of the holding of a Pakka tenant effected properly and legally prior to the commencement of this Act shall terminate after the expiry of the period of sub-lease or 4 years after the commencement of this Act, whichever period is less."

Section 76 provides:

"(1) If the sub-lessee does not hand over possession of the land sub-let to him after the sub-lease ceases to be in force under Sections 74 and 75 to the lessor or his legal heir x x x, he shall be deemed to be a trespasser and shall be liable to ejectment in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) x x x x"
Section 78 provides:

"(1) Any person who in contravention of the provisions of this Act, obtains possession of any land by virtue of a bequest, gift, sale, mortgage or sub-lease, or of any agreement purporting to be a bequest, gift, sale, mortgage or sub-lease shall be deemed to be a trespasser and shall be liable to ejectment in accordance with the provisions of Section 58.

x x x x x x"
3. The Madhya Bharat Legislature enacted the Madhya Bharat Ryotwari Sub-lessee Protection Act, 1955 (Act 29 of 1955). The Act came into force on October 19, 1955. The Act was enacted to provide for stay of proceedings under Section 76 (1) for the ejectment of sub-lessees of ryotwari land after the termination of sub-leases according to S. 75 of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act Samvat 2007. "Ryotwari sub-lessee" was defined in Clause (b) of Section 2 as meaning "a person to whom a pakka tenant of any Ryotwari land has sub-let on sub-lease any part of his Ryotwari land." Section 3 of Act 29 of 1955 provides:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in Sec. 76 of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, Samvat 2007, during the continuance of this Act but subject to the provisions contained in Section 4 below, no Ryotwari sub-lessee other than a sub-lessee under Section 74 of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, Samvat 2007, and a sub-lessee deemed to be a trespasser under Section 78 of the said Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, shall be ejected from his land."

Section 3 clearly grants protection during the continuance of the Act to sub-lessees. But sub-lessees under Section 74 of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act and a sub-lessee deemed to be a trespasser under Section 78 of that Act are outside that protection.

4. The Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code (Act 20 of 1959) was enacted by the State Legislature and was brought into force in the whole of the State of Madhya Pradesh. By that Code, Act 29 of 1955 was repealed. The expression "tenant" was defined in Section 2 (y) as meaning "a person holding land from a Bhumiswami as an occupancy tenant under Chapter XIV." Section 185, insofar as it is relevant, provides:

"(1) Every person who at the coming into force of this Code holds—

(ii) In the Madhya Bharat region—

(a) any Inam land as a tenant, or as a sub-tenant or as an ordinary tenant; or Explanation:— x x x

(b) any land as ryotwari sub-lessee as defined in the Madhya Bharat Ryotwari Sub-lessee Protection Act, 1955 (29 of 1955); or x x x x x

shall be called an occupancy tenant and shall have all the rights and be subject to all the liabilities conferred or imposed upon an occupancy tenant by or under this Code."

By Section 185 of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code a person who is holding land as a ryotwari sub-lessee under Act 29 of 1955 is deemed to be an occupancy tenant and is entitled to all the rights and is subject to all the liabilities conferred or imposed upon an occupancy tenant by or under the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code.

5. A person inducted as a sub-lessee, but who by express provision contained in Section 73 read with Section 78 of Act 66 of 1950 is declared a trespasser, does not acquire the status of an occupancy tenant under Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code.

Act 29 of 1955 conferred protection only upon a ryotwari sub-lessee, and a ryotwari sub-lessee was defined in that Act as meaning a person in whose favour the land was settled. A person, the lease in whose favour was declared void by virtue of Act 66 of 1950, could not claim the status of a sub-lessee. That is so enacted in Section 3 which excludes from the protection granted by Act 29 of 1955, amongst others, a sub-lessee deemed to be a trespasser under Section 78 of Act 66 of 1950. A person inducted as a sub-lessee contrary to the provisions of Section 73 of Act 66 of 1950 did not therefore acquire any right under a contract of sub-letting, and his possession was not protected under Act 29 of 1955. Such a person is not a ryotwari sub-lessee as defined in the Madhya Bharat Ryotwari Sub-lessee Protection Act 29 of 1955, and it is only on "Ryotwari sub-lessee" as defined in that Act that the right of occupancy tenant is conferred by Section 185 (1) (ii) (b) of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code.

6. Krishnan, J., regarded himself bound by the following observation made by a Division Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Rao Nihalkaran's case, 1963 MPLJ 314:

"By Section 3 of this Act (Act 29 of 1955) a bar was created to the ejectment of these sub-lessees whose continuance had become precarious under the existing law. The bar was to operate during the continuance of that Act which was for a definite duration notwithstanding anything contained in Sections 76 and 78 of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act barring exceptions contained in Section 74 of that Act."

The observation that protection was given to sub-lessees, notwithstanding anything contained in Section 78 was apparently made through oversight; it is contrary to the express provisions of the Act.

7. The High Court was, in our judgment, in error in holding that the defendants had acquired the status of occupancy tenants by virtue of S. 185 (1) (ii) (b) of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code (Act 20 of 1959).

8. The appeal is allowed. The order passed by the High Court is set aside and the decree passed by the District Court is restored. There will be no order as to costs in this Court and in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

(V 57 C 106)

(From: Madras)*

J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI, A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras, Appellant v. M. K. K. R. Muthukaruppan Chettiar, Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1664-1665 of 1968, D/- 6-9-1969.

Income-tax Act (1922), Sections 22 (2), (3) and 34 — Assessee filing returns in his individual capacity in response to notice under Section 22 (2) and (3) — Income-tax Officer issuing notice under Section 34 without disposing of returns — Notice under Section 34 and consequent assessments are invalid.

K and his son M formed a Hindu undivided family and assessed as such till the end of assessment year 1948-49. In the assessment year 1949-50 there was a claim for partition between K and M but it was rejected by the Income Tax Officer and an appeal against that order was pending. For the assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 M submitted returns of his income in his individual capacity in response to notice under S. 22 (2) and (3), Income-tax Act 1922. By his order dated June 18, 1953 the Income-tax Officer closed the assessments as no assessments and added that since there was no separate income, the pending proceedings would be closed as N. A. and for Income-tax year 1953-54 the file would be removed and clubbed with the family file. By the same order he also issued notice under Section 34. On 12-12-1954 the claim for partition was accepted in appeal. Thereafter the assessee M filed two sets of returns for the aforesaid three years, once on February 23, 1955 and again on March 30, 1956. Those returns were submitted by the assessee in response to the notice under Section 34 issued on March 2, 1957 and the assessee was assessed accordingly:

Held that the order of the Income-tax Officer dated June 18, 1953 was not an order to terminate the proceedings and the result, therefore was that the original returns submitted by the assessee under Section 22 (2) and (3) had not been properly and legally proceeded with. Hence notices under Section 34 could not be issued against M in his individual capacity and the assessments made pursuant to the notice under Section 34 were therefore invalid for the three years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53. AIR 1959 SC 1154 and (1969) 72 ITR 403 (SC), Applied.

(1959) AIR 1959 SC 1154 (V 46) = 36 ITR 569, Commr., I. T. v. RANCHHODDAS KARSONDAS

RAMASWAMI, J.: Karuppan Chettiar his son Muthukaruppan and the latter's minor sons all together formed a Hindu undivided family which was assessed as such till the end of the assessment year 1948-49. In the course of assessment proceedings for 1949-50 the family claimed on February 7, 1951 that the several businesses of the family had been partitioned between Karuppan Chettiar on the one hand and Muthukaruppan Chettiar and his sons forming a separate family on the other. Following up this claim the returns in response to the notice under Section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter called the Act) issued to the family for the assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 were made by Karuppan Chettiar in his individual capacity showing the income from the several sources that fell to his share. The Income-tax Officer rejected the claim of partition and assessed the Hindu undivided family for the aforesaid three years treating Karuppan Chettiar's returns as the proper returns for the family. An appeal was made by the assessee to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in which complete partition as required by Section 25A of the Act was accepted by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner by his order dated December 18, 1954. In keeping with this order he also cancelled the assessments of the family for the aforesaid years. In the course of his order he observed:

"I therefore hold that there is no asset left in the hands of the H. U. F. which can be brought to tax and that the H. U. F. is no longer in existence. As such the present assessment requires to be annulled and the income considered in this assessment requires to be considered in the hands of the separating coparceners. I therefore annul these assessments."

Assessment year	Return under Section (voluntary)	Date of return
1950-51	22(3)	8-2-1951
1951-52	22(2)	5-2-1952
1952-53	22(2)	2-12-1952

The Income-tax Officer closed the assessments as 'no assessments' by his notes in the order sheet dated June 18, 1953 reproduced below:

"The assessee is a member of the family of A. M. K. M. K. Karuppan Chettiar, assessed in F.1005-A. I have held in the family file in my order for income tax year 1949-50 that there have been no division between father and son. This being the case, there is no source of income to be separately assessed in the assessee's hands. The return of income in this file relates to the alleged share of income consequent on partition. Since partition has not been accepted, this file has only to be clubbed with the father's file. If, for any reasons, it is ultimately held on appeal that a separate assessment should be made, it will no doubt be possible to take action under provision of Section 34 as now amended. Since there is no separate income, the pending proceedings will be closed as N. A. and for Income-tax year 1953-54 the file will be removed and clubbed with the family file F.1005-A".

The Income-tax Officer in giving effect to the aforesaid order of partition under Section 25-A of the Act and cancelling consequentially the family assessments, simultaneously issued notices under Section 34 on March 2, 1957 for the three assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 to the assessee family after obtaining the previous approval of the Commissioner. In response to the notice the assessee submitted its returns on April 9, 1957 for the three assessment years under protest. On the basis of these returns the Income-tax Officer assessed the assessee by his order of the same date for all the three years, ignoring the protest. The assessee appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner but the appeal was dismissed. The assessee took the matter in appeal to the Appellate Tribunal but was unsuccessful. The Appellate

2. Meanwhile Muthukaruppan and his minor sons forming the family, the assessee in this case, filed returns for the Tamil years Virothi, Vikruthi and Kara as the 'previous years' for assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 as follows:

Tribunal stated a case to the High Court under Section 66 (1) of the Income-tax Act on the following question of law:

"Whether the aforesaid assessments for years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 are valid?"

The High Court by its judgment dated September 16, 1964 recorded an answer in the affirmative. In the view of the High Court, the order passed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the direction given by him lifted the bar of limitation prescribed by Section 34 (3) of the Act for making the assessment.

3. It is not necessary to decide whether the observations made by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in his order declining to assess the income of the Hindu undivided family operated to lift the bar of limitation as regards the assessment of income of the separated members by the application of the principle of the judgments of this Court in Income-tax Officer v. Murlidhar Bhagwanadas, 52 ITR 335 = (AIR 1965 SC 342) and N. Kt. Sivalingam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1967) 66 ITR 586 (SC). In our opinion the orders passed by the Income-tax authorities and confirmed by the Tribunal suffer from a fundamental defect. As we have already stated, Karuppan Chettiar submitted returns of his income in his individual capacity for the years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 in response to the notice issued under Section 22 (2) of the Act. By his order dated June 18, 1953 the Income-tax Officer closed the assessments as 'no assessments' and added that since there was no separate income, the pending proceedings would be closed as N. A. and for income-tax year 1953-54 the file would be removed and clubbed with the family file F. 1005-A. Thereafter the assessee filed two sets of returns for the aforesaid three years, once on February 23, 1955 and again on March 30, 1956. These returns were submitted by the assessee in response to the notice issued on March 2, 1957. It is manifest that in these circumstances notice under Section 34 of the Act cannot be issued to Muthu Karuppan Chettiar and his minor sons unless the returns which had already been filed by that family were disposed of.

4. It was held by this Court in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Ranchhoddas Karsondas, 36 ITR 569 = (AIR 1959 SC 1154) that the return in answer to the general notice under Section 22 (1) of the Act can, under Section 22 (3), be filed at any time before assessment and for this there is no limit of time. When in respect of any year a return has been voluntarily submitted before assessment, the Income-tax Officer cannot ignore the return and the notice of reassessment and consequent assessment under Section 34 ignoring the return are invalid. In the present case we are of opinion that the order of the Income-tax Officer dated June 18, 1953 is not an order to terminate the proceedings and the result, therefore, is that the original returns submitted by the assessee under Section 22 (2) and (3) have not been properly and legally proceeded with. In the case before us the order of the Income-tax Officer dated June 18, 1953 should be interpreted in the light of circumstances in which that order was passed. So interpreted it appears to us that the Income-tax Officer did not intend to conclude the proceedings before him. It follows, therefore, that there is no disposal of the voluntary returns made by the respondent for the assessment years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53. It is manifest that the assessment proceedings under Section 34 (1) of the Act for the aforesaid three years are invalid.

5. In the Estate of the late A. M. K. M. Karuppan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1969) 72 ITR 403 (SC) it was held by this Court that notices under Section 34 could not be issued against Karuppan Chettiar in his individual capacity unless the returns which had been filed by him are also disposed of and the assessments made pursuant to the notice under Section 34 were therefore invalid for the three years 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53. The principle of this case governs the present case also as the material facts are not different.

6. For these reasons we hold that these appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs. There will be one set of hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 1644 of 1966, D/- 9-10-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 22, Rr. 2, 4 — Joint petition under Payment of Wages Act by respondents — Order in their favour by one judgment. — Appeal to Supreme Court — All respondents made parties — One of them dying during pendency of appeal but his name continuing to appear in array of respondents — Legal representative not brought on record — Appeal held did not abate. Civil Appeal No. 1444 of 1966, D/- 24-9-1968 (SC), Foll. (Para 4)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Finding of fact — Nature of work done by persons in railway workshop — Finding on, is finding of fact and binding on High Court in revision against the decision of the Court of Appeal under S. 17, Payment of Wages Act and also not open to reassessment before Supreme Court on special leave to appeal — (Civil P. C. (1908), Section 115). (Para 6)

(C) Factories Act (1948), Section 2 (1) — 'Worker' — Persons doing clerical duties but otherwise falling within definition of "worker" — They are workers.

Respondents who were time-keepers prepared paysheets of workshop staff, maintained leave account, disposed of settlement cases, maintained records for statistical purposes, maintained attendance of staff, job card particulars of the various jobs under operation and time sheets of the staff working on various shops dealing with the production of Railway spare-parts and repairs etc. Some head time-keepers were entrusted with the task of supervising the work of other respondents.

Held that the definition of "worker" in the Factories Act, does not exclude employees who are entrusted solely with clerical duties, if they otherwise fall within the definition of the word "worker". Keeping in view the duties and functions of the respondents, the respondents fell within the definition of the word "worker".

LM/LM/F170/69/RGD/M

Held further that deletion of the word "whatsoever" after "any other kind of work" from the definition as it appeared in Act 25 of 1934 does not seem to make much difference because that word was redundant. (1863) 122 ER 554 and (1865) 144 ER 436, Distinguished; AIR 1967 SC 1364, Ref. (Para 11)

(D) Factories Act (1948), Preamble — Factories Act is a social enactment to achieve social reform and must receive liberal construction to achieve legislative purpose without doing violence to language. (Para 11)

DUA, J.: This appeal by special leave is directed against the order of a learned Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court affirming on revision under Section 115 Civil P. C. the order of the learned Additional District Judge, Jhansi, who had allowed the respondents' appeal from the order of the learned City Magistrate, Jhansi, made on an application presented by the respondents under Section 15 of the Payment of Wages Act IV of 1936. The City Magistrate was the "authority" appointed under Section 15 and the District Court was the court of appeal under Section 17 of the said Act. The respondents through the Assistant Secretary of the National Railway Mazdoor Union Work Shop Branch, Jhansi had asserted in their application under Section 15 that they were workers within the meaning of Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act (63 of 1948) and complained that they were denied wages for overtime work done by them on the erroneous ground that they were not workers within the aforesaid provision. The learned Magistrate held that the respondents had been entrusted with purely clerical duties and they were not connected in any manner with the manufacturing process. On this conclusion their application was dismissed.

2. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge disagreed with this view and came to the conclusion that the work done by the respondents was incidental to or connected with the manufacturing process. It was observed in the order that some of the respondents were entrusted with the duty of checking the time of work of each worker in the workshop, a few others were time-keepers and the remaining respondents prepared account sheets on the basis of the time sheets and did other work incidental to the running of the work-shop including payment of wages to the staff of the workshop and the office. The High Court on revision, as already observed, affirmed the order of the learned Additional District Judge.

3. On appeal in this Court the short question we are called upon to decide is whether the respondents, who are time-keepers fall within the purview of the definition of "worker" as contained in Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act.

4. The respondents have raised a preliminary objection that the appeal is incompetent on the ground that respondent No. 29 (T. A. Kolalkar) had died after the order of the High Court but his name continued to appear in the array of respondents. As his legal representatives had not been brought on the record, the appeal against him is incompetent and since there was a joint application on behalf of all the respondents which was dealt with and decided by a common order by the learned Magistrate, the appeal against the other respondents must also be held to be incompetent. The impugned order having become final as against the deceased T. A. Kolalkar, the present appeal against other respondents should, according to the argument, be held to be incompetent because the reversal of the impugned order as against them would give rise to conflicting decisions on the point. Recently this Court disallowed a similar objection in Indian Oxygen Ltd. v. Shri Ram Adhar Singh, Civil Appeal No 1444 of 1966 D/- 24-9-1968 (SC) and when the attention of the respondents' learned counsel was drawn to that decision, the objection was not seriously pressed.

5. We now turn to the merits of the appeal. The word "worker" is defined in Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act to mean "a person employed directly or through any agency, whether for wages or not, in any manufacturing process, or in cleaning any part of the machinery or premises used for a manufacturing process, or in any other kind of work incidental to, or connected with, the manufacturing process, or the subject of the manufacturing process." This definition seems to us to be fairly wide because it takes within its sweep not only persons employed in any manufacturing process but also in cleaning any part of the machinery or premises used for a manufacturing process and goes far beyond the direct connection with the manufacturing process by extending it to other kinds of work which may either be incidental to or connected with not only the manufacturing process itself but also the subject of the manufacturing process. The word "manufacturing process" is defined in Section 2 (k) of the Factories Act in fairly wide language. It means any process for:

"(i) making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing, packing, oiling, washing, cleaning, breaking up, demolishing, or otherwise treating or adapting any article or substance with a view to its use, sale, transport, delivery or disposal, or

(ii) pumping oil, water or sewage, or

(iii) generating, transforming or transmitting power; or

(iv) composing types for printing, printing by letter press, lithography, photogravure or other similar process or book binding;

(v) constructing, reconstructing, repairing, refitting, finishing or breaking up ships or vessels;"

6. Now the conclusion of the learned Additional District Judge on the nature of work of the respondents, which, in our opinion, being one of fact, must be held to be binding on the High Court on revision and also not open to reassessment on the merits in this Court on special leave to appeal from the order of the High Court on revision, is that, the time-keepers prepare the pay sheets of the workshop staff, maintain leave account, dispose of settlement cases and maintain records for statistical purposes. Fourteen of the respondents, according to this conclusion, are time-keepers who maintain attendance of the staff, job card particulars of the various jobs under operation and time sheets of the staff working on various shops dealing with the production of Railway spare-parts and repairs etc. Four of the respondents are head time-keepers entrusted with the task of supervising the work of other respondents. The question arises if on this conclusion it can be held that as a matter of law the respondents fall outside the definition of "worker" as contemplated by Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act and that the High Court erred in dismissing the revision.

7. The appellant's learned counsel has submitted that the expression "incidental to" or "connected with" connotes a direct connection with the manufacturing process and therefore if the duties assigned to the respondents have no such direct connection with the manufacturing process then they cannot fall within the purview of the word "worker." In support of his submission he has referred to some law dictionaries. In Law Lexicon in British India by Ramanathan Iyer "incidental power" is stated to be, power that is directly and immediately appropriate to the existence of the specific power granted and not one that has a slight or remote relation to it. The word "incidental" in the expression "incidental labour" as used in Mechanic's Lien Statutes allowing liens for work and labour performed in the construction, repairs etc. of a building etc. is stated in this Law Lexicon to mean labour directly done for and connected with or actually incorporated in the building or improvement: service indirectly or remotely associated with the construction work is not covered by this expression. Reference has next been made by the counsel to the Law Dictionary by Ballentine where also the expression "incidental power" is stated in the same terms. In Stroud's Judicial Dictionary the meaning of the words "incident" and "incidental" as used in various English statutes have been noticed. We do not think they can be of much assistance to us. The decision in Haydon v. Taylor, (1863) 122 ER 554 noticed in this book at first sight appeared to us to be of some relevance, but on going through it, we do not find it to be of much help in construing the statutory provisions with which we are concerned. Similarly the decision in Frederick Hayes Whympers v. John Jones Harney, (1865) 144 ER 436 seems to be of little guidance.

8. On behalf of the respondents our attention has been drawn to a decision of this Court in Nagpur Electric Light and Power Co. Ltd. v. Regional Director Employees State Insurance Corporation, 1967-3 SCR 92=(AIR 1967 SC 1364). This decision deals with the Employees' State Insurance Act and on a comparison of the definition of the word "employee" as contained in Section 2 (9) of that Act with the definition of the word "worker" in Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act, it is observed that the former definition is wider than the latter. It is further added that the benefit of the Factories Act does not extend to field workers working outside the factory whereas the benefit of the Employees' State Insurance Act extends inter alia to the employees mentioned in Section 2 (9) (i) whether working inside the factory or establishment or elsewhere. Reliance has, however, been placed on behalf of the respondents on the observations at page 99 of the report (of SCR) = (at p. 1368 of AIR) where reference is made to the clerks entrusted with the duty of time-keeping and it is observed that all these employees are employed in connection with the work of the factory. A person doing non-manual work has been held in this case to be included in the word "employee" within the meaning of Section 2 (9) (i) if employed in connection with the work of the factory. The ratio of this decision which is concerned with the construction of different statutory language intended to serve a different object and purpose is of no direct assistance in construing the definition of the word "worker" as used in the Factories Act.

9. The respondents' counsel has then submitted that the previous history of the Act throws helpful light on the legislative intendment and in this connection he has referred to the definition of the word "worker" in the Factories Act XXV of 1934. The word "worker" in Section 2 (h) of that Act was defined to mean:

"a person employed, whether for wages or not, in any manufacturing process, or in cleaning any part of the machinery or premises used for a manufacturing process, or in any other kind of work whatsoever incidental to or connected with the manufacturing process or connected with the subject of the manufacturing process, but does not include any person solely employed in a clerical capacity in any room or place where no manufacturing process is being carried on."

10. It is argued that the deletion of the words conveying exclusion of persons solely employed in a clerical capacity in a place where no manufacturing process is carried on suggests that the present definition of "worker" is wide enough to take within its fold even those persons who are employed solely in clerical capacity if otherwise they fall within the definition.

The appellant's counsel has, on his part, by reference to the definition in the Act of 1934, argued that the deletion of the word "whatsoever" after "any other kind of work" is indicative of the legislative intention to restrict the scope of "any other kind of work" in the current Act.

11. The Factories Act was enacted to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories. It is probably true that all legislation in a Welfare State is enacted with the object of promoting general welfare; but certain types of enactments are more responsive to some urgent social demands and also have more immediate and visible impact on social vices by operating more directly to achieve social reforms. The enactments with which we are concerned, in our view, belong to this category and, therefore, demand an interpretation liberal enough to achieve the legislative purpose, without doing violence to the language. The definition of "worker" in the Factories Act, therefore, does not seem to us to exclude those employees who are entrusted solely with clerical duties, if they otherwise fall within the definition of the word "worker". Keeping in view the duties and functions of the respondents as found by the learned Additional District Judge, we are unable to find anything legally wrong with the view taken by the High Court that they fall within the definition of the word "worker". Deletion of the word "whatsoever" on which the appellant's counsel has placed reliance does not seem to make much difference because that word was, in our view, redundant.

12. We have not been persuaded to hold that the High Court was in error in affirming the decision of the learned Additional District Judge. In the result this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Patna Electric Supply Co. Ltd.,
Petitioner v. The Patna Municipal Corporation and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 418 of 1969, D/- 9-10-1969.

Electricity Act (1910), Sec. 51 — Scope — Demand by Municipal Corporation of

fee for lands occupied by Electric Supply Company for fixing poles on corporation area — Dispute between company and corporation cannot be referred to arbitration under Sec. 15 of Telegraph Act — AIR 1969 Pat 355, Reversed — (Telegraph Act (1885) Secs. 15, 3 (6)).

Section 51 of Electricity Act merely empowers the State Government to confer on the licensee certain powers which can be exercised by a telegraph authority under the Telegraph Act. It does not by reference incorporate into the Electricity Act all the provisions of the Telegraph Act. (Para 5)

Merely because some of the powers conferred under the Telegraph Act on the telegraph authority could be conferred on a licensee under the Electricity Act, it does not follow that all the rights and liabilities of a licensee under the Electricity Act are governed by the provisions of the Telegraph Act. (Para 6)

Section 15 of Telegraph Act can be called into aid for the determination of any dispute, the dispute must arise between the Telegraph authority and a local authority. A licensee under the Indian Electricity Act cannot be considered as a Telegraph authority, an expression defined in Section 3 (6) of the Telegraph Act. Further that the disputes that can be referred to arbitration under that provision are only those referred to in that section and no other. (Para 8)

Hence, dispute between licensee, a Electric Supply Company and a Municipal Corporation regarding demand by latter of fee for lands occupied by former company for fixing electric poles on corporation area cannot be referred to arbitration under Sec. 15 of Telegraph Act. AIR 1969 Pat 355, Reversed. (Para 9)

HEGDE, J.— This appeal has been brought on the strength of the certificate granted by the High Court of Patna. The appellant moved that High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution to issue a writ in the nature of a writ of Mandamus calling upon the respondents to show cause why the demands made on behalf of the 1st respondent Corporation and the notices issued on its behalf Annexures (H) and (K) be not quashed and cancelled and the respondents restrained from making similar demands in future. The High Court did not enter into the merits of the application. It rejected the application on the sole ground that the proper remedy available to the petitioner was to move the Central Government under Section 15 of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885.

2. The petitioner is a company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act. It holds a licence to supply electricity within the limits of Patna Municipal Corporation. For the purpose of transmission of electric energy, it had to place overhead lines. In that connection it erected several electric poles over the lands belonging to the Municipal Corporation. On December 8, 1967, the Administrator of the Municipal Corporation demanded from the appellant-petitioner fee for the lands occupied by it for fixing electric poles in the Corporation area. In that connection it called upon the petitioner to intimate the total number of electric poles erected within the limits of the Corporation and also the area occupied by each pole. The petitioner protested against that demand as per its letter dated December 26, 1967. It denied any liability to pay rent in respect of the poles fixed. On the same day namely December 26, 1967, the Administrator issued an order imposing a ground rent of Rs. 1/50 paise per pole per month and forwarded a bill for Rs. 51,300/- in respect of the rent alleged to be due for the month of December 1967. Therein it held out a threat that if the rent demanded is not paid, coercive processes under Sections 205 and 206 of the Patna Municipal Corporation Act would be taken against the petitioner. The petitioner again repudiated its liability to pay any rent as per its letter of December 30, 1967 and requested the Administrator to let the petitioner know the legal basis on which the rent is demanded. As per its letter of January 24, 1968, the Deputy Administrator of the Corporation informed the petitioner that the levy was made in pursuance of the power conferred on the Corporation under Section 262 of the Patna Municipal Corporation Act. By the letter dated January 18, 1968, the Resident Engineer of the petitioner company informed the Corporation that it had no power to levy the rent in question under the aforementioned Sec. 262. But the Administrator again asserted the Corporation's right to act under that provision as per his letter dated January 30, 1968. On February 5, 1968, the Assistant Administrator claimed a sum of Rs. 1, 53, 900/- as arrears of rent. On March 7, 1968, another bill for Rs. 51,300/- as arrears of rent for the month of March, 1968, was forwarded to the petitioner company by the Administrator. Being apprehensive that coercive steps will be taken against the petitioner-company, it moved the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution for the reliefs mentioned earlier.

3. The petition was opposed by the Corporation on various grounds but the High Court did not examine any one of those grounds. On the other hand it rejected the application on the sole ground that the only method prescribed by law for resolving the controversy between the petitioner-company and the Corporation was that provided by Section 15 of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885.

4. In our opinion the High Court has misread the provisions of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 and the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885. The High Court purported to have based its decision on Section 51 of the Indian Electricity Act. That section reads thus:

"Notwithstanding anything in Secs. 12 to 16 (both inclusive) and Sections 18 and 19, the (State Government) may, by order in writing, for the placing of (electric supply-lines, appliances and apparatus for the transmission of energy or for the purpose of telephonic or telegraphic communications necessary for the proper-co-ordination of works, confer upon any public officer, licensee or any other person engaged in the business of supplying energy to the public under this Act), subject to such conditions and restrictions (if any) as the (State Government) may think fit to impose, and to the provisions of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885, any of the powers which the telegraph authority possesses under that Act, with respect to the placing of telegraph lines and posts for the purposes of a telegraph established or maintained by the Government or to be so established or maintained."

5. Under notification No. 64/Elec. dated 11th August, 1966, the State Government conferred upon the petitioner powers for placing of electric supply-lines appliances and apparatus for the transmission and distribution of the energy by it within the area of its supply which the telegraph authority possesses under Sections 10 to 18 and 19A of the Indian Telegraph Act with respect to placing of telegraph lines and posts. Section 51 merely empowers the State Government to confer on the licensee certain powers which can be exercised by a telegraph authority under the Indian Telegraph Act. It does not by reference incorporate into the Indian Electricity Act all the provisions of the Indian Telegraph Act.

6. Merely because some of the powers conferred under the Indian Telegraph Act on the telegraph authority could be conferred on a licensee under the Indian Electricity Act, it does not follow that all the rights and liabilities of a licensee under the Indian Electricity Act are governed by the provisions of the Indian Telegraph Act.

7. Section 15 of the Indian Telegraph Act reads thus:

"(1) If any dispute arises between the telegraph authority and a local authority in consequence of the local authority refusing the permission referred to in Section 10, clause (c), or prescribing any condition under Section 12, or in consequence of the telegraph authority omitting to comply with a requisition made under Section 13, or otherwise in respect of the exercise of the powers conferred by this Act, it shall be determined by such officer as the (Central Government) may appoint either generally or specially in this behalf.

(2) An appeal from the determination of the officer so appointed shall lie to the (Central Government) and the order of the (Central Government) shall be final."

8. Before this provision can be called into aid for the determination of any dispute, the dispute must arise between the Telegraph authority and a Local authority. A licensee under the Indian Electricity Act cannot be considered as a Telegraph authority, an expression defined in Section 3 (6) of the Telegraph Act. Further that the disputes that can be referred to arbitration under that provision are only those referred to in that section and no other.

9. In our opinion the High Court erred in rejecting the petition on the ground that the dispute in question should be referred to arbitration under Section 15 of the Indian Telegraph Act.

10. Mr. S. V. Gupte, learned Counsel for the Corporation did not support the reasons given by the High Court in support of its judgment. On the other hand he contended that on the basis of the averments made in the application, the relief asked for by the petitioner could not have been granted and therefore the High Court was right in rejecting the same. The High Court has not considered this question. Hence we do not propose to go into the same.

11. In the result this appeal is allowed, the order of the High Court is set aside and the case remitted to the High Court for disposal according to law. The petitioner-appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal from the 1st respondent.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1970 SUPREME COURT 494 (V 57 C 109)

(From Madras: 1969 Mad LW (Cr) 98)

J. M. SHELAT, V. BHARGAVA, C. A.
VAIDIALINGAM, K. S. HEGDE,
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

M/s. Rayala Corporation (P) Ltd., and another, Appellants v. The Director of Enforcement, New Delhi, Respondent; Advocate-General, Tamil Nadu, Intervener.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 18 and 19 of 1969, D/- 2-5-1969 and 23-7-1969.

(A) Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (1947), Sections 23 (1) (b), 23 (1) (a) and 23-D — Vires — Provision of Section 23 (1) (b) does not violate Article 14 of the Constitution.

It cannot be said that the provisions of Section 23 (1) (b) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act violate Article 14 of the Constitution by providing for a punishment heavier and severer than the penalty provided for the same acts under Section 23 (1) (a) of the Act. This is because the effect of Section 23-D of the Act is that the choice in respect of the proceeding to be taken under Section 23 (1) (a) or Section 23 (1) (b) has not been left to the unguided and arbitrary discretion of the Director of Enforcement, but is governed by principles indicated by that section. Parliament, by Foreign Exchange Regulation (Amendment) Act 39 of 1957, amended Section 23 (1) and, at the same time, also introduced Sec. 23-D in the Act. These two Sections 23 (1) and 23-D (1) must be read together, so that the procedure laid down in Section 23-D (1) is to be followed in all cases in which proceedings are intended to be taken under Section 23 (1). The effect of this interpretation is that, whenever there is any contravention of any section or rule mentioned in Section 23 (1), the Director of Enforcement must first proceed under the principal clause of Section 23-D (1) and initiate proceedings for adjudication of penalty. He cannot at that stage, at his discretion, choose to file a complaint in a Court for prosecution of the person concerned for the offence under Sec. 23 (1) (b). The Director of Enforcement can only file a complaint by acting in accordance with the proviso to Section 23-D (1), which clearly lays down that the complaint is only to be filed in those cases where, at any stage of the inquiry the Director of Enforcement comes to the opinion that, having regard to the circumstances of the case, the penalty which he is empowered to impose would not be adequate. Until this requirement is satisfied, he cannot make a complaint to the Court for prosecution of the person concerned under Section 23 (1) (b). The choice of the proceeding to be taken against the person, who is liable for action for contravention under Section 23 (1), is thus, not left entirely to the discretion of the Director of Enforcement, but the criterion for making the choice is laid down in the proviso to Section 23-D (1). Thus, whenever, there is a contravention by any person which is made punishable under either clause (a) or clause (b) of Section 23 (1), the Director of Enforcement must first initiate proceedings under the principal clause of Section 23-D (1) and he is empowered to file a complaint in Court only when he finds that he is required to do so in accordance with the proviso. It is by resorting to the proviso only that he can place that person in greater jeopardy of being liable to a more severe punishment under Section 23 (1) (b) of the Act. AIR 1962 SC 1764, Rel. on.

(B) Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (1947), Sections 4 (1), 5 (1), 9, 23-D (1) and proviso, and 23 (3) — Contravention of Sections 4 (1), 5 (1) and 9 — Enquiry under Section 23-D (1) instituted by issue of show cause notice — Complaint made to the Court without having any material which could lead to the opinion that Director of Enforcement will not be in a position to impose adequate penalty — Complaint, held was filed without complying with the proviso and was invalid. 1969 Mad LW (Cr) 98, Reversed.

(Para 12)

(C) Defence of India Rules (1962), Rules 132-A (2) and 132-A (4) — Violation of Rule 132-A (2) — Prosecution launched on 17-3-1968 after Rule 132-A (2) was omitted by Defence of India Amendment Rules 1965 — Prosecution is illegal. 1969 Mad LW (Cr) 98, Reversed.

The language contained in clause 2 of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1965 whereby Rule 132-A (2) was omitted can only afford protection to action already taken while Rule 132-A (2) was in force, but cannot justify initiation of a new proceeding which will not be a thing done or omitted to be done under the rule but a new act of initiating a proceeding after Rule 132-A (2) had ceased to exist. On this interpretation, the complaint made for the offence under R. 132-A (4) of the D. I. Rules after 1st April 1965, when Rule 132-A (2) was omitted, has to be held invalid. 1969 Mad LW (Cr) 98, Reversed, AIR 1951 SC 301, Rel. on; AIR 1951 All 703, Approved; 1947 AC 362, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 93 & AIR 1947 FC 38, Dist. ORDER OF THE COURT

BHARGAVA, J. (On behalf of Shelat, Vaidialingam, Hegde and Grover, JJ.):— (2-5-1969):— We have come to the finding that this was a fit case where the High Court of Madras should have allowed the applications under Section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure and should have quashed the proceedings taken on the basis of the complaint dated 17th March, 1968. Consequently, the appeals are allowed. The order of the High Court is set aside and the proceedings are quashed. The detailed reasons will follow.

BHARGAVA, J.: (23-7-1969)— These appeals, by certificate, challenging a common Order of the High Court of Madras dismissing applications under Section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure presented by the appellants in the two appeals for quashing proceedings being taken against them in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, on the basis of a complaint filed on 17th March, 1968 by the respondent the Director of Enforcement, New Delhi. The Rayala Corporation Private Ltd., appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 18 of 1969, was accused No. 1 in the complaint, while one M. R. Pratap, Managing Director of accused No. 1, appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 19/1969 was accused No. 2. The circumstances under which the complaint was filed may be briefly stated.

2. The premises of accused No. 1 were raided by the Enforcement Directorate on the 20th and 21st December, 1966 and certain records were seized from the control of the Manager. Some enquiries were made subsequently and, thereafter, on the 25-8-1967, a notice was issued by the respondent to the two accused to show cause why adjudication proceedings should not be instituted against them for violation of Secs. 4 and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act VII of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") on the allegation that a total sum of 2,44,713.70 Swedish Kronars had been deposited in a Bank account in Sweden in the name of accused No. 2 at the instance of accused No. 1 which had acquired the foreign exchange and had failed to surrender it to an authorised dealer as required under the provisions of the Act. They were called upon to show cause in writing within 14 days of the receipt of the notice. Thereafter, some correspondence went on between the respondent and the two accused and, later, on 4th November, 1967, another notice was issued by the respondent addressed to accused No. 2 alone stating that accused No. 2 had acquired a sum of Sw. Krs. 88,913.09 during the period 1963 to 1965 in Stockholm, was holding that sum in a bank account, and did not offer or cause it to be offered to the Reserve Bank of India on behalf of the Central Government, so that he had contravened the provisions of Section 4 (1) and Section 9 of the Act, and affording to him an opportunity under Section 23 (3) of the Act of showing, within 15 days from the receipt of the notice that he had permission or special exemption from the Reserve Bank of India in his favour for acquiring this amount of foreign exchange and for not surrendering the amount in accordance with law. A similar show cause notice was issued to accused No. 1 in respect of the same amount on 20th January, 1968, mentioning the deposit in favour of accused No. 2 and failure of accused No. 1 to surrender the amount, and giving an opportunity to accused No. 1 to produce the permission or special exemption from the Reserve Bank of India. On the 16th March, 1968, another notice was issued addressed to both the accused to show cause in writing within 14 days of the receipt of the notice why adjudication proceedings as contemplated in Section 23-D of the Act should not be held against them in respect of a sum of Sw. Krs. 1,55,801.41 which were held in a bank account in Stockholm in the name of accused No. 2 and in respect of which both the accused had contravened the provisions of Sections 4 (3), 4 (1), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Act. The notice mentioned that it was being issued in supersession of the first show cause notice dated 25th August, 1967, and added that it had since been decided to launch a prosecution in respect of Sw. Krs. 88,913.09. The latter amount was the amount in respect of which the two notices of 4th November, 1967 and 20th January, 1968 were issued to the two accused, while this notice of 16th March, 1968 for adjudication proceedings related to the balance of the amount arrived at by deducting this sum from the original total sum of Sw. Krs. 2,44,713.70. The next day, on 17th March, 1968, a complaint was filed against both the accused in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, for contravention of the provisions of Sections 4 (1), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Act punishable under Section 23 (1) (b) of the Act. In addition, the complaint also charged both the accused with violation of Rule 132-A (2) of the Defence of India Rules (hereinafter referred to as "the D. I. Rs.") which was punishable under Rule 132-A (4) of the said Rules. Thereupon, both the accused moved High Court for quashing the proceedings sought to be taken against them on the basis of this complaint. Those applications having been dismissed, the appellants have come up in these appeals challenging the order of the High Court dismissing their applications and praying for quashing of the proceedings being taken on the basis of that complaint.

3. In these appeals, Mr. A. K. Sen, appearing on behalf of the appellants has raised three points. In respect of the prosecution for violation of Sections 4 (1), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Act punishable under Section 23 (1) (b) of the Act the principal ground raised is that Sec. 23 (1) (b) of the Act is ultra vires Article 14 of the Constitution inasmuch as it provides for a punishment heavier and severer than the punishment or penalty provided for the same acts under Section 23 (1) (a) of the Act. In the alternative, the second point taken is that, even if Section 23 (1) (b) is not void, the complaint in respect of the offences punishable under that section has not been filed properly in accordance with the proviso to Section 23-D (1) of the Act, so that proceedings cannot be competently taken on the basis of that complaint. The third point raised relates to the charge of violation of Rule 132-A (2) of the D. I. Rs. punishable under Rule 132-A (4) of those Rules, and is to the effect that Rule 132-A of the D. I. Rs. was omitted by a notification of the Ministry of Home Affairs dated 30th March, 1965 and, consequently, a prosecution in respect of an offence punishable under that Rule could not be instituted on 17th March, 1968 when that Rule had ceased to exist. On these three grounds, the order quashing the proceedings being taken on the complaint in respect of all the offences mentioned in it has been sought in these appeals.

4. To appreciate the first point raised before us and to deal with it properly, we may reproduce below the provisions of Section 23 and Section 23-D (1) of the Act:—

"23. Penalty and procedure.— (1) If any person contravenes the provisions of Section 4, Section 5, Section 9, Section 10, sub-section (2) of Section 12, Section 18, Section 18-A or Section 18-B or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder, he shall—

(a) be liable to such penalty not exceeding three times the value of the foreign exchange in respect of which the contravention has taken place, or five thousand rupees, whichever is more, as may be adjudged by the Director of Enforcement in the manner hereinafter provided, or

(b) upon conviction by a Court be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

(1A) If any person contravenes any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder, for the contravention of which no penalty is expressly provided, he shall, upon conviction by a Court, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

(1B) Any Court trying a contravention under sub-section (1) or sub-section (1A) and the authority adjudging any contravention under clause (a) of sub-section (1) may, if it thinks fit, and in addition to any sentence or penalty which it may impose for such contravention, direct that any currency, security, gold or silver, or goods or any other money or property, in respect of which the contravention has taken place, shall be confiscated to the Central Government and further direct that the foreign exchange holdings, if any, of the person committing the contravention or any part thereof shall be brought back into India or shall be retained outside India in accordance with the directions made in this behalf.

Explanation.—For the purposes of the sub-section, property in respect of which contravention has taken place shall include deposits in a bank, where the said property is converted into such deposits.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 32 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act 5 of 1898), it shall be lawful for any magistrate of the first class, specially empowered in this behalf by the State Government, and for any presidency magistrate to pass a sentence of fine exceeding two thousand rupees on any person convicted of an offence punishable under this section.

(3) No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under sub-section (1) except upon complaint in writing made by the Director of Enforcement, or

(aa) of any offence punishable under sub-section (2) of Section 191,—

(i) where the offence is alleged to have been committed by an officer of Enforcement not lower in rank than an Assistant Director of Enforcement, except with the previous sanction of the Central Government;

(ii) where the offence is alleged to have been committed by an officer of Enforcement lower in rank than an Assistant Director of Enforcement, except with the previous sanction of the Director of Enforcement, or;

(b) of any offence punishable under sub-section (1A) of this section or Section 23-F, except upon complaint in writing made by the Director of Enforcement or any officer authorised in this behalf by the Central Government or the Reserve Bank by a general or special order:

Provided that where any such offence is the contravention of any of the provisions of this Act or any rule, direction or order made thereunder which prohibits the doing of an act without permission, no such complaint shall be made unless the person accused of the offence has been given an opportunity of showing that he had such permission.

(4) Nothing in the first proviso to Section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act 5 of 1898), shall apply to any offence punishable under this section."

23D. Power to adjudicate. —(1) For the purpose of adjudging under clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 23 whether any person has committed a contravention, the Director of Enforcement shall hold an inquiry in the prescribed manner after giving that person a reasonable opportunity of being heard and if, on such inquiry, he is satisfied that the person has committed the contravention, he may impose such penalty as he thinks fit in accordance with the provisions of the said Section 23:

Provided that if, at any stage of the inquiry, the Director of Enforcement is of opinion that having regard to the circumstances of the case, the penalty which he is empowered to impose would not be adequate, he shall, instead of imposing any penalty himself, make a complaint in writing to the Court".

A plain reading of Section 23 (1) of the Act shows that under this sub-section provision is made for action being taken against any person who contravenes the provisions of Sections 4, 5, 9, 10, 12 (2), 18, 18A or 18B or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder; and clauses (a) and (b) indicate the two different proceedings that can be taken for such contravention. Under clause (a), the person is liable to a penalty only, and that penalty cannot exceed three times the value of the foreign exchange in respect of which the contravention has taken place, or Rs. 5,000, whichever is more. This penalty can be imposed by an adjudication made by the Director of Enforcement in the manner provided in Sec. 23D of the Act. The alternative punishment that is provided in clause (b) is to be imposed upon conviction by a Court when the Court can sentence the person to imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both. Clearly, the punishment provided under Section 23 (1) (b) is severer and heavier than the penalty to which the person is made liable if proceedings are taken under Sec. 23 (1) (a) instead of prosecuting him in a Court under Section 23 (1) (b). The argument of Mr. Sen is that this section lays down no principles at all for determining when the person concerned should be proceeded against under Section 23 (1) (a) and when under Section 23 (1) (b), and it would appear that it is left to the arbitrary discretion of the Director of Enforcement to decide which proceedings should be taken. The liability of a person for more or less severe punishment for the same act at the sole discretion and arbitrary choice of the Director of Enforcement, it is urged, denies equality before law guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution.

5. The submission made would have carried great force with us but for our view that the effect of Section 23D of the Act is that the choice in respect of the proceeding to be taken under Section 23 (1) (a) or Section 23 (1) (b) has not been left to the unguided and arbitrary discretion of the Director of Enforcement, but is governed by principles indicated by that section. In this connection, it is pertinent to note that Section 23 (1) of the Act as originally enacted in 1947 did not provide for alternative punishment for the same contravention and contained only one single provision under which any person contravening any of the provisions of the Act or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder was punishable with imprisonment for a term which could extend to two years or with fine or with both, with the additional clause that any Court trying any such contravention might, if it thought fit and in addition to any sentence which it might impose for such contravention, direct that any currency, security, gold or silver, or goods or other property in respect of which the contravention has taken place shall be confiscated. No question of the applicability of Article 14 of the Constitution could, therefore, arise while the provision stood as originally enacted.

6. Parliament, by Foreign Exchange Regulation (Amendment) Act XXXIX of 1957, amended Section 23 (1) and, at the same time, also introduced Section 23-D in the Act. It was by this amendment that two alternative proceedings for the same contravention were provided in Section 23 (1). In thus introducing two different proceedings, Parliament put in the forefront proceedings for penalty to be taken by the Director of Enforcement by taking up adjudication, while the punishment to be awarded by the Court, upon conviction, was mentioned as the second type of proceeding that could be resorted to. Section 23D (1) is also divisible into two parts. The first part lays down what the Director of Enforcement has to do in order to adjudge penalty under Section 23 (1) (a), and the second part, contained in the proviso, gives the power to the Director of Enforcement to file a complaint instead of imposing a penalty himself. In our opinion, these two Sections 23 (1) and 23D (1) must be read together, so that the procedure laid down in Sec. 23D (1) is to be followed in all cases in which proceedings are intended to be taken under Sec. 23 (1). The effect of this interpretation is that, whenever there is any contravention of any section or rule mentioned in Section 23 (1), the Director of Enforcement must first proceed under the principal clause of Section 23D (1) and initiate proceedings for adjudication of penalty. He cannot at that stage, at his discretion, choose to file a complaint in a Court for prosecution of the person concerned for the offence under Section 23 (1) (b). The Director of Enforcement can only file a complaint by acting in accordance with the proviso to Section 23D (1), which clearly lays down that the complaint is only to be filed in those cases where, at any stage of the inquiry, the Director of Enforcement comes to the opinion that, having regard to the circumstances of the case, the penalty which he is empowered to impose would not be adequate. Until this requirement is satisfied, he cannot make a complaint to the Court for prosecution of the person concerned under Section 23 (1) (b). The choice of the proceeding to be taken against the person, who is liable for action for contravention under Section 23 (1), is, thus, not left entirely to the discretion of the Director of Enforcement, but the criterion for making the choice is laid down in the proviso to Section 23D (1). It cannot possibly be contended, and no attempt was made by Mr. Sen to contend, that, if we accept this interpretation that the right of the Director of Enforcement to make a complaint to the Court for the offence under Section 23 (1) (b) can be exercised only in those cases where, in accordance with the proviso, he comes to the opinion that the penalty which he is empowered to impose would not be adequate, the validity of Section 23 (1) (b) of the Act can still be challenged.

7. In this connection, it was urged before us that the language of the principal clause of Section 23D (1) taken together with the language of the proviso does not justify an interpretation that a complaint for an offence under Section 23 (1) (b) cannot be made by the Director of Enforcement except in accordance with the proviso, particularly because the principal clause of Section 23D (1) merely lays down the procedure that has to be adopted by the Director of Enforcement when proceeding under Section 23 (1) (a), and contains no words indicating that such a proceeding must invariably be resorted to by him whenever he gets information of a contravention mentioned in Section 23 (1). The language does not contain any words creating a bar to his proceeding to file a complaint straightway instead of taking proceedings for adjudication under Section 23D (1). It is true that neither in Section 23 (1) itself nor in Section 23D (1) has the Legislature used specific words excluding the filing of a complaint before proceedings for adjudication are taken under Section 23D (1). If any such words had been used, no such controversy could have been raised as has been put forward before us in these appeals. We have, however, to gather the intention of the Legislature from the enactment as a whole. In this connection, significance attaches to the fact that Section 23D (1) was introduced simultaneously with the provision made for alternative proceedings under Section 23 (1) in its clauses (a) and (b). It appears to be obvious that the Legislature adopted this course so as to ensure that all proceedings under Section 23 (1) are taken in the manner laid down in Section 23D (1). Parliament must be credited with the knowledge that, if provision is made for two alternative punishments for the same act one differing from the other without any limitations, such a provision would be void under Article 14 of the Constitution; and that is the reason why Parliament simultaneously introduced the procedure to be adopted under Section 23D (1) in the course of which the Director of Enforcement is to decide whether a complaint is to be made in Court and under what circumstances he can do so. We have also to keep in view the general principle of interpretation that, if a particular interpretation will enure to the validity of a law, that interpretation must be preferred. In these circumstances, we have no hesitation in holding that, whenever there is a contravention by any person which is made punishable under either clause (a) or clause (b) of Section 23 (1), the Director of Enforcement must first initiate proceedings under the principal clause of Section 23D (1) and he is empowered to file a complaint in Court only when he finds that he is required to do so in accordance with the proviso. It is by resorting to the proviso only that he can place that person in greater jeopardy of being liable to a more severe punishment under Section 23 (1) (b) of the Act.

8. The view we have taken is in line with the decision of this Court in Shanti Prasad Jain v. The Director of Enforcement, (1963) 2 SCR 297 = (AIR 1962 SC 1764) where this Court considered the validity of Section 23 (1) (a), and Section 23D which were challenged on the ground of two alternative procedures being applicable for awarding punishment for the same act. The Court noticed the position in the following words:—

“It will be seen that when there is a contravention of Section 4 (1), action with respect to it is to be taken in the first instance by the Director of Enforcement. He may either adjudge the matter himself in accordance with Section 23 (1) (a), or he may send it on to a Court if he considers that a more severe penalty than he can impose is called for. Now, the contention of the appellant is that when the case is transferred to a Court, it will be tried in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code, but that when the Director himself tries it, he will follow the procedure prescribed therefor under the Rules framed under the Act, and that when the law provides for the same offence being tried under two procedures, which are substantially different, and it is left to the discretion of an executive officer whether the trial should take place under the one or the other of them, there is clear discrimination, and Article 14 is contravened. Therefore, Section 23 (1) (a) must, it is argued, be struck down as unconstitutional and the imposition of fine on the appellant under that section set aside as illegal."

The Court then distinguished the provisions of the Act with the law considered in the case of State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali, (1952) 3 SCR 284= (AIR 1952 SC 75) and held:—

"Section 23D confers authority on the very officer who has power to try and dispose of a case to send it on for trial to a Court, and that too only when he considers that a more severe punishment than what he is authorised to impose should be awarded."

On this view about the effect of Section 23D, the Court gave the decision that the power conferred on the Director of Enforcement under Section 23D to transfer cases to a Court is not unguided and arbitrary, and does not offend Article 14 of the Constitution; and Section 23 (1) (a) cannot be assailed as unconstitutional. In that case, the argument was that Section 23 (1) (a) should be struck down, because the procedure prescribed by it permitted proceedings to be taken by the Director of Enforcement himself which procedure did not confer the same rights on the defence as the procedure prescribed for trial if the Director of Enforcement filed a complaint for the offence under Section 23 (1) (b). In the case before us, it is Section 23 (1) (b) which is challenged and on a slightly different ground that it provides for a higher punishment than that provided by Section 23 (1) (a). The answer to both the questions is found in the view taken by us in the present case as well as by this Court in the case of Shanti Prasad Jain, (1963) 2 SCR 297= (AIR 1962 SC 1764) (supra) that the Director of Enforcement, though he has power to try the case under Section 23 (1) (a), can only send the case to the Court if he considers that a more severe punishment than what he is authorised to impose should be awarded. The Court in that case also thus accepted the principle that Section 23D limits entirely the procedure the Director of Enforcement has to observe when deciding whether the punishment should be under Section 23 (1) (a) or under Section 23 (1) (b).

9. However, we consider that, in this case, there is considerable force in the second point urged by Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellants that the respondent, in filing the complaint on 17th March, 1968, did not act in accordance with the requirements of the proviso to Section 23D (1). We have held above that the proviso to Section 23D (1) lays down the only manner in which the Director of Enforcement can make a complaint and this provision has been laid down as a safeguard to ensure that a person, who is being proceeded against for a contravention under Section 23 (1), is not put in danger of higher and severer punishment at the choice and sweet-will of the Director of Enforcement. When such a safeguard is provided by legislature, it is necessary that the authority, which takes the step of instituting against that person proceedings in which severer punishment can be awarded, complies strictly with all the conditions laid down by law to be satisfied by him before instituting that proceeding. In the present case, therefore, we have to see whether the requirements of the proviso to Section 23D (1) were satisfied at the stage when the respondent filed the impugned complaint on 17th March, 1968.

10. The proviso to Section 23D (1) lays down that the complaint may be made at any stage of the enquiry but only if, having regard to the circumstances of the case, the Director of Enforcement finds that the penalty which he is empowered to impose would not be adequate. It was urged by Mr. Sen that, in this case, the complaint was not filed as a result of the enquiry under the principal clause of Section 23D (1) at all and, in any case, there was no material before the respondent on which he could have formed the opinion that the penalty which he was empowered to impose would not be adequate in respect of the sum of Sw. Krs. 88,913.09 which, it was alleged, had been acquired by the two accused during the period 1963 to 1965 and kept in deposit against law. Arguments at some length were advanced before us on the question as to what should be the stage of the enquiry at which the Director of Enforcement should form his opinion and will be entitled to file the complaint in Court. It appears to us that it is not necessary in this case to go into that question. It is true that the enquiry in this case under Section 23D (1) had been instituted by the issue of the show cause notice dated 25th August, 1967, that being the notice mentioned in Rule 3 (1) of the Adjudication Proceedings and Appeal Rules, 1957. On the record, however, it does not appear that, even after the issue of that notice, any such material came before the respondent which could be relevant for forming an opinion that the penalty which he was empowered to impose for the contravention in respect of the sum of Sw. Krs. 88,913.09 would not be adequate. The respondent, in the case of accused No. 2, appears to have formed a prima facie opinion that a complaint should be made against him in Court when he issued the notice on 4th November, 1967 under the proviso to Section 23 (3) of the Act, and a similar opinion in respect of accused No. 1 when he issued the notice on 20th January, 1968 under the same proviso. There is, however, no information on the record to indicate that, by the time these notices were issued, any material had appeared before the respondent in the course of the enquiry initiated by him through the notice dated 25th August, 1967, which could lead to the opinion being formed by the respondent that he will not be in a position to impose adequate penalty by continuing the adjudication proceedings. Even subsequently, when one of the accused replied to the notice, there does not appear to have been brought before the respondent any such relevant material.

11. Mr. S. T. Desai on behalf of the respondent drew our attention to para. 3 (E) of the petition presented by accused No. 1 for certificate under Article 132 (1) and Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution in this case which contains the following pleading :—

his forming an opinion that the accused is guilty of violations and that the penalty is not adequate and as such, the prosecution filed in C. C. 8756 of 68 is liable to be quashed on this ground.”

Relying on this pleading, Mr. Desai urged that it amounts to an admission by accused No. 1 that, during enquiry, various statements were taken and recorded and investigations made, so that we should not hold that there was no material on the basis of which the respondent could have formed the opinion that it was a fit case for making a complaint. The pleading does not show that any statements were taken or recorded during the course of the enquiry held under S. 23D (1) of the Act in the manner laid down by the Adjudication Proceedings and Appeal Rules 1957. Under these Rules, after a notice is issued, the Director of Enforcement is required to consider the cause shown by such person in response to the notice and, if he is of the opinion that adjudication proceedings should be held, he has to fix a date for the appearance of that person either personally or through his lawyer or other authorised representative. Subsequently, he has to explain to the person proceeded against or his lawyer or authorised representative the offence alleged to have been committed by such person indicating the provisions of the Act or of the Rules, directions or orders made thereunder in respect of which contravention is alleged to have taken place, and then he has to give an opportunity to such person to produce such documents or evidence as he may consider relevant to the inquiry. It is on the conclusion of such an inquiry that the Director can impose a penalty under Section 23 (1) (a). In the present case, there is no material at all to show that any proceedings were taken in the manner indicated by the Rules referred to above. There does not appear to have been any cause shown by either of the two accused, or consideration of such cause by the respondent to decide whether adjudication proceedings should be held. It is true that there is some material to indicate that, after the issue of notice dated 25th August, 1967, some investigations were carried on by the respondent; but those investigations would not be part of the inquiry which had to be held in accordance with Adjudication Proceedings and Appeal Rules, 1957. It appears that, at one stage, before the complaint was filed, a writ petition was moved under Article 226 of the Constitution in the High Court of Madras praying for the quashing of the notice dated 25th August, 1967. The order made by the High Court on one of the interim applications in connection with that notice shows that, while that writ petition was pending, some investigations were permitted by the Court, but further penal proceedings in pursuance of that notice were restrained. This clearly indicates that whatever statements were recorded by the respondent as mentioned in the petition of accused No. 1 referred to above must have been in the course of investigation and not in the course of the inquiry under Section 23D (1) of the Act. The record before us, therefore, does not show that any material at all was available to the respondent in the course of the enquiry under Section 23D (1) on the basis of which he could have formed an opinion that it was a fit case for making a complaint on the ground that he would not be able to impose adequate penalty. The complaint has, therefore, to be held to have been filed without satisfying the requirements and conditions of the proviso to Section 23D (1) of the Act and is in violation of the safeguard provided by the Legislature for such contingencies. The complaint, insofar as it related to the contravention by the accused of provisions of Sections 4 (1), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Act punishable under Section 23 (1) (b) is concerned, is invalid and proceedings being taken in pursuance of it must be quashed.

12. There remains for consideration the question whether proceedings could be validly continued on the complaint in respect of the charge under Rule 132-A (4) of the D. I. Rs. against the two accused. The two relevant clauses of Rule 132-A are as follows:

"132A. (2) No person other than an authorised dealer shall buy or otherwise acquire or borrow from, or sell or otherwise transfer or lend to, or exchange with, any person not being an authorised dealer, any foreign exchange.

(4) If any person contravenes any of the provisions of this rule, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both; and any Court trying such contravention may direct that the foreign exchange in respect of which the Court is satisfied that this rule has been contravened, shall be forfeited to the Central Government."

The charge in the complaint against the two accused was that they had acquired foreign exchange to the extent of Sw. Krs. 88,913.09 in violation of the prohibition contained in Rule 132A (2) during the period when this Rule was in force, so that they became liable to punishment under Rule 132A (4). Rule 132-A as a whole ceased to be in existence as a result of the notification issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs on 30th March, 1965, by which the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1965 were promulgated. Clause 2 of these Amendment Rules reads as under:—

"In the Defence of India Rules, 1962, Rule 132A (relating to prohibition of dealings in foreign exchange) shall be omitted except as respects things done or omitted to be done under that rule."

The argument of Mr. Sen was that, even if there was a contravention of Rule 132A (2) by the accused when that Rule was in force, the act of contravention cannot be held to be a "thing done or omitted to be done under that rule", so that, after that rule has been omitted, no prosecution in respect of that contravention can be instituted. He conceded the possibility that, if a prosecution had already been started while Rule 132A was in force, that prosecution might have been competently continued. Once the Rule was omitted altogether, no new proceeding by way of prosecution could be initiated even though it might be in respect of an offence committed earlier during the period that the rule was in force. We are inclined to agree with the submission of Mr. Sen that the language contained in clause 2 of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1965 can only afford protection to action already taken while the rule was in force, but cannot justify initiation of a new proceeding which will not be a thing done or omitted to be done under the rule but a new act of initiating a proceeding after the rule had ceased to exist. On this interpretation, the complaint made for the offence under Rule 132A (4) of the D. I. Rs., after 1st April, 1965 when the rule was omitted, has to be held invalid.

13. This view of ours is in line with the general principle enunciated by this Court in the case of S. Krishnan v. State of Madras, 1951 SCR 621=(AIR 1951 SC 301) relating to temporary enactments, in the following words:—

"The general rule in regard to a temporary statute is that, in the absence of special provision to the contrary, proceedings which are being taken against a person under it will ipso facto terminate as soon as the statute expires."

Mention may also be made to a decision of a learned Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Seth Jugmendar Das v. State, AIR 1951 All 703 where a similar view was taken when considering the effect of the repeal of the Defence of India Act, 1939, and the Ordinance No. XII of 1946 which had amended Section 1 (4) of that Act.

14. On the other hand, Mr. Desai on behalf of the respondent relied on a decision of the Privy Council in Wicks v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 1947 AC 362. In that case, the appellant, whose case came up before the Privy Council, was convicted for contravention of Regulation 2A of the Defence (General) Regulations framed under the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 as applied to British subjects abroad by section 3 (1) (b) of the said Act. It was held that, at the date when the acts, which were the subject-matter of the charge, were committed, the regulation in question was in force, so that, if the appellant had been prosecuted immediately afterwards, the validity of his conviction could not be open to any challenge at all. But the Act of 1939 was a temporary Act, and after various extensions it expired on February 24, 1946. The trial of the accused took place only in May 1946, and he was convicted and sentenced to four years' penal servitude on May 28. In these circumstances, the question raised in the appeal was: "Is a man entitled to be acquitted when he is proved to have broken a Defence Regulation at a time when that regulation was in operation, because his trial and conviction take place after the regulation has expired?" The Privy Council took notice of sub-section (3) of Section II of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 which laid down that "the expiry of this Act shall not affect the operation thereof as respects things previously done or omitted to be done". It was argued before the Privy Council that the phrase "things previously done" does not cover offences previously committed. This argument was rejected by Viscount Simon on behalf of the Privy Council and it was held that the appellant in that case could be convicted in respect of the offence which he had committed when the regulation was in force. That case, however, is distinguishable from the case before us inasmuch as, in that case, the saving provision laid down that the operation of that Act itself was not to be affected by the expiry as respects things previously done or omitted to be done. The Act could, therefore, be held to be in operation in respect of acts already committed, so that the conviction could be validly made even after the expiry of the Act in respect of an offence committed before the expiry. In the case before us the operation of Rule 132A of the D. I. Rs. has not been continued after its omission. The language used in the notification only affords protection to things already done under the rule, so that it cannot permit further application of that rule by instituting a new prosecution in respect of something already done. The offence alleged against the accused in the present case is in respect of acts done by them which cannot be held to be acts under that rule. The difference in the language thus makes it clear that the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in the case cited above cannot apply to the notification with which we are concerned.

15. Reference was next to a decision of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Hiralal Sutwala, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 93, but, there again, the accused was sought to be prosecuted for an offence punishable under an Act on the repeal of which Section 6 of the General Clauses Act had been made applicable. In the case before us, Section 6 of the General Clauses Act cannot obviously apply on the omission of Rule 132A of the D. I. Rs. for the two obvious reasons that Section 6 only applies to repeals and not to omissions, and applies when the repeal is of a Central Act or Regulation and not of a Rule. If Section 6 of the General Clauses Act had been applied, no doubt this complaint against the two accused for the offence punishable under R. 132A of the D. I. Rs. could have been instituted even after the repeal of that rule.

16. The last case relied upon is J. K. Gas Plant Manufacturing Co., (Rampur) Ltd. v. King Emperor, 1947 FCR 141= (AIR 1947 FC 38). In that case, the Federal Court had to deal with the effect of sub-section (4) of Section 1 of the Defence of India Act, 1939 and the Ordnance No. XII of 1946 which were also considered by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Seth Jugmender Das (supra). After quoting the amended sub-section (4) of Section 1 of the Defence of India Act, the Court held:—

“The express insertion of these saving clauses was no doubt due to a belated realisation that the provisions of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) apply only to repealed statutes and not to expiring statutes, and that the general rule in regard to the expiration of the temporary statute is that “unless it contains some special provision to the contrary, after a temporary Act has expired, no proceedings can be taken upon it and it ceases to have any further effect. Therefore, offences committed against temporary Acts must be prosecuted and punished before the Act expires and as soon as the Act expires any proceedings which are being taken against a person will ipso facto terminate.”

The Court cited with approval the decision in the case of 1947 AC 362 (supra), and held that, in view of Section 1 (4) of the Defence of India Act, 1939, as amended by Ordinance No. XII of 1946, the prosecution for a conviction for an offence committed when the Defence of India Act was in force, was valid even after the Defence of India Act had ceased to be in force. That case is, however, distinguishable from the case before us in two respects. In that case, the prosecution had been started before the Defence of India Act ceased to be in force and, secondly, the language introduced in the amended sub-sec. (4) of Section 1 of the Act had the effect of making applicable the principles laid down in Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, so that a legal proceeding could be instituted even after the repeal of the Act in respect of an offence committed during the time when the Act was in force. As we have indicated earlier, the notification of the Ministry of Home Affairs omitting Rule 132-A of the D. I. Rs. did not make any such provision similar to that contained in Section 6 of the General Clauses Act. Consequently, it is clear that, after the omission of Rule 132A of the D. I. Rs., no prosecution could be instituted even in respect of an act which was an offence when that Rule was in force.

17. In this connection, Mr. Desai pointed out to us that, simultaneously with the omission of R. 132-A of the D. I. Rs., Section 4 (1) of the Act was amended so as to bring the prohibition contained in Rule 132A (2) under Section 4 (1) of the Act. He urged that, from this simultaneous action taken, it should be presumed that there was no intention of the Legislature that acts, which were offences punishable under R. 132A of the D. I. Rs., should go unpunished after the omission of that rule. It, however, appears that when Section 4 (1) of the Act was amended, the Legislature did not make any provision that an offence previously committed under Rule 132A of the D. I. Rs., would continue to remain punishable as an offence of contravention of Section 4 (1) of the Act, nor was any provision made permitting operation of Rule 132A itself so as to permit institution of prosecutions in respect of such offences. The consequence is that the present complaint is incompetent even in respect of the offence under Rule 132A (4). This is the reason why we hold that this was an appropriate case where the High Court should have allowed the applications under Section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure and should have quashed the proceedings on this complaint.

18. Consequently, as already directed by our short Order dated 2nd May, 1969, the appeals are allowed, the order of the High Court rejecting the applications under Section 561A of the Code of Criminal Procedure is set aside, and the proceedings for the prosecution of the appellants are quashed.

Appeals allowed.

For creating a charge on immovable property no particular form of words is needed: by adequate words intention may be expressed to make property or a fund belonging to a person charged for payment of a debt mentioned in the deed. But in order that a charge may be created, there must be evidence of intention disclosed by the deed that a specified property or fund belonging to a person was intended to be made liable to satisfy the debt due by him. (Para 7)

Bank A had on overdraft account with Bank B. Father of the Manager of Bank A had executed from time to time letters of guarantee in favour of the Bank B agreeing to pay amounts due by Bank A under the overdraft arrangement. On filing suit by Bank B against Bank A, its Manager and his father.

Held on interpretation of the clauses of the letter of guarantee, that it was not intended to create a charge on properties to which the letters of guarantee related, in favour of the Bank A for the amount which may fall due under the letter of guarantee. The letter of guarantee created merely a personal obligation. The recitals of the deed did not evidence any intention of the father to create a charge in favour of Bank A, they merely set out an arrangement between the father and the members of his family that the liability under the letter of guarantee, if and when it arises, will be satisfied by his son out of the property allotted to him under the deed. The covenant was intended to confer a right of indemnity upon other members of the family, if the Bank B enforced the liability against them, and created no charge in favour of the Bank. The father had no intention to create a charge or to encumber any of the properties for the debt which may become due to the Bank. A. S. Where a Bank in whose favour letter of guarantee was executed, does not claim that it was a beneficiary under the terms of contract and the Bank was not a party, the Bank could not enforce the charge created by the letter of guarantee on the property of the executioner, even if there was an intention to create a charge.

SHAH, Actg. C. J.: The High Land Bank Kottayam of which the appellant M. C. Chacko was the Manager, had an overdraft account with the Kottayam Bank. K. C. Chacko, father of the appellant, had executed from time to time letters of guarantee in favour of the Kottayam Bank agreeing to pay the amounts due by the High Land Bank under the overdraft arrangement. By the last letter of guarantee dated 22nd January 1953 K. C. Chacko agreed to hold himself liable for the amounts due by the High Land Bank to the Kottayam Bank on the overdraft arrangement subject to a limit of Rupees 20,000.

2. The Kottayam Bank Ltd. filed a suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Kottayam against the High Land Bank for a decree for the amount due in the account. To this suit were also impleaded K. C. Chacko, the guarantor, M. C. Chacko Manager of the High Land Bank, and M. C. Joseph, Kuriakose Annamma and Chinamma, the last three being the son, daughter and wife respectively of K. C. Chacko. Against the High Land Bank the claim was made on the footing of the overdraft account: against K. C. Chacko on the letter of guarantee and against M. C. Chacko, his brother, his sister and his mother as universal donees of the property of K. C. Chacko under a deed dated June 21, 1951 under which, it was claimed a charge was created on the properties to which the deed related and against M. C. Chacko, also on the claim that he had personally agreed to pay the amount due by the High Land Bank. During the pendency of the suit, K. C. Chacko died and the suit was prosecuted against his widow, daughter and sons who were described also as his legal representatives.

3. The trial court decreed the suit against the High Land Bank and also against M. C. Chacko, limited to the property received by him from his father under the deed dated June 21, 1951. The claim of the Kottayam Bank to enforce the liability under the letter of guarantee personally against K. C. Chacko was held barred by the law of limitation and on that account not enforceable against his heirs and legal representatives. The Court also rejected the claim that M. C. Chacko had personally agreed to pay the amount due under the overdraft arrangement.

4. In appeal to the High Court by M. C. Chacko the decree passed by the trial court was confirmed and the cross-objections filed by the State Bank of Travancore with which the Kottayam Bank was merged claiming that M. C. Chacko was personally liable were dismissed. This appeal with special leave is preferred by M. C. Chacko against the decree of the High Court.

5. Two questions arise in this appeal: (1) whether under Ex. D-1 a charge is created in favour of the Kottayam Bank to satisfy the debt arising under the letter of guarantee and (2) whether the charge assuming that a charge arises is enforceable by the Bank when it was not a party to the deed Ex. D-1.

6. Ex. D-1 is called a deed of partition; in truth it is a deed whereby K. C. Chacko gave the properties described in the Schedule A to M. C. Chacko and other properties described in Schs. B to F to M. C. Chacko: M. C. Joseph, Annamma and Chinamma. In paragraph 17 it is recited:

"I have no debts whatsoever. If in pursuance of the letter given by me to the Kottayam Bank at the request of my eldest son, Chacko, for the purpose of the High Land Bank Ltd., Kottayam, of which he is the Managing Director, any amount is due and payable to the Kottayam Bank, that amount is to be paid from the High Land Bank by my son, Chacko. If the same is not so done and any amount becomes payable (by me) as per my letter, for that my eldest son, Chacko and the properties in Schedule A alone will be answerable for that amount."

The other paragraphs which deal with the properties in Schedule A may also be referred to. Paragraph 10 of the deed recited:

"The donees of the properties included in A, B and C schedules are, as from this date, to be in possession of their respective properties and to get mutation of registry in their names, pay land revenue and enjoy the income save that from coconut trees."

By paragraph 12 it was declared that notwithstanding the deed of partition, K. C. Chacko will take the income from the coconut trees standing on the properties included in Schedules A, B, C and F till his death and that the donees of the properties will take and enjoy the income from the coconut trees in their respective properties after his death. In paragraph 13 it was recited that:

"As it is decided that Chinamma.... should receive and have for her maintenance the rent of the building in Item 7 in the A schedule, as well as the rent of the building in Item 18 of the B schedule, she is to be in possession of these buildings as from this date and is to let them out and enjoy the rent. The respective donees will have possession and enjoyment after her death. Chinamma is to have full rights and liberty to reside in any of the houses included in A, B or C schedule and so long as she so resides in any of the houses, the donee of the respective house is to meet all her expenses. The rent collected by Chinamma from the buildings given possession of to her is to be utilised by her for her private expenses as she pleases."

In our judgment the various covenants in the deed were intended to incorporate an arrangement binding between the members of the family for satisfaction of the debt, if any, arising under the letter of guarantee.

7. We are unable to agree with the High Court that by Cl. 17 of the deed it was intended to create a charge in favour of the Kottayam Bank for the amount which may fall due under the letter of guarantee. The letter of guarantee created merely a personal obligation. The deed Ex. D-1 was executed before the last letter of guarantee dated January 22, 1953. By Cl. 17 of Ex. D-1 it is merely directed that the liability if any arising under the letter of guarantee, shall be satisfied by M. C. Chacko and not by the donor, his son M. C. Joseph, his daughter Annamma and his wife Chinamma. The reason for the provision in the deed is clear. M. C. Chacko was the Managing Director of the High Land Bank Ltd. and it was at the instance of M. C. Chacko that the letters of guarantee were executed by the donor. For creating a charge on immovable property no particular form of words is needed: by adequate words intention may be expressed to make property or a fund belonging to a person charged for payment of a debt mentioned in the deed. But in order that a charge may be created, there must be evidence of intention disclosed by the deed that a specified property or fund belonging to a person was intended to be made liable to satisfy the debt due by him. The recitals in Clause 17 of the deed do not evidence any intention of the donor to create a charge in favour of the Kottayam Bank, they merely set out an arrangement between the donor and the members of his family that the liability under the letter of guarantee, if and when it arises, will be satisfied by M. C. Chacko out of the property allotted to him under the deed.

8. The debt which M. C. Chacko was directed by the deed to satisfy was not in any sense a "family debt". It was a debt of K. C. Chacko; and K. C. Chacko was personally liable to pay that debt. After his death his sons, his daughter and his widow would be liable to satisfy the debt out of his estate in their hands. From the recitals in the deed Ext. D-1 an intention to convert a personal debt into a secured debt in favour of the Bank, a third person, cannot be inferred. In Akella Suryanarayana Rao v. Dwarapudi Basiviraddi, ILR 55 Mad 436 = (AIR 1932 Mad 457) the Madras High Court in construing a deed of partition of joint family property pursuant to a compromise decree, held that properties allotted to certain branches to which were also "allotted certain debts" with a stipulation that until the debts were fully discharged the properties allotted to the shares of the respective persons shall be liable in the first instance, were not subject to a charge in favour of the creditors. The Court held that the covenant in the partition deed resulted in a contract of indemnity, and not a charge. In the present case also the covenant that M. C. Chacko will either personally or out of the properties given to him satisfy the debt is intended to confer a right of indemnity upon other members of the family, if the Kottayam Bank enforced the liability against them, and created no charge in favour of the Bank. Clauses 12 and 13 of the deed support that view. By Clause 12 the right to the coconut trees standing in the properties included in Schedules A, B, C and F is reserved to K. C. Chacko. Similarly Chinamma, wife of K. C. Chacko, is permitted during her lifetime to occupy the houses in the properties described in the three schedules and to recover the income and to utilize the same for herself. It is clear that K. C. Chacko had no intention to create a charge or to encumber any of the properties for the debt which may become due to the Bank.

9. The Kottayam Bank not being a party to the deed was not bound by the covenants in the deed, nor could it enforce the covenants. It is settled law that a person not a party to a contract cannot subject to certain well recognised exceptions, enforce the terms of the contract: the recognised exceptions are that beneficiaries under the terms of the contract or where the contract is a part of the family arrangement may enforce the covenant. In Krishna Lal Sadhu v. Pramila Bala Dosi, ILR 55 Cal 1815 = (AIR 1928 Cal 518) Rankin, C. J. observed:

"Clause (d) of Section 2 of the Contract Act widens the definition of 'consideration' so as to enable a party to a contract to enforce the same in India in certain cases in which the English Law would regard that party as the recipient of a purely voluntary promise and would refuse to him a right of action on the ground of nudum pactum. Not only, however, is there nothing in Section 2 to encourage the idea that contracts can be enforced by a person who is not a party to the contract but this notion is rigidly excluded by the definition of 'promisor' and 'promisee.'"

Turnover from sale of jaggery—cane or palm—was subject to tax under S. 3 (1) of the Madras Act 9 of 1939 at three pies per rupee. Transactions of sale of "palm jaggery" were exempt partially from sales tax from 28-2-1955 and wholly from 1-4-1956, and transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" were exempt from 1-4-1958. On 1-4-1959 transactions of sale of "sugar including jaggery and gur" were exempt from liability to pay tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Act 1 of 1959. The exemption applied to all transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery". In consequence of the two notifications dated 30-12-1967 under Section 59 (1) and Section 17 (1) of Madras Act 1 of 1959 turnover from transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and was till then exempt from tax became liable to tax under Section 3 of the Madras Act 1 of 1959 whereas sale of "palm jaggery" remained exempt from liability to pay sales tax. The notification under Section 59 (1) issued in exercise of executive authority received legislative sanction by Madras Act 2 of 1968. The dealers carrying on business in cane jaggery filed writ petitions in High Court challenging levy of tax thereon. The petitions were rejected. On appeals to Supreme Court:—

* (Writ Petns. Nos. 1669 etc. of 1968, D/- 6-12-1968—Mad.)

Under the English Common Law only a person who is a party to a contract can sue on it and that the law knows nothing of a right gained by a third party arising out of a contract: Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Selfridge and Co., 1915 AC 847. It has however been recognised that where a trust is created by a contract, a beneficiary may enforce the rights which the trust so created has given him. The basis of that rule is that though he is not a party to the contract his rights are equitable and not contractual. The Judicial Committee applied that rule to an Indian case Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begam, (1910) 37 Ind App 152. In a later case Jamna Das v. Ram Autar, (1911) 39 Ind App 7 the Judicial Committee pointed out that the purchaser's contract to pay off a mortgage debt could not be enforced by the mortgagee who was not a party to the contract. It must therefore be taken as well settled that except in the case of a beneficiary under a trust created by a contract or in the case of a family arrangement, no right may be enforced by a person who is not a party to the contract.

10. Even if it be granted that there was an intention to create a charge, the Kottayam Bank not being a party to the deed enforce the charge only if it was a beneficiary under the terms of the contract, and it is not claimed that the Bank was a beneficiary under the deed Ex. D-1. The suit against M. C. Chacko must therefore be dismissed.

11. The decree passed by the High Court is modified and it is declared that M. C. Chacko is not personally liable for the debt due under the letter of guarantee executed by K. C. Chacko, nor are the properties in Schedule A allotted to M. C. Chacko under the deed dated June 21, 1951 liable to satisfy the debt due to the Kottayam Bank under the letter of guarantee.

12. Having regard to the circumstances of the case and specially that a concession that persons not parties to a contract may enforce the benefit reserved to them under the contract, was made before the High Court, we direct that the parties to this appeal will bear their respective costs throughout.

was delivered by

SHAH, J.: At the conclusion of the hearing of these appeals on April 23, 1969, we announced that "the appeals are dismissed with costs; reasons in support of the order will be delivered thereafter".
We proceed to record the reasons in support of the order.

2. The appellants carry on business as dealers in "cane jaggery" in the State of Tamil Nadu. As a result of certain legislative and executive measures, transactions of sale in "cane jaggery" were made liable as from January 1, 1968 to tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, and transactions of sale in "palm jaggery" remained exempt from sales tax.
The appellants filed petitions in the High Court of Madras challenging the validity of the levy of tax on "cane jaggery", on three grounds:

(1) that the levy of tax on turnover from sale of "cane jaggery" was discriminatory and violated the equality clause of the Constitution;

(2) that the levy of tax imposes a restriction on trade and commerce contrary to the provisions of Part XIII of the Constitution; and

(3) there is excessive delegation of legislative authority to the executive and on that account the levy of tax pursuant to an order made in exercise of the powers under Section 59 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act 1 of 1959 on "cane jaggery" is invalid.

The High Court rejected all the contentions.

3. Counsel for the appellants have in these appeals urged the first two grounds and have in addition submitted that in levying tax on turnover from sale of "cane jaggery" legislative power has been colourably exercised. The argument that there was excessive delegation to the executive of the legislative power was abandoned before the Court, because the State of Madras has enacted Act II of 1968 authorising levy of tax on sale of jaggery by amending Sch. III to Madras Act 1 of 1959.

4. Turnover from sale of jaggery—cane or palm—was subject to tax under
S. 3 (1) of the Madras Act IX of 1939 at three pies per rupee. By G. O. 651 dated February 28, 1955 and G. O. 2780 dated September 7, 1955 all sales of "palm jaggery" effected through Co-operative Societies and the Palm Gur Federation were exempted from tax. By another G. O. No. 1605 dated April 19, 1956, all transactions of sale in "palm jaggery" were exempted from sales tax with effect from April 1, 1956. Transactions of sale in "cane jaggery" therefore continued to remain liable to tax whereas sales of "palm jaggery" enjoyed the benefit of exemption from tax.

5. After the judgment of this Court in Bengal Immunity Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, 1955-2 SCR 603 = (AIR 1955 SC 661) the Parliament amended Article 286 and Entry 54 in List II of the Seventh Schedule and added a new Entry 92A in List I in the Seventh Schedule by the Constitution (Sixth Amendment) Act. In exercise of the power under Entry 92A, List I the Parliament enacted the Central Sales Tax Act 74 of 1956. By Ch. IV of that Act the power reserved under the amended Article 286, Clause (3) was exercised by the Parliament, and certain classes of goods were declared to be of "Special importance in inter-State trade or commerce". By Section 15 certain modifications were declared in State Acts relating to the levy of taxes on sales and purchases of declared goods. However in the list of goods of "special importance in inter-State trade or commerce" gur or jaggery was when the Act was enacted, not included.

6. The Parliament then enacted the Additional Duties of Excise (Goods of Special Importance) Act, 1957 (Act 58 of 1957). Section 3 of that Act authorised the levy and collection of additional duties in respect of several classes of goods including "sugar". By Section 4 it was provided that during each financial year, there shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India to the States in accordance with the provisions of the second schedule, such sums, representing a part of the net proceeds of the additional duties levied and collected during that financial year, as are specified in that Schedule. It was enacted by the proviso to Clause (2) of the Schedule that if during that financial year is levied and collected in any State specified in the Table a tax on the sale or purchase of sugar by or under any law of that State, no sums shall be payable to that State under sub-clause (ii) or sub-clause (iii) of clause (b) in respect of that financial year, unless the Central Government by special order otherwise directs. The expression 'sugar' was defined in Section 2 (c) as having the same meaning as it has in the First Schedule to the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944. The Governor of Madras issued Ordinance 1 of 1957 directing that transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" be liable to a single point tax at 5 per cent, with effect from April 1, 1957. By virtue of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, as amended by Act 31 of 1958 "sugar" as defined in Item No. 8 of the First Schedule to the Central Excises and Salt Act 1944 was declared a commodity essential to the life of the community and tax could thereafter be levied on "sugar" at the rate of 2 per cent only. But in view of the definition contained in the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944, there was some doubt whether the expression 'sugar' included gur. The State of Madras being apparently of the opinion that "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" were subject to the provisions of the Additional Excise Act 58 of 1957, issued on April 15, 1958, G. O. No. 1457 exempting all sales of "cane jaggery" from tax with effect from April 1, 1958. Transactions of sale of "Palm jaggery" were therefore exempt partially from sales tax from February 28, 1955 and wholly from April 1, 1956, and transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" were exempt from tax from April 1, 1958.

7. The State Legislature enacted the Madras General Sales Tax Act 1 of 1959 with effect from April 1, 1959. By Section 3 every dealer whose total turnover was not less than Rs. 10,000 became liable to pay tax for each year at the rate of 2 per cent of his taxable turnover. By Section 8 it was provided that subject to such restrictions and conditions as may be prescribed, a dealer who deals in goods specified in the Third Schedule shall not be liable to pay any tax under the Act in respect of such goods. Item 5 in the Third Schedule was "sugar including jaggery and gur". Section 17 of that Act authorised the State Government by notification to exempt or to make reduction in rate in respect of any tax payable under the Act on the sale or purchase of any specified goods or class of goods at all points or specified points in respect of sales by successive dealers or by any specified class of dealers in respect of the whole or any part of their turnover. By Section 59 (1) of the Act the State Government was authorised by notification, to alter, add or cancel any of the Schedules.

8. On April 1, 1959 transactions of sale of "sugar including jaggery and gur" were exempt from liability to pay tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Act

1 of 1959. The exemption applied to all transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery". On September 10, 1965 the Government of India advised the State Government that "Jaggery" was not included in the expression 'sugar' in the Additional Duties of Excise Act 58 of 1957. The State of Madras in exercise of the power under sub-section (1) of Section 59 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, issued G. O. 2261 dated December 30, 1967, that:

"In the said (Third) Schedule in Item 5, for the word 'including' the words 'but not including' shall be substituted." The State simultaneously issued another notification that—

"In exercise of powers conferred by Section 17 (1) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, the Governor of Madras granted exemption in respect of tax payable under the Act on all sales of palm jaggery."

In consequence of the two notifications turnover from transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" which was till then exempt from tax became liable to tax under Section 3 of the Madras Act 1 of 1959 whereas sale of "palm jaggery" remained exempt from liability to pay sales tax.

9. In support of the plea that the State had practised unlawful discrimination between sales of "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" it was urged that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" which were identical commodities and were treated similarly under the successive Sales Tax Acts of the State for many years past were without any rational nexus with the object sought to be served by the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, differently treated and on that account the notification issued under Section 59 sub-sec. (1) which modifies the Third Schedule is ultra vires.

10. It may be recalled that the notification under Section 59 (1) which was issued in exercise of executive authority has received legislative sanction by Madras Act 2 of 1968. Amendment in the Third Schedule now flows from the exercise of legislative authority and not executive authority.

11. Since Section 8 read with the Third Schedule as amended by Madras Act 2 of 1968 exempts only "sugar" from liability to tax sales of jaggery, cane and palm, now fall within the charging section. But the Government of Madras have in exercise of power under Sec. 17 of Act 1 of 1959 exempted transactions of sale of "palm jaggery" from tax. It is true that between April 1, 1958 and October 31, 1967 transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" were exempt from liability to pay sales tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Acts of 1939 and 1959, but it cannot be inferred therefrom that the legislature treated "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" as the "same commodity". For nearly three years before April 1, 1958 sales of "palm jaggery" were exempt from tax but sales of "cane jaggery" were not.

12. The evidence on the record clearly shows that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" are commercially different commodities. "Cane jaggery" is produced from the juice of sugarcane; "palm jaggery" is produced from the juice of the palm tree. Mr. Raghupathy, Deputy Secretary to the Government of Madras (Commercial Taxes) has stated in his affidavit that "palm jaggery" industry comes under the purview of Khadi and Village Industries Board and is one of the cottage industries which gives employment mainly to poor tappers. The tappers, according to Mr. Raghupathy, collect "neera" from palm and other trees and prepare jaggery by the traditional method of boiling "neera" in their huts and produce jaggery without the aid of any machinery. Production of "palm jaggery" in the State compared to "cane jaggery" is small. The price of "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" differ widely and apparently "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" are consumed by different sections of the community. It is clear that the method of production of "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" are different; they reach the consumers through different channels of distribution; the prices at which they are sold differ and they are consumed by different sections of the community.

13. In a recent judgment N. Venugopala Ravi Varma Rajah v. Union of India, C. As. Nos. 2436 and 2437 of 1966, D/- 26-2-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 SC 1094) this Court observed:

".....tax laws are aimed at dealing with complex problems of infinite variety necessitating adjustment of several disparate elements. The Courts accordingly admit, subject to adherence to the fundamental principles of the doctrine of equality, a larger play to legislative discretion in the matter of classification. The power to classify may be exercised so as to adjust the system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways: the Legislature may select persons, properties, transactions and objects and apply different methods and even rates for tax, if the Legislature does so reasonably. * * * If the classification is rational, the Legislature is free to choose objects of taxation, impose different rates, exempt classes of property from taxation, subject different classes of property to tax in different ways and adopt different modes of assessment. A taxing statute may contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution if it seeks to impose on the same class of property, persons, transactions or occupations similarly situate incidence of taxation, which leads to obvious inequality."

It was also said by the Court that:

"It is for the Legislature to determine the objects on which tax shall be levied, and the rates thereof. The Courts will not strike down an Act as denying the equal protection merely because other objects could have been, but are not, taxed by the Legislature."

14. We are accordingly of the view that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" are not commodities of the same class, and in any event in imposing liability to tax on transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and exempting "palm jaggery", no unlawful discrimination denying the guarantee of equal protection was practised.

15. No serious argument was advanced in support of the plea that the freedom of trade and commerce guaranteed by Part XIII of the Constitution is infringed by the imposition of tax on "cane jaggery". Freedom of trade, commerce and intercourse guaranteed by Art. 301 of the Constitution is protected against taxing statutes as well as other statutes, but by imposition of tax on transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" no restriction on the freedom of trade or commerce or in the course of trade with or within the State is imposed. The tax imposed on transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" does not affect the freedom of trade within the meaning of Article 301. As observed by this Court in State of Madras v. N. K. Nataraja Mudali, AIR 1969 SC 147 "a tax may in certain cases directly and immediately restrict or hamper the free flow of trade, but every imposition of tax does not do so."

16. There is no substance in the contention that the Act which imposes tax on "cane jaggery" and the notification which exempts "palm jaggery" from liability to tax imposes a colourable exercise of authority. If the Legislature has the power to impose the tax, its authority is not open to challenge on a plea of colourable exercise of power: K. C. Gajapati Narayan Deo v. State of Orissa, 1954 SCR 1 = (AIR 1953 SC 375).

17. There will be one hearing fee.

Agra Electric Supply Co. Ltd., Appellant v. Sri Alladin and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 2483 of 1968, D/- 12-8-1969.

(A) Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (1946), Sections 5 and 3 — Agra Electric Supply Co. Ltd., Standing Orders, Order 32 — Object of Act is to have uniform standing orders — Standing Orders after certification bind all employees presently employed as well those employed thereafter.

The object of the Act is to have uniform standing orders providing for the matters enumerated in the Schedule to the Act and it is not intended that there should be different conditions of service for those who are employed before and those employed after the standing orders came into force. Once the Standing Orders come into force, they bind all those presently in the employment of the concerned establishment as well those who are appointed thereafter. Thus the retirement of employees under Order 32 which fixed the age of superannuation at 55 years is valid although the employees were appointed long before the standing orders were certified. cate upon their fairness and reasonableness, the notice to be given to the union and in its absence to the representatives of the workmen, the right conferred on them to raise objections, the opportunity given to them of being heard before they are certified, the right of appeal and the right to apply for modifications given to workmen individually, the obligation on the employer to have them published in such a manner that they become easily known to the workmen, all these provisions abundantly show that once the standing orders are certified and come into operation, they become binding on the employer and all the workmen presently employed as also those employed thereafter in the establishment conducted by that employer. It cannot possibly be that such standing orders would bind only those who are employed after they come into force and not those who were employed previously but are still in employment when they come into force. The right of being heard given to the union or, where there is no union, to the representatives of the workmen, the right of appeal and the right to apply for modification given to workmen individually clearly indicate that they were provided for because the standing orders, as they emerge after certification, are intended to be binding on all workmen in the employment of the establishment at the date when they come into force and those employed thereafter.

(B) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Agra Electric Supply Co. Ltd., Standing Orders, Orders 2 (c) and 14 — Termination of service of probationer — It can be only for misconduct — Labour Court finding that particular termination was punitive and not simple termination of service — Decision will not be interfered with.

It is a well settled principle of industrial adjudication that even if an impugned order is worded in the language of a simple termination of service, industrial tribunals can look into the facts and circumstances of the case to ascertain if it was passed in colourable exercise of the power of the management to terminate the service of an employee and find out whether it was in fact passed with a view to punish him.

Standing Order 2 (c) provides that a probationer is an employee who is provisionally employed to fill a permanent vacancy in a post and who has not completed the period of probation thereunder.

It also lays down that the normal period of probation shall be 6 months but the resident engineer has the discretion to extend that period, the maximum period of probation being 12 months in all. Ordinarily, this would mean that a probationer's service cannot be terminated except for some misconduct until the expiry of the probation period. (Para 14)

Where the Labour Court comes to a finding on the evidence before it that the real reason for passing the order of termination was not the alleged unsatisfactory work on the part of the workman but his having unauthorisedly used the motor-cycle and causing damage to it, that the order was punitive and not a simple termination of service and was therefore in colourable exercise of the power of termination the finding is clearly one of fact and meant that the Labour Court rejected the evidence led by the management that the work of the concerned workman was found unsatisfactory. It is impossible to say from the evidence before the Labour Court that that finding was perverse or such as could not be reasonably arrived at so as to be interfered with in appeal by special leave.

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 11 — Award of Labour Court holding that Standing Orders of a Company were not applicable to persons employed prior to certification of Standing Orders — Decision based on Supreme Court Judgment — Decision becoming final since special leave to appeal was refused — Subsequent decision of Supreme Court holding that Standing Orders were applicable after certification to employees who were employed prior to such certification — Decision of Labour Court does not act as res judicata.

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate (M/s. D. N. Mukherjee and M. L. Car, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; M/s. S. Mohan Kumaramangalam and M. K. Ramamurthi, Senior Advocates (Mr. Vineet Kumar, Mrs. Shyamla Pappu and Mr. J. Ramamurthy, Advocates, with them), for Respondents.

SHELAT, J.— In this appeal, by special leave, two questions arise: (1) whether standing orders govern the employees appointed before they are certified under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 20 of 1946 and (2) whether the appellant-company was entitled to terminate the service of a workman appointed as a probationer before the expiry of the period of probation except on the ground of misconduct.

2. The first question relates to 3 workmen, Alladin, Ram Prasad and Noorul Zaman, who were employed in 1929, 1935 and 1937 respectively, long before the company's standing orders were certified and brought into force in 1951 and who were superannuated under standing order 32 of the said standing orders. Prior to 1951 there were no rules or conditions of service prescribing the age of superannuation. Standing order 32 for the first time laid down 55 years as the age of superannuation. Relying on standing order 32 the company served on the three workmen notices dated December 19, 1964, November 20, 1963 and January 27, 1964, who had by then attained the age of 58, 64 and 59 years, by which the company retired them with effect from January 1, 1965, December 20, 1963 and March 1, 1964 respectively. The Labour Court, to which the dispute arising from the compulsory retirement was referred, held that the company's standing orders having been certified long after these workmen were employed and the conditions of their employment not having provided any age of retirement, the company could not apply standing order 32 to them, and therefore, the orders of superannuation were bad, and directed their reinstatement and payment to them of their wages from the date of retirement till the date when they would be reinstated.

3. Thus, the question involved in this appeal is whether the company could retire by applying standing O. 32 to these three workmen, who admittedly had long passed the age of superannuation provided thereunder. Counsel for the company argued that once the standing orders are certified and come into operation, they would, subject to their modification as provided under the Act, bind all workmen, irrespective of whether they were employed before or after they came into force, and that therefore, the Labour Court was in error in holding to the contrary and ordering their reinstatement. Mr. Kumaramangalam, on the other hand, argued (1) that the company's action amounted to applying standing order 32 retrospectively, that that was not warranted, for, if the standing orders were intended to be so applied, they would have so expressly provided, and (2) that in a previous reference, being Ref. 91 of 1964, between the appellant-company and its workmen, this very Labour Court had decided that these standing orders did not apply to workmen previously employed, that an appeal was sought to be filed in this Court against that order but no special leave was granted, and therefore, that order became final. Consequently, the company was not entitled to re-agitate the same question, as it was precluded from doing so by principles analogous to the principle of res judicata.

4. The question as to whether standing orders were retrospective in their application can obviously arise only if they do not in law bind workmen previously employed. Such a question can hardly arise if the provisions of the Act show, as contended by counsel for the company, that once they are certified and come into force, they bind both the employer and all the workmen presently employed.

5. As observed in Shahdara (Delhi) Saharanpur Light Railway Company Ltd. v. Shahdara Saharanpur Railway Worker's Union, 1969-1 Lab LJ 734= (AIR 1969 SC 513) the Act is a beneficent piece of legislation, its object being to require, as its preamble and its long title lay down, employers in industrial establishments to define with sufficient precision the conditions of employment of workmen employed under them and to make them known to such workmen. Before the passing of the Act, there was nothing in law to prevent an employer having different contracts of employment with workmen employed by him with different and varying conditions of service. Such a state of affairs led to confusion and made possible discriminatory treatment between employees and employees though all of them were appointed in the same premises and for the same or similar work. Such a position is clearly incompatible with the principles of collective bargaining and renders their effectiveness difficult, if not impossible. To do away with such diversity and bargaining with each individual workman, the legislature provided by Section 3 of the Act that every employer of an industrial establishment must, within 6 months from the date of the Act becoming applicable to his industrial establishment, submit to the certifying authority under the Act draft standing orders prepared by him for adoption in his industrial establishment providing therein for all matters set out in the Schedule to the Act, and where model standing orders are prescribed to have such draft standing orders in conformity with them. The draft standing orders are to be accompanied by particulars of workmen employed in the establishment as also the name of the union, if any, to which they belong. This requirement clearly means particulars of the workmen in employment at the date of the submission of the draft standing orders for certification and not those only who would be employed in future after certification. Under Section 4, such draft orders are certifiable if they provide for all matters set out in the Schedule, are otherwise in conformity with the Act and are adjudicated as fair and reasonable by the certifying officer or the appellate authority. Section 5 requires the certifying officer to forward a copy of the draft standing orders to the union or in its absence to workmen in the prescribed manner with a notice requiring objections, if any from the workmen. After giving the employer and the union or the workmen's representatives an opportunity of being heard, the certifying officer has to decide whether or not any modification or addition to the draft submitted by the employer is necessary and then certify the draft standing orders and send copies thereof and of his order in that behalf to the employer, the union or the representatives of the workmen. Section 6 confers the right of appeal to any person aggrieved by such order to the appellate authority, who, by his order, can either confirm or amend the standing orders. Under Section 7 such standing orders are to come into operation on the expiry of 30 days from the date on which their authenticated copies are sent by the certifying officer to the parties where no appeal against these orders is filed or where such appeal is filed on expiry of 7 days from the date on which copies of the appellate authority's orders are sent as required by Section 6 (2). Section 9 requires the employer to post the standing orders as finally certified on boards maintained for that purpose at or near the entrance through which the majority of workmen enter the industrial establishment and in all departments thereof. Section 10 confers the right to an employer or any of the workmen to apply for modification after expiry of 6 months from the date on which they or the last modification thereof came into operation. The Schedule to the Act sets out matters which the standing orders must provide for. These matters are classification of workmen, shift working, periods and hours of work, holidays, pay days, wage rates, conditions and procedure for applying for grant of leave, closing and re-opening of sections of the industrial establishment, temporary stoppage of work, liabilities and rights of the employer and the workmen arising therefrom, termination of employment, disciplinary action, penalties etc.

6. The obligation imposed on the employer to have standing order certified, the duty of the certifying authority to adjudicate upon their fairness and reasonableness, the notice to be given to the union and in its absence to the representatives of the workmen, the right conferred on them to raise objections, the opportunity given to them of being heard before they are certified, the right of appeal and the right to apply for modifications given to workmen individually, the obligation on the employer to have them published in such a manner that they become easily known to the workmen, all these provisions abundantly show that once the standing orders are certified and come into operation, they become binding on the employer and all the workmen presently employed as also those employed thereafter in the establishment conducted by that employer. It cannot possibly be that such standing orders would bind only those who are employed after they come into force and not those who were employed previously but are still in employment when they come into force. The right of being heard given to the union or, where there is no union, to the representatives of the workmen, the right of appeal and the right to apply for modification given to workmen individually clearly indicate that they were provided for because the standing orders, as they emerge after certification, are intended to be binding on all workmen in the employment of the establishment at the date when they come into force and those employed thereafter. Surely, the union or, in its absence, the representatives of workmen, who are given the right to raise objections either to the draft standing orders proposed by the employer or to the fairness and reasonableness of their provisions, could not have been intended to speak for workmen to be employed thereafter and not those whom they presently represent. Besides, if the standing orders were to bind only those who are subsequently employed, the result would be that there would be different conditions of employment for different classes of workmen, one set of conditions for those who are previously employed and another for those employed subsequently, and where they are modified, even several sets of conditions of service depending upon whether a workman was employed before the standing orders are certified or after, whether he was employed before or after a modification is made to any one of them and would bind only a few who are recruited after and not the bulk of them, who though in employment were recruited previously. Such a result could never have been intended by the legislature, for, that would render the conditions of service of workmen as indefinite and diversified, as before the enactment of the Act. Why does Section 3 (3) of the Act require the employer to give particulars of the workmen employed by him at the date of his submission of the draft standing orders unless the object of making him furnish the particulars was to have uniformity of conditions of service and to make the standing orders binding on all those presently employed. That is why the Act also insists among other things that after they are certified they must be made known to all workmen by posting them at or near the entrance through which they pass and in the language known to the majority of them.

7. In Guest, Keen, Williams Pvt. Ltd. v. P. J. Sterling, 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR

1959 SC 1279) a view apparently contrary to the one above stated was said to have been taken since it was held there that it was unfair in that particular case to fix the age of superannuation of previous employees by a subsequent standing order, which should apply in that matter to future entrants. In that view the Court fixed 60 years as the age of retirement for such previous employees although the standing order had provided 55 years as the age of superannuation. In Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Company Ltd. v. Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd., Employees' Union, 1966-2 SCR 498= (AIR 1966 SC 803) this Court, however, took the same view which we have stated above and held that the provisions of the Act clearly indicated that matters specified in the Schedule to the Act should be covered by uniform standing orders applicable to all workmen employed in an industrial establishment and not merely to entrants employed after their certification. The question arose out of an application made by the employer for modification of the existing standing orders by providing different rules relating to holidays and leave for employees appointed before a certain date and those appointed after that date. Negating such a modification, the Court, after examining the relevant provisions of the Act, stated at pages 504 and 505 (of SCR)=(at p. 811 of AIR) as follows:

"One has merely to examine these clauses one by one to be satisfied that there is no scope for having two separate Standing Orders in respect to any one of them. Take the case of classification of workmen. It is inconceivable that there can be two separate Standing Orders in respect of this matter. What we have said about classification is equally true about each one of the other said clauses; and so, the conclusion appears to be irresistible that the object of the Act is to certify Standing Orders in respect of the matters covered by the Schedule; and having regard to these matters, Standing Orders so certified would be uniform and would apply to all workmen alike who are employed in any industrial establishment".

"On principle, it seems expedient and desirable that matters specified in the Schedule to the Act should be covered by uniform Standing Orders applicable to all workmen employed in an industrial establishment. It is not difficult to imagine how the application of two sets of Standing Orders in respect of the said matters is bound to lead to confusion in the working of the establishment and cause dissatisfaction amongst the employees. If Mr. Setalvad is right in contending that the Standing Orders in relation to these matters can be changed from time to time, it may lead to the anomalous result that in course of 10 or 15 years there may come into existence 3 or 4 different sets of Standing Orders applicable to the employees in the same industrial establishment, the application of the Standing Orders depending upon the date of employment of the respective employees. That, we think, is not intended by the provisions of the Act."

At pages 509 to 510 (of SCR)=(at p. 813 of AIR) the Court referred to the case of Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd., 1960-1 SCR 348=(AIR 1959 SC 1279) (supra), relied on by the employers' counsel, and explained why the Court had fixed 60 years as the age of superannuation for the employees appointed before the standing orders were certified although the standing orders had fixed 55 years as the age of superannuation stating that:

"that course was adopted under the special and unusual circumstances expressly stated in the course of the judgment."

This decision thus confirms the view taken by us that the object of the Act is to have uniform standing orders providing for the matters enumerated in the Schedule to the Act, that it was not intended that there should be different conditions of service for those who are employed before and those employed after the standing orders come into force, and finally, that once, the standing orders come into force, they bind all those presently in the employment of the concerned establishment as well as those who are appointed thereafter.

8. Counsel for the workmen, however, drew our attention to the award in Ref. 91 of 1964, under Section 4 (k) of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. That reference, no doubt, was between the appellant-company and its workmen and the question decided there was whether the company was right in compulsorily retiring the six workmen there concerned under these very standing orders although they were employed before they were certified and came into force. The Labour Court, relying on Workmen of Kettlewell Bullen & Co. Ltd. v. Kettlewell Bullen & Co. Ltd., 1964-2 Lab LJ 146 (SC) which in turn had relied on Guest, Keen, Williams' case, 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR 1959 SC 1279) (supra) held that standing order 32 of these Standing Orders could not be applied to those previously appointed and that, therefore, the company's action in retiring those workmen was not justified.

9. We may mention that the case of Kettlewell Bullen & Co., 1964-2 Lab LJ 146 (SC) (supra) was not one concerned with Standing Orders but with rules made by the company and this Court, relying on the decision in Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd., 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR 1959 SC 1279) (supra) held that where the rules of retirement are framed by the company they would have no application to its prior employees unless such employees have accepted the new rules. It is clear that neither the case of Kettlewell Bullen & Co., 1964-2 Lab LJ 146 (SC) (supra) nor the case of Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd., 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR 1959 SC 1279) (supra), in the light of the explanation given in the case of Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd., 1966-2 SCR 498= (AIR 1966 SC 808) (supra), was applicable and the Labour Court was, therefore, clearly in error in basing its award on the decision in the case of Kettlewell Bullen & Co., 1964-2 Lab LJ 146 (SC) (supra).

10. The argument, however, was that even if that award was erroneous, the company did not appeal against it, consequently it became final and the issue there decided being the same and between the same parties, principles analogous to the principle of res judicata would apply and therefore no relief should be granted in the present case to the company. It is true, as stated in the Newspapers Ltd. v. The State Industrial Tribunal, U. P., 1957 SCR 754 at p. 761 =(AIR 1957 SC 532 at p. 536) that an award binds not only the individuals present or represented but all workmen employed in the establishment and even future entrants. But that principle is founded on the essential condition for the raising of an industrial dispute itself. If an industrial dispute can be raised only by a group of workmen acting on their own or through their union, the conclusion must be that all those who sponsored the dispute are concerned in it and therefore bound by the decision on such dispute. (See M/s. New India Motors (P) Ltd. v. K. T. Morris, 1960-3

SCR 350 at p. 357=(AIR 1960 SC 875 at p. 878)). Such a consideration, however, is not the same as the principle of res judicata or principles analogous to res judicata. In Workmen v. Balmer Lawrie & Co., 1964-5 SCR 344= (AIR 1964 SC 728), no doubt, a case of revision of wage scales, this Court cautioned against applying technical considerations of res judicata thereby hampering the discretion of industrial adjudication. (See also Shahdara (Delhi) Saharanpur Light Railway Co. Ltd. v. Shahdara Saharanpur Railway Workers' Union, 1969-1 Lab LJ 734= (AIR 1969 SC 513) (supra)). How inexpedient it is to apply such a principle is evident from the fact that the award in Ref. 91 of 1964 was based on the decision in Kettlewell Bullen & Co., Ltd., 1964-2 Lab LJ 146 (SC) (supra), which in turn had followed the case of Guest, Keen Williams Private Ltd. (supra) on the supposition (which, as aforesaid was not correct) that standing orders are not binding on those who are employed prior to their certification and their coming into force. The company, presumably, did not challenge the correctness of that award because it was perhaps then thought that that was the law laid down in Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd., 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR 1959 SC 1279) (supra). The consequence of holding that the company is barred by principles analogous to res judicata would be that there would be two sets of conditions of service, one for those previously employed and the other for those employed after the standing orders were certified, a consequence wholly incompatible with the object and policy of the Act. The very basis of the award in Ref. 91 of 1964, namely, the wrong understanding of the decision in Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd., 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR 1959 SC 1279) (supra), having gone, it becomes all the more difficult and undesirable to perpetuate the distinction made therein between those who were previously appointed and those appointed subsequently and to refuse on such an untenable distinction relief to the company. The award in Ref. 91 of 1964 was made on May 24, 1965 when it was believed that the decision in Guest, Keen, Williams Pvt. Ltd., 1960-1 SCR 348= (AIR 1959 SC 1279) laid down the principle that standing orders would not bind workmen previously employed. That that was not so was clarified in the case of Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd., 1966-2 SCR 498= (AIR 1966 SC 808) (supra), the decision in which was pronounced on November 3, 1965 removing thereby any possible misapprehension. The present reference was made on June 23, 1966, long after the decision in Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd., 1966-2 SCR 498= (AIR 1966 SC 808) (supra), and the Labour Court gave the award impugned in this appeal on July 24, 1968. Thus, both the reference and the award were made in circumstances different from those which prevailed when Ref. 91 of 1964 was made and disposed of, a factor making it doubtful the application of a principle such as res judicata.

11. The second question relates to the workman, Shameem Khan. The company appointed him under a letter of appointment dated December 2, 1965 to the post of a clearer as a probationer for 6 months with discretion to the resident engineer to extend that period. The letter also stated that during his probationary period his service would be liable to termination without any notice and without assigning any reason therefor and that he would not be deemed to have been confirmed automatically in the post on the expiry of the probation period unless so advised in writing. The workman worked as such probationer till February 28, 1966 when he was served with a memorandum that his service was terminated as from the close of that day.

12. The workman's case was that the company had no right to terminate his service before the expiry of the 6 months period of probation which is the period prescribed by standing order 2 (c), that the stipulation in the letter of appointment that his service was liable to termination during the probation period was contrary to that standing order, and that therefore, that stipulation was not valid, and lastly, that the said order, though apparently one of termination simpliciter, was not a bona fide order, was in truth punitive in nature, and therefore, could not be passed without an opportunity of being heard having been given to him in a properly held enquiry. The fact is that no such enquiry was held and no opportunity was given to the workman to explain any misconduct for which he could be removed or dismissed.

13. The evidence before the Labour Court was that the concerned workman had unauthorisedly used the motor-cycle belonging to one Sidhana, a shift engineer in the company and that that motor-cycle met with an accident while the workman was using it causing damage to it. Three days after that accident a report alleging that his work as a probationer was unsatisfactory was made by his superior officer. On this evidence the Tribunal came to the conclusion that the impugned order was not an order of termination simpliciter, that though couched in that language it was passed as a punishment for the workman having used that vehicle without the consent of its owner and was, therefore, an order of dismissal. The Tribunal was also of the opinion that the said report alleging unsatisfactory work by the workman was colourable and made at the instance of the shift engineer or at any rate was inspired by the said incident. In this view the Labour Court held that the exercise of power to terminate the service of the workman was not bona fide and consequently it set aside that order and directed his reinstatement.

14. Now, it is a well settled principle of industrial adjudication that even if an impugned order is worded in the language of a simple termination of service, industrial tribunals can look into the facts and circumstances of the case to ascertain if it was passed in colourable exercise of the power of the management to terminate the service of an employee and find out whether it was in fact passed with a view to punish him. The letter of appointment clearly states that the workman, Shameem Khan, was appointed as a probationer for a period of 6 months with power to the resident engineer to extend the period of probation. Ordinarily, that would mean that at the end of the probation period the company would have to decide whether to confirm him to a permanent post or, if that is not possible, to terminate his service. Standing Order 2 (c) provides that a probationer is an employee who is provisionally employed to fill a permanent vacancy in a post and who has not completed the period of probation thereunder. It also lays down that the normal period of probation shall be 6 months but the resident engineer has the discretion to extend that period, the maximum period of probation being 12 months in all. Ordinarily, this would mean that a probationer's service cannot be terminated except for some misconduct until the expiry of the probation period. The letter of appointment, no doubt, contained a provision that the service of the workman was liable to termination even during the probationary period. That provision, however, must be read to mean that the appointment was subject to the management's power of termination as provided in the standing orders. Standing Order 14 provides for such a power and lays down that the service of "any employee" (which expression includes a probationer as is clear from the classification of employees in standing order 2) can be terminated on grounds (a) to (f) therein set out. It is quite clear that the termination of service of the concerned workman cannot be attributed to any one of these grounds. Therefore, that order cannot be said to have been passed in conformity with the power to terminate his service under the standing orders.

15. But apart from this consideration, the Labour Court came to a finding on the evidence before it that the real reason for passing the impugned order was not the alleged unsatisfactory work on the part of the workman but his having unauthorisedly used the motor-cycle and causing damage to it, that the order was punitive and not a simple termination of service and was therefore in colourable exercise of the power of termination. This finding is clearly one of fact and meant that the Labour Court rejected the evidence led by the management that the work of the concerned workman was found unsatisfactory. It is impossible to say from the evidence before the Labour Court that that finding was perverse or such as could not be reasonably arrived at. In that view, it is impossible to interfere with the order of the Labour Court relating to workman, Shameem Khan.

16. In the result, the appeal is partly allowed. The order of the Labour Court in connection with the 3 workmen whom the company retired, is set aside but its order relating to workman, Shameem Khan, is confirmed. In accordance with the order passed by this Court on January 24, 1969, while granting stay to the appellant-company, the company will pay to the workman, Shameem Khan, interest at 6 per cent per annum on the amount of the arrears of wages still due to him under the order of the Labour Court. As the appeal is partly allowed and partly dismissed, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

Prevention of Food Adulteration Act of Food Adulteration Rules (1955), R. 12A

When the proviso to R. 12A of Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules expressly says that no warranty in form VI A shall be necessary in certain eventualities it would be rewriting the rule to infer that nevertheless the same things must exist in the label or the cash memo. If the words in the warranty can reasonably be interpreted to have the same effect as certifying the nature, substance and quality of an article of food, the warranty will fall within the proviso. The Act is of wide application and millions of small traders have to comply with the provisions of the Act and the Rules. If the object underlying the Act can be achieved, without disorganising the trade, by giving a reasonable interpretation to Rule 12A it is Court's duty to do so. The object of the Act is not defeated even if traders use ordinary language of the trade

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by
SIKRI, J.:— In this appeal by certificate the only point that arises is whether the cash memo. Ex. D1, issued by the seller to the appellant contains a warranty within Rule 12A of the rules framed under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 (Act 37 of 1954), hereinafter referred to as the Act. The Magistrate, who tried the complaint, held that Ex. D1 was a proper warranty and it fell within the proviso to Rule 12A. The High Court on appeal held to the contrary.

2. The relevant facts are these. The appellant is a Rice & General Merchant and holds a wholesaler's licence. It was alleged in the complaint that the appellant had stored and exposed for sale and sold compounded Asafoetida which was found to have been adulterated by wheat starch and tapioca starch and that non-permitted orange coal-tar dye was present.
The report of the Public Analyst to Government, Trivandrum, was relied on in this connection.

3. The appellant appeared as a witness and he stated that he purchased Asafoetida from L. T. Alakesan and Brothers, received it in enclosed packets in bags and sold it in bags. He received invoice which reads as follows:

"L. T. Alhakesan & Brothers, Asafoetida Merchants, and N. P. sixty only.

One case (1d) (1d) 1/4/64 (Sd.) 147542
18/5/64."

He further stated that "it is written on the packet as "Extra Superior" in English and as "Compounded misky full of quality and flavour" in Tamil."

4. The relevant statutory provisions are:
The Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954.
"S. 14. Manufacturers, distributors and dealers to give warranty:—

No manufacturer, distributor or dealer of any article of food shall sell such article to any vendor unless he also gives a warranty in writing in the prescribed form about the nature and quality of such article to the vendor."

"S. 19 (2). A vendor shall not be deemed to have committed an offence pertaining to the sale of any adulterated or misbranded article of food if he proved:—

(a) that he purchased the article of food—

(i) in a case where a licence is prescribed for the sale thereof, from a duly licensed manufacturer, distributor or dealer.

(ii) in any other case, from any manufacturer, distributor or dealer, with a written warranty in the prescribed form; and

(b) that the article of food while in his possession was properly stored and that he sold it in the same state as he purchased it."

The Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955.

"Rule 12-A. Warranty — Every trader selling an article of food to a vendor shall, if the vendor so requires, deliver to the vendor a warranty in Form VI-A:

Provided that no warranty in such form shall be necessary if the label on the article of food or the cash memo delivered by the trader to the vendor in respect of that article contains a warranty certifying that the food contained in the package or container or mentioned in the cash memo is the same in nature, substance and quality as demanded by the vendor.

Explanation.— The term 'trader' shall mean an importer, manufacturer, wholesale dealer or an authorised agent of such importer, manufacturer or wholesale dealer."

5. We are not concerned with the question whether Rule 12A is contrary to the provisions of the Act. We take it that it is valid and if the appellant's case falls within the proviso he is entitled to acquittal.

6. It was contended before us on behalf of the respondent that the warranty must state expressly that the food mentioned in the cash memo was the same in nature, substance and quality as demanded by the vendor, and if these words did not exist in the cash memo, the proviso would not apply. We are unable to accede to this contention. It may be that if the warranty is not contained in a label or cash memo the warranty must be in Form VI-A, which uses these words:

"We hereby certify that the food/foods mentioned in this invoice is/are warranted to be the same in nature, substance and quality as that demanded by the vendor." But we do not decide this as it is not necessary to do so. In our view when the proviso expressly says that no warranty in such form shall be necessary in certain eventualities it would be rewriting the rule to hold that nevertheless the same things must exist in the label or the cash memo. It seems to us that if the words in the warranty can reasonably be interpreted to have the same effect as certifying "the nature, substance and quality" of an article of food, the warranty will fall within the proviso. The Act is of wide application and millions of small traders have to comply with the provisions of the Act and the Rules. The learned counsel for the State says that if they are not able to comply with the provisions they should stop carrying on their trade. But if the object underlying the Act can be achieved without disorganising the trade by giving a reasonable interpretation to Rule 12A, it is our duty to do so.

7. A number of English cases were referred to us, but we do not find it necessary to refer to them as they interpret the Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1875, and the later Food & Drugs Act 1955. The language of the relevant sections dealing with defences is different and warranties employing different words have been interpreted. But they do at least show this that trade can be carried on and the object of the Act is not defeated even if traders use ordinary language of the trade or popular language in warranties.

8. Coming now to the language used in the cash memo it seems to us that the words "quality is up to the mark" mean that the quality of the article is up to the standard required by the Act and the vendee. Quality in this context would include nature and substance because the name of the article is given in the cash memo. It must be remembered that it is not a document drafted by a solicitor; it is a document using the language of a tradesman. Any tradesman, when he is assured that the quality of the article is up to the mark will readily conclude that he is being assured that the article is not adulterated. The offence, if any, has been committed by the seller and not the appellant.

9. There was some argument before us as to the difference in the meaning of the words "nature, substance and quality". It was pointed out that Section 14 only uses two words "nature and quality" and not substance. But it is not necessary to express our views on this point. Reference was made to the case of Baburally v. Corporation of Calcutta, 1966-2 SCR 815= (AIR 1966 SC 1569). This Court held that the words on the label and the so-called cash memo in that case did not contain the requisite warranty. But we are unable to see how that case assists either the appellant or the State.

10. In the result the appeal is allowed, judgment of the High Court set aside and that of the Magistrate restored. The appellant's bail bond shall be treated as cancelled.

Appeal allowed.

K. S. HEGDE AND A. N. RAY, JJ.

B. P. Maurya, Appellant v. Prakash Vir Shastri and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1573 of 1968, D/- 14-8-1969.

Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 123 (4) and (3A) — Statement in newspaper that differences between communities are spread by supporters of rival candidates and that candidate favoured by the newspaper will not preach communal hatred — Statement is not hit either by clause (4) or clause (3A).

Publication of certain statement can be said to be in contravention of clause (4) of Section 123 only when it makes any reflection on the moral or mental nature of the contesting candidate or touches his personal character. The Act is intended to protect freedom of speech on the one hand and to restrain malicious propaganda on the other. It is the personal character and conduct of the candidate which is to be protected from malicious or false attacks. The statement in question has to be first a false statement bearing on the personal character and conduct of the candidate and secondly, the statement complained of must be one which is reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the election of the person.

(Para 30)

So also, clause (3A) can be said to be contravened when there is appeal to vote for a person on the ground of religion or there is appeal not to vote for contest-

* (Ele. Petn. No. 19 of 1967, D/- 12-4-1968 — All.)

ing candidate on the ground of religion.
(Para 32)

Where a newspaper, which is inclined in favour of certain candidate, publishes statements to the effect that differences between the two communities are spread by the supporters of the rival candidate and that the candidate favoured by the newspaper will not preach communal hatred, such statements do not make any reflection on the moral or mental nature of the rival candidate and they do not touch the personal character of the rival candidate nor do they promote enmity or hatred on grounds of religion.

(Paras 34, 35)

The electorate at the time of the election has to be kept in the forefront in judging whether the article can be said to offend the provisions relating to corrupt practices. In reading the documents it would be unrealistic to ignore that when appeals are made by candidate there is an element of 'partisan feeling' and there is 'extravagance of expression in attacking one another' and 'it would be unreasonable to ignore the question as to what the effect of the document would be on the mind of the ordinary voter who reads the document'. Case law discussed.

Appellant in Person; M/s. L. M. Singhvi and Veda Vyasa, Senior Advocates (M/s. Rishi Ram, Bishambhar Lal, K. C. Sharma, H. K. Puri, U. P. Singh and K. K. Jain, Advocates, with them), for Respondent No. 1.

RAY, J.:— This is an appeal against the judgment and order of the High Court at Allahabad dated 12th April, 1968, dismissing the election petition filed by the appellant.

2. The appellant contested the General Election to the Lok Sabha from Hapur Parliamentary Constituency in the year

1967. There were seven rival candidates numbered respondents 1 to 7. The appellant contested the election on the ticket of the Republican Party. He was then a sitting member of Parliament. Among the rival candidates, Prakash Vir Shastri was an independent candidate. The election symbol of the appellant was elephant and the election symbol of Prakash Vir Shastri was lion. Prakash Vir Shastri secured 1,49,943 votes while the appellant secured 1,01,875 votes. The Swatantra candidate Sri Naseem secured 34,274 votes. The Congress candidate respondent Smt. Kamla Chaudhury secured 33,988 votes. The appellant challenged the election on grounds of corrupt practices as mentioned in sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

3. At the hearing of the appeal the appellant appeared in person after counsel on his behalf had obtained leave of this Court to withdraw and to allow the appellant to appear in person.

4. The various corrupt practices on which the appellant relied relate to occurrences at six places. The appellant did not press the other occurrences. The first occurrence relates to a meeting held at the Town Hall Maidan at Hapur on 7th February, 1967. The appellant alleged that at the Hapur meeting respondent Prakash Vir Shastri and his supporters delivered inflammatory speeches against the appellant and thereafter the said respondent Shastri's supporters entered the office of the Republican Party, to which the appellant belonged, assaulted the workers of the appellant, tore posters, abused the appellant and threatened his workers. In support of the allegations the appellant relied on Exhibit 28 the news report in the 'Hindustan' published on 8th February, 1967, and also on Exhibit 23 the news report in the newspaper named 'Vir Arjun' published on 8th February, 1967 and Exhibit 22 being the editorial in the 'Vir Arjun' published on 7th February, 1967. The newspaper report in the 'Hindustan' Exhibit 28 published on 8th February, 1967 contains the note of the correspondent from Hapur bearing the date 7th February, 1967, stating that a big meeting was held in support of respondent Shastri, Lok Sabha candidate from Hapur-Gaziabad Constituency. In the 'Vir Arjun' dated 8th February, 1967, Exhibit 23 it is stated that the supporters of the Republican Party were raising slogans that they were championing the cause of Harijans and Muslim youths from Aligarh University were brought for that purpose. It was also stated in the said newspaper that Muslim students of Aligarh were raising the slogans "Harijan Muslim are brothers and where from Hindu community has come. Black face be of Brahmin, barber and lala. Throw shoes on Bhat, Gujar and Rajput". The appellant in paragraph 11 of the petition further alleged that respondent Shastri was associated with the 'Vir Arjun' and K. Narendra, Editor of Vir Arjun who was a colleague of respondent Shastri wrote an editorial by way of an appeal to support the candidature of respondent Shastri in that newspaper on 7th February, 1967, Exhibit 22 and the said appeal was also an instance of corrupt practice. The further allegations in the petition were that at the meeting which was held at the Town Hall Maidan at Hapur on 7th February, 1967, respondent Shastri and the said K. Narendra, Editor of Vir Arjun delivered inflammatory speeches.

5. The appellant generally impeached the judgment of the High Court on two grounds. First, that there was no discussion of the entire evidence and, secondly, that there was rejection of the evidence on behalf of the appellant on consideration that the appellant's witnesses belonged to particular castes and sects.

6. The criticism on behalf of the appellant with regard to Hapur meeting was that respondent Shastri in answer to the petition did not state that there was a meeting on 6th February, 1967, and thereby the appellant was denied the opportunity of meeting that case. The appellant relied on the decision of this Court in Badat & Company v. E. I. Trading, AIR 1964 SC 538 and the observations appearing at page 547 of the report in support of the contention that under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and, in particular, the provisions contained in Order VIII of the Code, respondent Shastri should have alleged in the pleadings that the meeting was held on 6th February, 1967 and in the absence of such allegations respondent Shastri should not have been allowed to make that case. The decision of this Court is of no aid to the appellant. In the case of Badat & Company, AIR 1964 SC 538 (supra) the question was whether there was a contract between the parties and it was alleged by the plaintiff with reference to two letters that the letters would indicate some of the terms of the transaction. The defendant in the written statement did not specifically deny the said two letters. This Court observed that a mere denial of the contract was not sufficient and the rules of the Code enjoined denial of the existence of the letters. In the present case the question was whether a meeting was held at Hapur Town Hall Maidan on 7th February, 1967. The respondent denied such a meeting. The respondent was not called upon to state as to whether there was a meeting on 6th February, 1967.

7. The news item in the newspaper 'Hindustan' Exhibit 28 gave news from Hapur under the date 7th February, 1967, that a meeting was held at Hapur. Exhibit 23 was a news item in the newspaper 'Vir Arjun' under the date 7th February, 1967, that Shri Narendra, Editor of Vir Arjun spoke at an election meeting at Hapur. Neither the Vir Arjun news item dated 7th February, 1967 nor the news item appearing under the date 7th February, 1967 Hapur published in the Hindustan on 8th February, 1967 contains any intrinsic evidence that a meeting was held at Hapur on 7th February, 1967.

8. Further, of the witnesses on behalf of the appellant P. W. 25 Bal Kishan spoke of the meeting at the Hapur Town Hall Maidan on 7th February, 1967 and he also stated that three pamphlets were distributed and two issues of newspapers were also distributed, namely, the Vir Arjun and Pratap. No such pamphlet was produced. The two witnesses on behalf of respondent Shastri, Bhagwati Prasad Jain D. W. 16 and Rameshwar Prasad Goel D. W. 18 said that a Congress election meeting was held at the Town Hall Maidan, Hapur and no election meeting was held in support of respondent Shastri at the Town Hall Maidan, Hapur on 7th February, 1967.

9. With regard to the meeting at the Town Hall Maidan at Hapur alleged by the appellant to have been held on 7th February, 1967, the oral evidence on behalf of the appellant is that the meeting was held and the oral evidence on behalf of the respondent is that the meeting was not held. In the case of conflicting oral testimony it is safer to place reliance on documentary evidence. First the newspaper report on which the appellant relies contained intrinsic evidence which totally nullifies the appellant's case.

Exhibit 28 being the 'Hindustan' dated 8th February, 1967 indicates the news about Hapur under the date 7th February, 1967 that a meeting was held "yesterday night" meaning thereby 6th February, 1967, in support of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri. Secondly, the newspaper 'Vir Arjun' published on 8th February, 1967 gave the news at Hapur under the date 7th February, 1967. The news referred to an election meeting at Hapur but did not mention that the meeting was held on 7th February or on 6th February, 1967. Thirdly, Exhibit A-12 which is an application by one Lakhi Ram seeking permission from the Municipal Board for holding a meeting on 7th February, 1967 in the Town Hall Maidan, Hapur throws light on this aspect. The permission given by the authorities which is marked Exhibit A-13 required the persons holding the meeting to pay certain charges towards the use of the electricity. Exhibit A-14 is a receipt for payment of Rs. 5. These three documents indicate that the meeting which was held on 7th February, 1967 was a meeting organised by the supporters of the Congress Party. Fourthly, Exhibit A-2 which is a General Diary of Thana Hapur bearing the date 7th February, 1967 shows that a constable was sent to the Town Hall Maidan to make arrangements in connection with the meeting which was to be addressed by one Kailash Prakash. The witnesses on behalf of the respondent Shastri mentioned the name of Kailash Prakash and Smt. Kamla Chaudhury as speakers on behalf of the Congress candidate. It is highly improbable that two meetings of the two rival candidates, namely of the Congress and of the respondent Prakash Vir Shastri would both be held on the same date and at the same place. Fifthly, the reports which were lodged by the supporters of the appellant with regard to the attack on the office of the Republican Party on 7th February, 1967 do not mention or refer at all to any meeting on behalf of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri on 7th February, 1967 at the Town Hall Maidan, Hapur. It would be natural if a meeting had been held on 7th February, 1967 that there would have been reference to the same.

10. The other allegations of the appellant were that respondent Shastri's supporters on 7th February, 1967, attacked the office of the Republican Party, to which the appellant belonged. There was the First Information Report dated 7th February, 1967 about the attack on the office of the Republican Party. This report is significantly silent about any meeting having been held on 7th February, 1967 at Hapur Town Hall Maidan. Though there was the alleged complaint about the attack on the office of the Republican Party, it appears that there was no investigation. The attack on the party office was not proved by the appellant to have been made by respondent Shastri's workers and supporters. The High Court correctly came to the conclusion that no meeting was held at Hapur on 7th February, 1967 and there was no attack on the office of the Republican Party.

11. With regard to the attack on the office of the Republican Party to which the appellant belonged though the first information report gave the news about the attack it is strange that there was no investigation. The report of the joint Secretary of the Republican Party to the President of the Republican Party bearing the date 8th February, 1967 alleged that the supporters of Prakash Vir Shastri attacked the office of the Republican Party on 7th February, 1967 forcibly took necessary papers and a flag of the Party. Dal Chand Nimesh, Joint Secretary of the Republican Party, P. W. 71 in his evidence stated that none of the processionists went to his office and further he hid himself in an adjoining room. He did not prove the truth of the statements contained in his report which was marked as Exhibit 11. The attack on the office of the Republican Party was not mentioned at all either in the Vir Arjun of 8th February, 1967 or in the Hindustan dated 8th February, 1967. It is obvious that if in fact any attack had been made on the office of the Republican Party, the supporters of the appellant would have taken steps for investigation and publication.

12. The second occurrence on which the appellant relied is alleged to have happened at a place called Nagola. The appellant's case was that on 18th February, 1967, Prakash Vir Shastri and his supporters who were mostly Tyagi by caste asked the Tyagis to stop the Jatav voters from going to the polling station to cast their votes. It was alleged that Thawariya made the announcement by beat of drums that the Muslim, Chamar, Bhangi and Jatav voters would not be allowed to go to the polling station to cast their votes. The other part of the appellant's case about the Nagola incident was that there was an assault on Shamshad Elahi, a worker of the appellant. The appellant relied on the oral testimony of P. W. 11, P. W. 12, P. W. 15, P. W. 16, P. W. 17, P. W. 19, P. W. 23, P. W. 65 and P. W. 80. The witnesses on behalf of the respondent were D. W. 4, D. W. 12, D. W. 13, D. W. 30 and D. W. 33. The oral evidence is in support of the rival contentions, namely, that the Jatav voters would not be allowed to vote and the denial of the same by the respondent. The appellant also relied on Exhibit N that the Jatav voters would not be allowed to cast their votes by the Tyagis.

13. In support of the case with regard to assault on Shamshad Elahi the appellant relied on the oral evidence of Shamshad Elahi, P. W. 11 and the injury report Exhibit 30 and other documents, namely, Exhibits 31, 32 and 35. The appellant criticised the judgment by contending that there was no discussion of the oral evidence of P. W. 17, Satya Pal Malik. P. W. 11, Shamshad Elahi said that he went to Nagola at about 3.30 p. m. on 19 February, 1967, the date of the election and the voters told him about the proclamation by beat of drums on the previous night and the voters further said that they would be insulted and they should remain there. Shamshad Elahi further said that he met Sevak Ram and Surajbhan Tyagi and 10 or 12 other persons were with them and they beat the witness with lathis and he received a number of injuries.

14. The other witnesses on whose testimony the appellant relied said that people wearing lion badges which was the election symbol of Prakash Vir Shastri asked the witnesses not to cast their votes and they also said that it was announced by beat of drums that no Chamar or Bhangi should cast a vote.

15. Nagola is a village within the circle of Badhnauli. R. K. Aggarwal, D. W. 33 who was the Presiding Officer at Badhnauli polling station gave evidence. He said that the votes of village Nagola were polled and no Harijan or Mohammedan voter was stopped from casting votes and that there was no complaint that Harijan and Mohammedan voters were being stopped from casting their votes. In cross-examination the witness said that no voters from Haidernagar or Nagola were brought to the polling station under police protection.

16. P. W. 80, Sukhbir Singh who was posted as Station Officer Thana Karkoda said that he received information from Shamshad Elahi that voters at Badhnauli were being stopped from casting their votes. Sukhbir Singh went to Badhnauli. He also went to Nagola. He said that 30 or 40 Harijans voters went to Badhnauli to cast their votes. He said that there was no voter who was taken by him to a polling station in a truck. Sukhbir Singh proved Exhibit 35 which was a contemporaneous report to the effect that no one was stopped from voting at Nagola.

17. Satya Pal Malik on whose testimony the appellant relied said that Prakash Vir Shastri came to Badhnauli polling station on 19th February, 1967 and there were 40 to 50 persons around him with lion badges on. His further evidence was that Prakash Vir Shastri asked the Pradhan to beat the voters to make them run away. Prakash Vir Shastri however denied having asked Sheoraj Singh Pradhan to drive away the voters.

18. Thanwaria, P. W. 23 on whose evidence the appellant relied said that he beat the drum in Nagola village on a day before the polling. He said that there were two parties of the Tyagis. One was of Sheoraj Singh and the other was of Pyare Lal. The Jatavs, according to his testimony, were in Pyare Lal's party and the Bhangis were in Sheoraj's party. The appellant said that Thanwaria was disbelieved only because he belonged to the Chamar caste. That is misreading the judgment. The High Court said that the evidence of Thanwaria did not inspire confidence. That criticism of the evidence of Thanwaria is justified because he came to support the case of the appellant and he belonged to the appellant's camp.

19. Pyare Lal, D. W. 12 said that no Harijan was stopped from casting his vote at Badhnauli polling station and no worker of Prakash Vir Shastri threatened any Harijan voter at the polling station. The appellant criticised the evidence of Pyare Lal that he did not know as to what was happening in the village. Satya Pal Malik, P. W. 17 mentioned the name of Pyare Lal as the leader of one of the parties and Sheoraj Singh as Pradhan of the village Nagola.

20. The oral evidence on behalf of the appellant is not acceptable for two reasons. First, if there had been any incident of a voter being prevented from voting a complaint would have been made to the polling officer of the polling station. Secondly, Vireshwar Tyagi and Mahendra Singh Verma who were the supporters of the appellant and who are alleged to have said that voters at Nagola were prevented from voting did not lodge any report about the alleged corrupt practice particularly when it was said to be committed by Prakash Vir Shastri himself.

21. The assault on Shamshad Elahi which was also said to be an incident of corrupt practice is unacceptable for these reasons. First, the injury report Exhibit 30 has to be considered along with the statement of Shamshad Elahi being Annexure M and the report of the appellant being Exhibit 32 and the complaint of Shamshad Elahi being Annexure N being Exhibit 30. The appellant in the report dated 17th February, 1967 Exhibit 32 spoke of voters not being allowed to exercise their votes. Shamshad Elahi in his complaint said that 10 or 12 persons beat him with lathis. All this happened on 19th February, 1967. The doctor's report was about the injuries. First, it is peculiar that there was no complaint about the injuries after the injury report. Secondly, there is no evidence that the assault was by the workers of Prakash Vir Shastri. Shamshad Elahi in his evidence mentioned the names of Sevak Singh and Surajbhan Tyagi. These names were not mentioned in the complaint being Exhibit 30. In cross-examination Shamshad Elahi was asked as to how he had obtained the names and his answer was that he met the grass cutter who gave the names. It is curious that the grass cutter who gave the names was not examined.

22. The third incident on which the appellant relied took place at Chhajipur. The allegations are that on 2nd February, 1967 an election meeting was organised in support of the candidature of the appellant and the supporters of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri created disturbance with the result that the meeting could not be continued and the supporters of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri are alleged to have chased the appellant. The High Court rightly commented on the absence of any report having been made by the appellant to the Election Commissioner or the police about the alleged occurrence. It is obvious that if the appellant had been chased he would have made report to the Election Commissioner or to the police. The appellant relied on the news item in the Patriot dated 5th February, 1967. The news item was referred to by Mahesh Chandra Agarwal, P. W. 14 who, however, was not present at the meeting at Chhajjupur. He referred to a conversation with the Superintendent of Police. The Senior Superintendent of Police was not examined. No police report was produced. The truth of the newspaper report was not corroborated nor was the statement in the news item proved. On the contrary, Mahesh Chandra Agarwal nullified the news item by admitting that he was not present at the meeting.

23. P. W. 18 Tejpal Singh spoke of the incident of 2nd February, 1967 and mentioned about the shouting of slogans and throwing of brick-bats. P. W. 10, Som Prakash spoke of charge-sheet under Sections 147 and 342 of the Indian Penal Code against certain persons. He spoke of the report of 3rd February, 1967 and a report of 9th February, 1967. The report dated 3rd February, 1967 relates to the occurrence on 2nd February, 1967 at Chhajjupur. The report of 9th February, 1967 also relates to the alleged incident of 2nd February, 1967 at Chhajjupur. The witness Som Prakash P. W. 10 admitted that no investigation was made. It is significant that the name of the appellant is not mentioned in either of complaints or reports. The allegations in the report are that some disturbance was created and names of various persons are mentioned as having tried to run towards the jeep which carried the leaders of the Republican Party. One of the witnesses Devi Dayal Sen, P. W. 63 said that when the appellant rose to speak some people pelted stones at him.

24. The alleged incident at Chhajjupur is unacceptable because, first, there was no complaint by the appellant to the Election Commissioner, secondly, there was no police case and no investigation, thirdly, the reports did not mention the name of the appellant as having been assaulted or chased and fourthly, the news item in the Patriot was not proved as to the truth of the contents therein.

25. The fourth occurrence on which the appellant relied was at a place called Opehra. The appellant alleged that some persons were stopped from casting their votes. The appellant relied on the oral evidence of P. Ws. 58, 59 and 60. P. W. 60 is Manzoor Ahmad, M. L. A. The other two witnesses were Durga Das and Ram Prasad. The appellant criticised the judgment that there was no mention of the name of Manzoor Ahmad. The diaries being Exhibits A-23, A-32 and A-29 were produced to show that the election at Opehra polling station passed off peacefully and therefore no one stopped any voter from casting vote. Manzoor Ahmad in his oral evidence said that he saw people armed with lathis and ballams. He said that he made a complaint to the Presiding Officer and admitted in cross-examination that there was no written complaint. Manzoor Ahmad did not prove that any person was stopped from voting.

26. The fifth and the sixth occurrences on which the appellant relied took place at Datiyana and Bankhanda. It is alleged by the appellant that at Datiyana the agents and the supporters of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri threatened the Scheduled Caste and Harijan voters and prevented them from going to the polling station. The allegations about the occurrence at Bankhanda are to similar effect. The appellant relied on Exhibit 18 which was a memorandum addressed by several voters who stated that they remained within the house and could not vote because the villager Tyagi Kailash Chand threatened to kill them if, they would vote. P. W. 65, Vireshwar Tyagi spoke of the incidents at Nagola, Bankhanda and Hapur and his wife Smt. Prakash Vireshwar Tyagi spoke of the alleged incident at Datiyana. The respondent's witnesses denied that any person was prevented from casting vote at Datiyana.

27. The allegations with regard to the Bankhanda were referred to by Vireshwar Tyagi and other witnesses. The diary which was produced with regard to the polling station disproved any such incident. The diaries are Exhibits A-19 and A-21. D. W. 20, Chandoo Singh stated that he was at the polling station at Bankhanda and no one was stopped from exercising the right of franchise. D. Ws. 21 and 22 also spoke of polling at Bankhanda having been peaceful. The appellant referred to religious songs which were said to be in praise of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri. Mere praiseworthy songs will not be an instance of corrupt practice.

28. All the allegations about the voters having been stopped from casting their franchise followed the same pattern of oral evidence. The absence of any report either to the Election Commission or to the Police authorities is an important and noticeable feature and therefore the oral evidence is not acceptable.

29. The other allegations relied on by the appellant are that respondent Prakash Vir Shastri is guilty of corrupt practice under sub-sections (3), (3-A) and (4) of Section 123 of the said Act. The appellant contended that respondent Prakash Vir Shastri made communal propaganda against the appellant and also published false statements in relation to the personal character of the appellant. In aid of the contentions the appellant relied on annexures KK and MM. The appellant relied on the upper portion of annexure KK in support of the contention that the slogans amounted to communal propaganda. The lower portion of annexure KK was contended by the appellant to be allegations against the personal character of the appellant. Annexure MM was said by the appellant to contain slogans amounting to communal propaganda against the appellant. It was said by the appellant that respondent Prakash Vir Shastri promoted feelings of enmity or hatred against the appellant and further raised communal propaganda. The appellant also relied on Exhibit 22 being the editorial in Vir Arjun dated 7th February, 1967 in support of the contention that the editorial constituted communal propaganda against the appellant.

30. In Guruji Shrihari Baliram Jovade v. Vithalrao, Civil Appeal No. 1778 of 1967, D/- 19-11-1968 = (reported in 1969-1 SCC 82), this Court dealt with the scope and content of sub-section (4) of Section 123 of the Act. The Act is intended to protect freedom of speech on the one hand and to restrain malicious propaganda on the other. The provisions contained in sub-section (4) of Section 123 were said by this Court to be contravened when "any false allegation of fact pierces the politician and touches the person of the candidate." It is the personal character and conduct of the candidate which is to be protected from malicious or false attacks. The statement in question has to be first a false statement bearing on the personal character and conduct of the candidate and secondly, the statement complained of must be one which is reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the election of the person.

31. Under the provisions contained in sub-section (3-A) of the said Act the promotion of, or attempt to promote, feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of citizens of India on grounds of religion, race, caste, community, or language, is the mischief which is sought to be avoided by making the same a corrupt practice. The sub-section further says that such promotion or attempt to promote enmity or hatred is for the furtherance of the election of the candidate or for prejudicially affecting the election of any candidate.

32. The words "personal character or conduct" were explained by this Court in T. K. Gangi Reddy v. M. C. Anjaneya Reddy, (1960) 22 ELR 261 "to be equated with his mental or moral nature. Conduct connotes a person's actions or behaviour". Annexure KK was not proved and therefore it cannot be said to constitute any communal propaganda. Assuming it were proved there is no appeal to vote for a person on the ground of religion nor is there any appeal not to vote for a person on the ground of his religion. Further, the provisions contained in sub-section (4) of Section 123 require the publication with the consent of the candidate or his election agent. In the present case, annexure KK has not been established to be published with the consent of the respondent Prakash Vir Shastri or his election agent. It, therefore, follows that annexure KK offends neither the provisions contained in sub-section (3A) nor in sub-section (4) of Section 123 of the Act.

33. Annexure MM was said by the appellant to be a communal propaganda. Annexure MM was not proved. Even if it were proved the slogans do not offend the provisions of either sub-section (3A) or sub-section (4) of Section 123 of the Act.

34. The publication in the newspaper 'Vir Arjun' Exhibit 22 is to the effect that differences between Hindus and Harijans were being spread by the supporters of the Republican candidate meaning thereby the appellant and if students from Muslim University were brought in by them then students from Ghaziabad would be brought into the field. The newspaper certainly was inclined in favour of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri but the newspaper publication said that Prakash Vir Shastri would not unlike the Congress candidate preach communal hatred. The statements in Exhibit 22 do not make any reflection on the moral or mental nature of the appellant and they do not touch the personal character of the appellant nor do they promote enmity or hatred on grounds of religion.

35. The appellant failed to prove that respondent Prakash Vir Shastri committed any corrupt practice in relation to the personal character and conduct of the appellant. The newspaper publication Exhibit 22 was an appeal on behalf of respondent Prakash Vir Shastri. As long as the publication is not tainted by corrupt practice, such an appeal will not be an infraction of the provisions as to corrupt practices as contemplated in the Representation of the People Act. Suggestions that attempts are made to accentuate the differences between the Hindus and Harijans in the article cannot be extracted in isolation from the entire context. The electorate at the time of the election has to be kept in the forefront in judging whether the article can be said to offend the provisions relating to corrupt practices. The Court is to ascertain whether the statement is reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the candidate's election. This Court observed in Kultar Singh v. Mukhtiar Singh, (1964) 7 SCR 790 = (AIR 1965 SC 141) that in reading the documents it would be unrealistic to ignore that when appeals are made by candidate there is an element of 'partisan feeling' and there is 'extravagance of expression in attacking one another' and 'it would be unreasonable to ignore the question as to what the effect of the pamphlet would be on the mind of the ordinary voter who reads the pamphlet'. In the light of these principles, we are of opinion that there is no infraction of the provisions contained in sub-sections (3A) and (4) of Section 123 of the Act.

36. For the reasons mentioned above, this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

J. C. SHAH, Actg. C. J., V. RAMA-SWAMI AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

M/s. Juggilal Kamlatpat, Kanpur, Appellant v. Commissioner of Income Tax, U. P., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1953 of 1968, D/- 31-7-1969.

LM/AN/E2/69/GDR/P

1970 S. C./34 IV G—10

Income-tax Act (1922), Sections 10, 3 and 12A — Adventure in nature of trade — Assessee firm purchasing large block of shares with borrowed money at ruling rates and soon thereafter selling at a profit in small lots — Transaction, held, was a commercial one entered into with profit motive and was not in the nature of capital investment.

Whether a transaction is or is not an adventure in the nature of trade is question of mixed law and fact; in each case the legal effect of the facts found by the tribunal on which the tax payer could be treated as a dealer or an investor in shares, has to be determined. (Para 8)

A large block of shares was purchased by the assessee firm at the ruling rates with borrowed money, and soon thereafter the shares were disposed of at a profit in small lots. The firm used to promote companies. One of its activities was to finance sister concerns. Some of the shares were sold through brokers to strangers. The story of the firm that some or all the shares were merely distributed to its associates was not proved. The interest which the firm had to pay for the amount borrowed for purchasing the shares was debited in the revenue account and was claimed as a revenue allowance. The story that the shares had to be sold on account of financial difficulties were plainly belied by the circumstance that the firm went on purchasing and selling the shares.

Held, that the transaction was a commercial transaction entered into with a profit motive and was not a transaction in the nature of capital investments.

Held further, that the tribunal was right in inferring that the purchase and sale of shares was a business activity which was continuous and since the firm had entered upon a well planned scheme for earning profit and that in furtherance and execution of that profit making scheme they sold the shares at the opportune time, and that the sale of the shares was not merely on account of pecuniary embarrassment as claimed, the profit realised by the firm by the sale of shares could not be characterised as a casual receipt, nor could it be treated as accretion to a capital asset. Ltd. v. Commr. of I. T., Bombay 7

Mr. A. K. Sen, Senior Advocate (Mr. G. L. Sanghi, Advocate, and B. R. Agarwal, Advocate of M/s. Gagrath and Co. with him), for Appellant; Mr. Jagdish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India (M/s. S. K. Iyer, R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates with him), for Respondent.

SHAH, Actg. C. J.: In proceedings for assessment to income-tax for the year 1946-47, the appellant firm was assessed to tax in respect of an amount of Rupees 3,99,587 received by it as profit on sale of shares. The plea of the firm that the amount was "capital gain" and was on that account not taxable was rejected. In the view of the Income-tax Officer the profit arose from "a well planned business activity in which the assessee had fully utilised its resources". The Appellate Assistant Commissioner affirmed the decision of the Income-tax Officer. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal dismissed the appeal filed by the firm.

2. The Tribunal, amongst others, referred the following question to the High Court of Allahabad for opinion:

"Whether the surplus realised by the sale of the shares of Aluminium Corporation of India Ltd., J. K. Investment Trust and Raymond Woollen Mills amounting in aggregate to Rs. 3,99,587 or any part thereof was the revenue income of the assessee liable to tax under the Income-tax Act, 1922?"

The High Court answered the question in the affirmative. The firm has appealed to this Court with special leave.

3. In 1944 the firm purchased 50,000 ordinary shares of Raymond Woollen Mills Ltd. (hereinafter called "Raymond") for Rs. 69,75,255. The firm paid Rupees 7,00,000 on November 4, 1944 and the balance on December 6, 1944. The transaction was financed with the aid of a loan of Rs. 70 lakhs borrowed from the Hindustan Commercial Bank Ltd. The firm sold those shares through brokers between November 23, 1944 and April 2, 1946 and realised Rs. 72,42,200, the transaction resulting in a net profit of Rs. 2,66,945. Between January 26, 1945 and April 5, 1946 the firm also purchased 67 debentures, 5,582 preference shares and 18,576 ordinary shares of the Aluminium Corporation Ltd. (hereinafter called "Aluminium") for Rs. 8,57,480. Except 2,118 preference shares, the entire lot of shares with the debentures was sold for

Rs. 7,05,957 between February 1, 1945 and August 13, 1945. Adjusting the cost of shares left on hand the firm realised a net profit of Rs. 60,278 in that transaction. The firm also purchased 290 "A" Class shares of J. K. Investment Trust Ltd. (hereinafter called "J. K. Trust") on February 4, 1945 for Rs. 1,45,000 and sold the same on August 22, 1945 for Rupees 2,17,264, the transaction resulting in a net profit of Rs. 72,364.

4. Before the departmental authorities the firm claimed that it had taken over the entire share capital issued by Raymond with a view to secure its managing agency and had thereafter distributed the shares of Raymond to the various associates of the firm, and the transaction being one to facilitate acquisition of a capital asset being a capital investment, the profit realised by sale of the shares was not liable to be assessed to income-tax. The firm also claimed that when a part of the new issue of capital of Aluminium was not taken over by the public, the firm as financiers of the J. K. Group of Industries took over the shares and the debentures not subscribed within the time allowed. This transaction, it was contended, was also of the nature of capital investment. It was explained that the shares were sold on account of "financial embarrassment" and not with the object of earning income, and the profit realised by the sale did not attract tax. Similar contentions were also raised in respect of the shares of J. K. Trust. The departmental authorities rejected the contentions. The Tribunal agreed with them.

5. From the facts found by the Tribunal it is clear that for purchasing the Raymond shares, the firm paid Rs. 7,00,000 on November 4, 1944, and the balance on December 6, 1944, and commenced selling the shares on November 23, 1944. The contention that the shares were only distributed to the "allied concerns" is contrary to the findings of the Tribunal. Some of the shares were sold through brokers to outsiders. It is a significant circumstance that the firm parted with all the Raymond shares by April 2, 1946 and did not retain a single share after that date. It is true that some of the shares were held by J. K. Industries Ltd. and other J. K. concerns. But the transfer even to the J. K. concerns was in all cases for a profit. Within a few days after purchasing the Raymond shares, the "firm started unloading them", and the shares were never sold without making profit. The interest paid for the loan borrowed from the Hindustan Commercial Bank Ltd. for financing the purchase of Raymond shares was debited in the accounts as a revenue expenditure, and it was claimed as a permissible allowance. The firm used to promote Companies. One of its activities was to finance "sister concerns" known as J. K. Industries. The case of the firm that the shares had to be sold on account of "financial embarrassment" was plainly untrue. The Tribunal, was in our judgment right, in inferring that the "purchase and sale of shares was a business activity which was continuous", and since the firm "had entered upon a well-planned scheme for earning profit and that in furtherance and execution of that profit making scheme they sold the shares at the opportune time" and that "the sale of the shares was not merely on account of pecuniary embarrassment" as claimed, the profit realised by the firm by the sales of shares could not be characterised as a casual receipt nor could it be treated as accretion to a capital asset.

6. Strong reliance was, however, placed on a somewhat obscure statement in the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner:

"In the case of Raymond Woollen Mills shares it is clear beyond doubt that the purchase of the shares was a first rate business deal and that it was motivated by the desire and intention to acquire the Managing Agency of the Mills. If this is not an operation in the scheme of profit-making it is not known what will constitute such a transaction."

Apparently there is a typographical error in the second clause of the first sentence, and the word "not" has by inadvertence been omitted otherwise in the context in which it occurs the clause has no meaning whatever. In any event as rightly pointed out by the High Court the reasons given by the Tribunal and the conclusion recorded by it are inconsistent with the finding that the shares were purchased with the sole object of acquiring the Managing Agency of the Raymond Woollen Mills and not with a view to make profits.

7. Counsel for the firm invited our attention to the decision of this Court in Ramnarain Sons (P) Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 41 ITR 534 = (AIR 1961 SC 1141) in support of his contention that a transaction for purchasing shares with the object of acquiring the managing agency of a Company will be regarded as capital investment and not a business in share. In Ramnarain Sons' case, 41 ITR 534 = (AIR 1961 SC 1141) the appellant Company was a dealer in shares and securities and also carried on business as managing agents of other companies. With a view to acquire the managing agency of a company, the appellant Company purchased from a managing agents a large block of shares at a rate approximately 50 per cent above the ruling market rate. Two months later the appellant Company sold a small lot out of those shares at a loss and claimed the loss as a trading loss. It was found in that case by the Tribunal that the intention of purchasing the shares was not to acquire them as part of the stock-in-trade of tax-payer's business in shares, but to facilitate the acquisition of the managing agency of the Company which was in fact acquired, and on that account loss incurred by the sale of a small lot could be regarded only as a loss of capital nature. The Court observed in that case that the circumstance that the tax-payer had borrowed loans at interest to purchase the shares or that it was a dealer in shares and was authorised by its memorandum of association to deal in shares was of no effect. On a review of the evidence the Tribunal held that the shares were purchased with the object of acquiring the managing agency and with that view the High Court agreed.

8. Whether a transaction is or is not an adventure in the nature of trade is question of mixed law and fact: in each case the legal effect of the facts found by the Tribunal on which the tax-payer could be treated as a dealer or an investor in shares, has to be determined. In the present case the transaction since the inception appears to be impressed with the character of a commercial transaction entered with a view to earn profit. Large block of shares was purchased at the ruling rates with borrowed money, and soon thereafter the shares were disposed of at a profit in small lots. Some of the shares were sold through brokers to strangers. The story of the firm that some or all the shares were merely "distributed" to its associates is not proved. The interest which the firm had to pay for the amount borrowed for purchasing the shares was debited in the revenue account and was claimed as a revenue allowance.

9. It was not the case of the firm that Aluminium and J. K. Trust shares were purchased for acquiring the managing agency. It was claimed that the shares were taken over because the public did not accept those shares. It was one of the objects of the firm to finance its allied concerns and in taking over shares which the public did not subscribe the firm was acting in the course of its business. The firm commenced selling the shares soon after they were purchased. Aluminium shares were purchased between January 26, 1945 and April 5, 1946 (except a few which were retained) and sold at profit. Whereas the first lot was purchased on January 26, 1945, the first sale was made on February 1, 1945. It could not be said that this was an investment in shares independent of the trading activity of the firm. The story that the shares had to be sold on account of financial difficulties is plainly belied by the circumstance that the firm went on purchasing and selling the Aluminium shares. J. K. Trust shares were purchased on February 14, 1945 and were sold on August 22, 1945. Aluminium shares as well as J. K. Trust shares were sold at a profit and through brokers. These transactions were also stamped with the character of commercial transactions entered into with a profit motive and were not transactions in the nature of capital investments. The answer recorded by the High Court is therefore correct.

10. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

of deity to protect property maintainable — Person making donations for temple maintenance can sue on behalf of deity — Civil P. C., Section 92 has no application — (Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 9 and 92, Order 7, Rule 4).

Where R, acting as pujari or manager of a private Hindu temple, raises residential buildings of his own in the temple premises and converts them to his own use and asserts a proprietary title to them, R commits acts of mismanagement and misappropriation of the temple and its properties and is therefore not fit to remain in possession as pujari or manager of the temple. (Para 8)

A person, who has made large donations for the maintenance of the temple, has clearly a substantial interest to maintain a suit for possession of the temple and its properties against the pujari or manager, on behalf of the deity to protect the property from mismanagement and misappropriation. (Para 8)

Section 92, Civil P. C., has no application to the suit and the sanction of the Advocate-General is not a condition of its initiation. (Para 6)

The Civil Courts have jurisdiction to frame a scheme for the management of a temple which is not a public but a private trust: AIR 1925 PC 139 and AIR 1957 Mad 583 and AIR 1952 Cal 763, Rel. on. (Para 9)

M/s. J. P. Goyal and Sobhag Mal Jain
 Advocates, for Appellants; Mr. K. B.
 Mehta, Advocate, for Respondent No. 2.

The following Judgment of the Court
 was delivered by

SHAH, Actg. C. J.: Suit No. 41 of 1947 was filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Mathura by the deity Thakur Janki Ballabhji Maharaj, acting through its manager—L. Tulsiram, authorised agent of the Bharatpur State, for a decree for possession of the temple of the deity at Brindaban in U. P.; and of the temple properties and for an order calling upon the defendant, Ramchand, to account for the realisations of the estate of the deity.

2. The case of the plaintiffs was that the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur built the temple at Brindaban and installed the idol of Thakur Janki Ballabhji Maha-raj and dedicated the temple to the deity; that the Shebait of the deity who was a paid employee of the State was appointed by the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur; that one Chhotelal was appointed a priest to perform the worship in the temple under a written agreement dated April 8, 1936; that after the death of Chhotelal on May 13, 1942 Ramchand was appointed the priest of the temple on condition that he shall execute the usual agreement in favour of the State; that Ramchand entered upon the duties as pujari but failed to execute the agreement, and in course of time raised various constructions of his own on the premises in dispute and converted them into private residential buildings, and illegally used the temple as a lodging house for pilgrims "to the utter detriment, loss and desecration of the deity" and thereby acquired "illegal benefit to himself out of the temple properties"; and that Ramchand was not performing the seva puja of the deity.

3. The suit was resisted by Ramchand.
 He denied that the temple was built at the expense of the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur or that he—Ramchand—was appointed to be a priest of the temple by the Ruler of Bharatpur. He contended that one Ram Narain Kedar Nath had taken a piece of land at Brindaban on rent from the temple of Govindji and after constructing a temple thereon and installing the Thakurji had given it as an offering to Sitaram, ancestor of Ramchand, and had appointed Sitaram as the Manager of the temple: that the temple had since then remained in the management of the descendants of Sitaram, and that he (Ramchand) was in possession of the temple and its properties as "Manager and proprietor".

4. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the Ruler of Bharatpur was never the owner of the temple or of the articles mentioned in Schs. A and B of the plaint, that the Ruler was also not the founder of the temple nor its shebait; and that the Ruler had never appointed any pujari of this temple and was not authorised to appoint or dismiss such a pujari.

5. In appeal against the decree passed by the Court of First instance it was urged before the High Court of Allahabad that the trial Court erred in dismissing the suit merely on the finding that the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur "had no concern with the construction of the temple or with the installation of the idol in the temple", and that in the suit filed by the deity, having regard to the acts of mismanagement and misappropriation committed by the defendant Ramchand, a decree should have been made in favour of the deity. Counsel for Ramchand contended that the suit being of the nature of a suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure could not be instituted without obtaining the sanction in writing of the Advocate-General and that in any event the second plaintiff, the State of Bharatpur, could not file the suit, since it was not a shebait or the settlor of the temple.

6. It was common ground before the High Court that the property of the temple was not property of a public trust of a religious or charitable nature. From the averments made in the plaint it is clear that the suit was filed by the deity against the person in management and it was not a suit filed by the relators. Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure had no application to the suit and the sanction of the Advocate-General was not a condition of the initiation of the suit.

The High Court therefore rightly rejected the contention that the suit was not maintainable without the sanction of the Advocate-General.

7. The High Court held it was open, even to a worshipper, if he possesses sufficient qualifying interest to start a suit to protect the property of the deity. Observing that the defendant Ramchand had raised residential buildings of his own in the temple premises and that he was lodging pilgrims in a part of those buildings and was asserting a proprietary title to them and was on that account guilty of conduct detrimental to the interest of the deity and had rendered himself liable to be ejected from the temple and its properties, and that he was unfit to act as pujari, the High Court reversed the decree passed by the trial Court and decreed the plaintiffs' suit for possession of the temple and its properties and restrained the defendant Ramchand by an injunction from interfering with the management of the temple and performance of worship of the deity. With special leave Ramchand has appealed to this Court.

8. Ramchand has committed several acts of mismanagement and misappropriation of the temple and its properties. He has set up a personal title to the temple properties and has converted the properties to his own use. Ramchand is therefore not fit to remain in possession as pujari or as manager of the temple. The suit is filed by the deity acting through the Manager. Granting that it is not proved that the Ruler of Bharatpur established the temple and installed the deity, there is abundant evidence that the State of Bharatpur had made from time to time large donations for the maintenance of the temple. The Ruler of Bharatpur had therefore clearly a substantial interest to maintain the suit on behalf of the deity to protect the property. There is no merit in the appeal and therefore it must fail.

9. It is, however, necessary to make an effective decree in this appeal. It may be noticed that even though the suit has been filed and prosecuted on behalf of the State of Bharatpur and later by the State of Rajasthan through its District Magistrate, the temple is situate within the State of U. P. and it would be difficult for the District Magistrate or any other authority acting on behalf of the State of Rajasthan to look after the administration of the temple and to protect its properties from misappropriation. This is undoubtedly a private trust but the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to frame a scheme for the management of the temple which is not a public trust. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick, 52 Ind App 245= (AIR 1925 PC 139) directed that a scheme be framed for the regulation of the worship of the idol even though there was no public trust. In Asha Bibi v. Nabissa Sahib, AIR 1957 Mad 583 the Madras High Court held that a suit for removing the trustees of a private trust and for framing a scheme was maintainable. A similar view was also taken by the Calcutta High Court in Mahadeo Jew v. Balkrishna Vyas, AIR 1952 Cal 763.

10. The Civil Court has therefore jurisdiction to frame a scheme for management of the temple and its properties. The present is, in our judgment, a case in which in exercise of the powers under Order 41, Rule 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure we should direct that the Court of first instance to frame a scheme of management of the temple collections and the income and disbursement of expenses, application of the surplus if any and for that purpose to appoint a manager of the property of the deity and its properties, with authority to take possession of the temple and the properties from the defendant Ramchand and to administer the property and its income under the directions of the Court. We direct accordingly. The Court will also take an account of his dealings with the property of the deity from Ramchand and determine his liability and recover the amount found due from him on taking accounts. The Court will pass appropriate orders with regard to the constructions made by Ramchand and will prevent the property being used for the private benefit of Ramchand or any other person. The scheme to be framed will be consistent with the law relating to private religious endowments, if any, in force in the State of Uttar Pradesh.

11. Subject to this modification, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by

SIKRI, J.:— The only question which arises in this appeal by special leave is whether the appellant, Sheo Nath, should be convicted under Section 396, Indian Penal Code, or Section 411, Indian Penal Code, or Section 412, Indian Penal Code.
The facts as found by the High Court are these. A dacoity was committed at the shop of Ram Murat in Dhaneja village by 15 to 20 persons on August 19, 1966, at about 11.30 p. m. One dacoit
Ram Shankar, was armed with a gun while others carried spears, Gandasas and lathis. During the course of the dacoity

Ram Murat was injured. One Pancham who lived in a house not far from Ram Murat's shop, and two others came running on hearing the noise. Pancham was shot down with the gun by dacoit Ram Shankar. The dacoits then escaped with clothes, ornaments, cash, etc., looted from Ram Murat's shop. After the dacoits left Ram Murat dictated a report about the occurrence in which he named Ram Shankar Singh, Jaintri Prasad Singh, Nanhe Singh and Sulai accused as having been among the culprits and this report was sent to the Jalalpur police station, five miles away, where it was received and recorded at 6 a. m. next morning.

2. On August 22, 1966, i.e., three days after the dacoity, the house of Sheo Nath, appellant, was searched and three lengths of cloth were recovered which were subsequently identified by Ram Murat and a tailor named Bismillah as having been stolen from Ram Murat's shop in the dacoity.

3. The High Court, agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge, relied on the evidence of three eye-witnesses regarding the manner in which the occurrence took place and regarding the participation of the four named accused persons. Sheo Nath had not been named by the eyewitnesses or in the dying declaration of Pancham and no witness claimed to have identified him taking part in the dacoity.
But, relying on the discovery of three lengths of cloth and their identification, the High Court convicted Sheo Nath under Section 396, I. P. C. The High Court observed:

"From the material on record we are fully convinced that the Exhs. 2 and 3 were stolen from the shop of Ram Murat in the course of the dacoity committed in the night between 19 to 20 August 1966, and since they were recovered from the possession of Sheo Nath appellant only 2 or 3 days later, it is legitimate to infer that he was one of the dacoits, vide illustration (a) to Section 114 of the Evidence Act. Sheo Nath, therefore, has been rightly convicted under Section 396,
I. P. C."

4. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that in the circumstances of the case the High Court should not have convicted the appellant under Section 396, Indian Penal Code, but only under Section 411, Indian Penal Code. Section 114 of the Evidence Act and illustration (a) read as follows:

"114. The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to facts of the particular case.

Illustrations.

The Court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in possession of stolen goods after the theft, is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession."

This Section was considered by this Court in Sanwat Khan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 54. This Court, after considering some High Court cases, observed:

"In our judgment no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what inference should be drawn from a certain circumstance. Where, however, the only evidence against an accused person is the recovery of stolen property and although the circumstances may indicate that the theft and the murder must have been committed at the same time, it is not safe to draw the inference that the person in possession of the stolen property was the murderer. Suspicion cannot take the place of proof."

In Wasim Khan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 SCR 191= (AIR 1956 SC 400) this Court held that "recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property while it would be presumptive evidence against a prisoner on the charge of robbery would similarly be evidence against him on the charge of murder." On the facts of that case this Court held that the appellant was rightly convicted of the offence of murder and robbery. But, apart from the possession of stolen property, there were other circumstances indicating that the appellant was guilty of murder and robbery. The circumstances were that the appellant in that case had travelled with the deceased on his bullock cart alone and the deceased never reached his home and was found murdered. The appellant was found in possession of the goods of the deceased three days after and the appellant made no effort to trace the whereabouts of the deceased or lodge information of his disappearance from the bullock cart.

5. In the present case three presumptions are possible from the recovery of the stolen goods from the appellant three days after the occurrence of the dacoity:

(1) that the appellant took part in the dacoity;

(2) that he received stolen goods knowing that the goods were stolen in the commission of a dacoity; and

(3) that the appellant received these goods knowing them to have been stolen. The choice to be made, however, must depend on the facts proved in this case. It is quite clear that all the property which was stolen by the dacoits was not recovered from the appellant. We may repeat that clothes, ornaments, cash, etc., were stolen. The only articles that were found with the appellant were a length of muslin (exh. 2) and a length of char-khana doriya (Exh. 3). The appellant is stated to be a cloth merchant and he may well have acquired these goods as a receiver. It has not been shown that in the village in which the appellant lived it was known that a dacoity had taken place and goods had been stolen in the dacoity.

6. On the facts of this case it seems to us that the only legitimate presumption to be drawn is that the appellant knew that the goods were stolen but he did not know that they were stolen in a dacoity. The appellant, therefore, can only be convicted under Section 411, Indian Penal Code.

7. In this connection we may refer to a decision of the Rajasthan High Court in Bhurgiri v. State, ILR (1954) 4 Raj 476 at pp. 482, 483 (Wanchoo, C. J., and Dave, J.). Wanchoo, C. J., after holding that the recovery of ornaments from Bhurgiri had been established, observed:

"The next question is whether on this evidence Bhurgiri can be convicted for dacoity. The recovery took place five days after the dacoity. It is not impossible that during that period the property might have passed from the dacoits to a receiver. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that it would not be safe to convict Bhurgiri of dacoity on the evidence of this recovery alone. It would be more proper to convict him as a guilty receiver.

Then the question arises whether he should be convicted under Section 411 or 412, Indian Penal Code. So far as Section 411 is concerned, he is clearly guilty under that section. The presumption under Section 114 applies, and we can safely presume that he is a guilty receiver of stolen property particularly when we find that the property was kept in the Bara, and not at his own house. He must have had reason to believe that it was stolen when he received the property, and that is why he left it in the Bara. But we feel that it would not be proper to convict him under Section 412 because that section requires that the receiver should know or have reason to believe that the property had been transferred by the commission of dacoity. The prosecution, in our opinion, has to show something more than the mere possession of stolen goods for a conviction under Section 412. If the prosecution is only able to show mere possession, the proper section to use is 411."

8. In the result the appeal is allowed and the appellant convicted under Section 411, Indian Penal Code, instead of Section 396, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years.

Appeal allowed.

VAIDIALINGAM, J.— This appeal, by special leave, by the appellant-State is directed against the judgment and order of the High Court of Assam and Nagaland, dated March 4, 1968 in Civil Rule No. 206 of 1967 (reported in AIR 1969 Assam 3) by which the High Court quashed an order passed by the Deputy Director of Education, Nagaland, dated February 10, 1967 terminating the services of the respondent as an Assistant Teacher with effect from April 1, 1967.

2. The respondent was appointed by an order of the Chief Secretary of Nagaland, dated October 23, 1962 as an Assistant Teacher and she was posted in Zunheboto Government High School. The category of the post to which she was appointed was Class III (Non-Gazetted). By an order dated February 16, 1967 of the Deputy Director of Education, Nagaland, the services of the respondent as Assistant Teacher were terminated with effect from April 1, 1967.

3. The respondent filed Civil Rule No. 206 of 1967 in the High Court of Assam and Nagaland for quashing the order dated February 16, 1967 terminating her services. According to her she had served as a teacher for a period of five years and she was fairly high in the Seniority List and that her work has been completely free from any blemish. While so, without giving any reason her services had been terminated arbitrarily and illegally. She also pleaded that by virtue of the order dated November 10, 1966 of the State Government, her services as well as the post which she held had both been made permanent. It was her further case that she had been appointed by the Chief Secretary of the Government, while the order of termination was by a subordinate officer, viz., the Deputy Director of Education. On these grounds the respondent pleaded that the order terminating her services was illegal and opposed to the principles of natural justice and there had been a breach of the provisions of Article 311.

4. The State of Nagaland, the appellant, controverted the claim of the respondent that her services had been made permanent and that there had been a violation of Article 311. On the other hand, the State pleaded that the respondent had been appointed on a purely temporary basis to a temporary post and, according to the terms and conditions governing the appointment, her services could be terminated by giving one month's notice. The order of termination fully satisfies this requirement. The State further pleaded that the services of the respondent had never been made permanent. The Deputy Director of Education, who was exercising the powers of the Head of the Department was fully competent to pass the order in question. In view of these circumstances, the State pleaded that Article 311 of the Constitution did not apply and that the order of termination was valid.

5. Before the High Court the respondent raised two contentions both related to Article 311 and they were (1) that as the respondent had been appointed by the Chief Secretary to Government, the order of termination by a subordinate authority was in violation of Article 311 and therefore void; and (2) though initially she was appointed on a temporary basis, later on the post which she held as well as her services, had both been made permanent and therefore the order of termination, without complying with the requirements of Article 311, was void.

6. The High Court has substantially accepted both the above contentions. It has taken the view that the Deputy Director of Education had no jurisdiction to terminate the services of the respondent as her appointment was by the Chief Secretary to the Government. Even though there may have been a delegation of powers to the Deputy Director of Education, the High Court's view is that the said officer has no authority to pass an order of termination as that will be depriving the respondent of her rights under Article 311. The High Court, relying upon the Circular, dated November 10, 1966 of the Government, has further held that the services of the respondent had been made permanent and therefore the order terminating her services has the effect of removing her from service and placing the respondent in a position where she could no longer serve the State. This, according to the High Court, attracts Article 311. The High Court has further taken the view that though the termination of the respondent's services was innocuous and not on any disciplinary or punitive grounds, nevertheless, in view of the fact that she has been in service for merely five years and no reason is given by the State for terminating her services, it must be inferred that the order of termination must have been passed by way of punishment or penalty. On these grounds the High Court quashed the order, dated February 10, 1967.

7. Mr. Naunit Lal, learned counsel for the appellant, pointed out that the High Court has committed a very serious error in holding that Article 311 has been violated when the order terminating the services of the respondent was passed. The counsel further pointed out that the High Court has committed a mistake in proceeding on the basis that the respondent was a quasi-permanent employee. It was also urged that the High Court, having come to the conclusion that the order of termination was not passed on any disciplinary or punitive grounds, erred in setting aside the order on the ground that the said order must have been passed by way of punishment or penalty because the respondent has been in service for nearly five years. The counsel finally urged that the respondent being a temporary servant, her services had been terminated under the contract of service and the State Government was entitled to pass such an order.

8. Mr. Lakshmi Narasu, learned counsel appearing for the respondent, in view of the approach made by the High Court, found considerable difficulty in supporting the order. But the counsel urged that as the High Court has come to the conclusion that the order of termination must have been passed by way of punishment, and as the services of the respondent who had been in service for over five years had been terminated without giving any reason, this Court need not interfere with the decision of the High Court.

9. In our opinion, the High Court has committed a fundamental error in proceeding on the basis that Article 311 applies to the respondent. The High Court has also committed another serious mistake in proceeding on the basis that the order dated November 10, 1966 of the State Government made the respondent a quasi-permanent government servant. The order dated October 23, 1962 appointing the respondent as an Assistant Teacher clearly says that the post to which she is appointed is a temporary one and that her appointment itself is made on a purely temporary basis. The order further states that the services of the respondent may be terminated by one calendar month's notice in writing on either side. No doubt the respondent was in service till the impugned order was passed.

10. Rules 2 (b), 3 and 4 of the Central Services (Temporary Services) Rules, 1949 read together show that a government servant shall be deemed to be in quasi-permanent service if the said government servant has been in continuous government service for more than three years and the appointing authority is satisfied regarding the matters relating to the said employee referred to in Rule 3, and issues a declaration to that effect. The State Government, no doubt appears to have taken a decision on August 17, 1966 to make certain temporary employees quasi-permanent and accordingly certain posts also were made permanent. The Government also issued a Circular, dated October 10, 1966 making the temporary posts in the Schedules attached to that order into permanent posts under the Education Department. But it will be seen that except making those posts permanent, the services of the incumbents of such posts had not been made permanent, as wrongly assumed by the High Court. On the other hand, by order dated September 14, 1967 the State Government made various temporary employees permanent. No such notification had been issued in respect of the respondent, i.e., no declaration in respect of the respondent, as required under Rule 3 (2) of the Central Services (Temporary Services) Rules, 1949 has been issued. Therefore the position was that the respondent continued to be a temporary servant on the date when the order under attack was passed.

11. The High Court itself has stated: "It is true that the termination appears to be innocuous and not on any disciplinary or punitive grounds". After this finding and in view of the fact that the respondent was only a temporary government servant, whose services had been terminated under the contract of service, no further question regarding the validity of the order arises at all. But the High Court has expressed the opinion that Article 311 has been violated because it must be inferred that the order has been passed by way of punishment, especially when the respondent has been in service for over five years. This reasoning, in our opinion, is erroneous. In fact the High Court has recorded two inconsistent findings: (i) that the termination is innocuous and not on any disciplinary or punitive grounds; and (ii) that the order of termination must be considered to have been passed by way of punishment. Even the respondent, so far as we could see, has not taken up any plea to the effect that the order terminating her services was by way of punishment.

12. No doubt the High Court has referred to certain passages in the decision of this Court in Parshotam Lal Dhingra v. Union of India, (1958) SCR 828= (AIR 1958 SC 36) but those principles have no application to the facts of the present case. Reviewing the case-law on the subject, the recent decision of this Court in State of Punjab v. Sukh Raj, AIR 1968 SC 1089 has laid down several propositions of which proposition No. 1 is as follows:

"On a conspectus of these cases, the following propositions are clear:—

1. The services of a temporary servant or a probationer can be terminated under the rules of his employment and such termination without anything more would not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution."

As we have already pointed out, the services of the respondent have been terminated according to the terms of the contract of service and the order terminating the service is one simpliciter and not by way of punishment. If so, the matter comes squarely within the proposition No. 1 set out above and it follows that Article 311 has no application at all.

13. As we have mentioned earlier, the respondent has raised a contention that as she was appointed by the Chief Secretary, the order terminating her services passed by the Deputy Director of Education, a subordinate authority, is not valid. But that contention, again, was on the basis that Article 311 has been violated in this regard. The appellant State has taken the stand that the power of appointment had been subsequently vested in the Director of Education and that there has been a delegation in favour of the Deputy Director of Education to exercise all the powers of the Director in this regard. In the view that we take that Article 311 has no application to the case of the respondent, it becomes unnecessary to consider this aspect.

14. In the result the order of the High Court, dated March 4, 1968 is set aside and this appeal allowed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Tribhuban Parkash Nayyar, Appellant
v. The Union of India, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1568 of 1966, D/- 10-10-1969.

(A) Displaced Persons (Claims) Act (1950), Section 6 — Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act (1954), Sections 5 (1) (a) and (b) and 2 (f) — Displaced Persons (Verification of Claims) Supplementary Rules (1954), Rule 18 — Power of Chief Settlement Commissioner under Section 5 (1) (b) — It includes power to review final order under the Act of 1950.

On the plain reading of Section 5 (1) (b), the Chief Settlement Commissioner's special power of revision would extend to suo motu revision of the verified claims which have become final under the Principal Act as a result of orders made by the Chief Claims Commissioner on revision. (Para 7)

The language used in Section 5 (1) (b) of the Supplementary Act is unambiguous and it clearly empowers the Chief Settlement Commissioner, subject to any rules that may be made, to revise any verified claim and make such orders in relation thereto as he thinks fit. A verified claim as defined in Section 2 (f) of the Supplementary Act means any claim registered under the Principal Act in respect of which a final order has been passed under that Act. (Para 7)

A Preamble is a key to open the mind of the Legislature but it cannot be used to control or qualify precise and unambiguous language of the enactment. It is only when there is a doubt as to the meaning of a provision that recourse may be had to the preamble to ascertain the reasons for the enactment and hence the intention of the Parliament. If the language of the enactment is capable of more than one meaning then that one is to be preferred which comes nearest to the purpose and scope of the preamble. In other words, Preamble may assist in ascertaining the meaning but it does not affect clear words in a statute. The Courts are thus not expected to start with the Preamble for construing a statutory provision nor does the mere fact that a clear and unambiguous statutory provision goes beyond the preamble give rise itself to a doubt on its meaning. (Para 6)

Further, the submission that an order made on a revision can in no case be subjected to further revision, is also unacceptable on the statutory scheme and language. No constitutional bar to further scrutiny of such orders on revision could be pointed out. (Para 8)

(B) Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act (1954), Ss. 5 (1) (b) and 2 (f) — Power in revision — It includes valuation of claim.

The power of revision under S. 5 (1) (b) is not restricted to the verification of the claim but it also embraces the power of valuation. It is true that "claim" as defined in the principal Act (1950), broadly speaking means the assertion of a right to ownership of or to any interest in, immovable property. But the Claims Officer under that Act has also to value the claim and the final order embraces both verification of title and valuation. The definition of "verified claim" in Section 2 (f) of the Supplementary Act speaks of the final order and it includes valuation. (Para 9)

(C) Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act (1954) Section 5 (1) (b) — Displaced Persons (Verification of Claims) Supplementary Rules (1954), Rule 18 Cl. (iv) — Interpretation of Cl. (iv) — Rule of ejusdem generis does not apply.

The first three categories contained in Rule 18 do not form a genus or a class with the result that Cl. (iv) would not attract the ejusdem generis rule for its construction. The expression "other sufficient cause" occurring in Clause (iv) of Rule 18 has therefore to be read in this context. When in a statute there are general words following particular and specific words, the general words are sometimes construed as limited to things of the same kind as those specified. This rule of interpretation generally known as the ejusdem generis rule reflects an attempt to reconcile incompatibility between the specific and general words, in view of the other rules of interpretation, that all words in a statute are given effect if possible, that a statute is to be construed as a whole and that no words in a statute are presumed to be superfluous. Ejusdem generis rule being one of the rules of interpretation, only serves, like all such rules, as an aid to discover the legislative intent; it is neither final nor conclusive and is attracted only when the specific words enumerated, constitute a class, which is not exhausted and are followed by general terms and when there is no manifestation of intent to give broader meaning to the general words. AIR 1954 SC 526, Distinguished.

(Para 13)

(D) Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act (1954), Section 5 (1) (a) — Order passed by Claims Commissioner — In review Chief Settlement Commissioner reducing amount substantially — Review order based on conclusions on pure conjectures and surmises and not on legal evidence — Order set aside in writ petition by Single Judge on ground of error apparent on face of record — Order of Single Judge set aside in Letters Patent Appeal against order — Held, that the decision of Letters Patent Bench was illegal. (1954) AIR 1954 SC 526 (V 41)=
1955-1 SCR 520, M. M. B. Catholicos v. Most. Rev. Mar. Poulouse 11

DUA, J.— The appellant, a displaced person from Lahore, now in West Pakistan, submitted his claim in respect of the immovable property left by him there. The claim was submitted under the provisions of the Displaced Persons (Claims) Act XLIV of 1950 (hereinafter called the principal Act). The property in respect of which the claim was submitted was valued by the appellant at Rs. 10 lacs. It consisted of a building $2\frac{1}{2}$ storeyed high with 12 shops and a well as also some platform etc. in Landa Bazar, in Lahore. The Claims Officer verified this claim for Rs. 8 lacs. Against this order a revision was taken by the appellant to the Claims Commissioner who on May 1, 1953 in a brief order raised the value of the verified claim to Rs. 10 lacs. The relevant part of that order reads as under:

"I have gone through the order of the learned Claims Officer and I find that he has given a queer argument to allow Rs. 8,00,000/- to the claimant. By every method tried by him the assessment went beyond Rs. 10,00,000/- and I think he ought to have allowed Rs. 10,00,000/- as claimed by the claimant. I enhance the assessment and allow Rs. 10,00,000/- to the claimant."

We would assume that the Claims Commissioner had been duly delegated the power of the Chief Claims Commissioner to revise the order of the Claims Officer, because no dispute was raised on this point. On the strength of the verified claim the appellant purchased two properties in Delhi at a public auction; one of them is situated in Daryaganj and the other in New Rajinder Nagar. On November 8, 1957, Shri M. S. Chaddha, Settlement Commissioner, exercising power of the Chief Settlement Commissioner issued to the appellant a notice under the Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act, 1954 calling upon him to show cause why the order of the Claims Commissioner dated May 1, 1953, be not revised and varied. On May 23, 1958, the said officer reduced the appellant's claim of Rs. 10 lacs to Rs. 15,000/-. The appellant then filed a writ petition under Article 226 in the Punjab High Court challenging the order reducing the value of his claim. A learned Single Judge on November 1, 1962 allowed the writ petition holding that the learned Settlement Commissioner exercising the power of the Chief Settlement Commissioner had proceeded to deal with the value of the property on wholly conjectural grounds. In a detailed order the learned Single Judge came to the conclusion that the Settlement Commissioner had not only ignored important evidence but had also held certain documents to be forged without any evidence in support of the findings. In the opinion of the learned Single Judge, therefore, there were clear errors of law on the face of the record rendering the order of the Settlement Commissioner open to challenge in writ proceedings in the High Court. On this view the order was set aside and quashed. It was, however, observed that it would be open to the department to reconsider the entire matter as to valuation and come to a proper conclusion on evidence.

2. The respondent took the matter on appeal to a Division Bench under the Letters Patent and the Letters Patent Bench reversed the order of the learned Single Judge holding that on a reading of the order of the Settlement Commissioner it could not be said that his finding was based on no legal evidence. The appeal was accordingly allowed and setting aside the order of the learned Single Judge, the appellant's writ petition was dismissed. The appellant has come to this Court on appeal with certificate.

3. On behalf of the appellant two main points were raised before us. It was contended, in the first instance, that Shri M. S. Chaddha, while exercising the power of the Chief Settlement Commissioner, had no jurisdiction to revise the order made by the Claims Commissioner exercising the revisional power of the Chief Claims Commissioner under the principal Act. Secondly, it was contended that there was a clear error of law apparent on the face of the record with the result that the learned Single Judge was fully justified in quashing the order of the Settlement Commissioner, and that the Letters Patent Bench was in error in allowing the appeal. While developing this ground of attack the counsel also submitted that in exercising the power of revision the Settlement Commissioner could not interfere with conclusions of fact and that he had, therefore, exceeded his jurisdiction in so doing.

4. In order to examine the first submission we have to turn to the provisions of the Principal Act and of the Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act 12 of 1954 (Hereafter called the Supplementary Act). The Principal Act, enacted with the object of providing for the registration and verification of claims of displaced persons in respect of immovable property in Pakistan, was brought on the statute book on May 18, 1950 and was initially to remain in force for a period of two years only. Its life was extended by a further period of one year by means of an amendment in 1952. On the expiry of the third year the Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Ordinance No. 3 of 1954 was promulgated pending the passage by the Parliament of the bill which later emerged in the shape of Supplementary Act. The Ordinance was enforced on January 18, 1954. The Supplementary Act was enacted, as its preamble shows, to provide for the disposal of certain proceedings pending under the Principal Act and for matters connected therewith. We have specifically referred to the preamble because on behalf of the appellant strong reliance was placed on the preamble in support of his construction of Sections 4 and 5 of the Supplementary Act which deal with the revisional power of the Chief Settlement Commissioner appointed under this Act. It is not disputed at the bar that this Act was primarily designed to finalise the disposal of certain proceedings pending under the Principal Act at the time of its expiry. According to the appellant the words "for matters connected therewith" in the preamble are intended to have the effect of restricting the ambit of its provisions exclusively to the proceedings actually pending on the date of the expiry of the Principal Act, whereas, according to the respondent these words demand a liberal construction so as to bring within the fold of the Act all proceedings initiated for the registration of claims, notwithstanding the fact that final order of verification and valuation had already been made thereon. The respondent also placed strong reliance on the language used in Section 5 which, he argued, is plain and unambiguous and its ambit cannot be restricted by the Preamble. That section reads as under:

"5. Special power of revision in respect of cases decided under Act XLIV of 1950. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the principal Act, the Chief Settlement Commissioner:

(a) may, on an application for revision made to him within time by any person aggrieved by the decision of the Claims Officer, call for the record of the case and make such order in the case as he thinks fit.

"Explanation—For the purposes of this clause, an application for revision shall be deemed to be or to have been made within time, if—

(i) such application was not barred by limitation on the appointed day under the rules made under the principal Act and is filed within one month from the commencement of this Act; or

(ii) such application had been filed before the appointed day and was not, on the date on which it was filed barred by limitation under the rules made under the principal Act;

(b) may, on his own motion, but subject to any rules that may be made in this behalf, revise any verified claim and make such order in relation thereto as he thinks fit.

(2) No order varying the decision of the Claims Officer or revising any verified claim which prejudicially affects any person shall be made without giving an opportunity of being heard."

5. This special power of revision was conferred on the Chief Settlement Commissioner in addition to the ordinary power of revision conferred by the proviso to Section 4 (3) which was similar to the power of revision conferred on the Chief Claims Commissioner under the principal Act. The suo motu power to revise verified claims, according to the appellant's learned counsel, was designedly vested in the Chief Settlement Commissioner, he being the final authority under the Supplementary Act. But this power, argued the counsel, was not intended to extend to proceedings, which could not be considered to be pending under the Principal Act. This argument was sought to be founded on the Preamble of the Supplementary Act. A verified claim which had been subjected to scrutiny by the Chief Claims Commissioner and bore that officer's seal under the Principal Act, according to the appellant's counsel, could not be described to be a matter pending under the Principal Act and a revision of such a claim could not be held to be a matter connected with a pending proceeding.

6. The object and purpose of a preamble to a statute is well settled and at the bar before us there was no serious dispute on this point. A preamble is a key to open the mind of the legislature but it cannot be used to control or qualify precise and unambiguous language of the enactment. It is only when there is a doubt as to the meaning of a provision that recourse may be had to the preamble to ascertain the reasons for the enactment and hence the intention of the Parliament. If the language of the enactment is capable of more than one meaning then that one is to be preferred which comes nearest to the purpose and scope of the preamble. In other words, Preamble may assist in ascertaining the meaning but it does not affect clear words in a statute. The courts are thus not expected to start with the preamble for construing a statutory provision nor does the mere fact that a clear and unambiguous statutory provision goes beyond the preamble give rise by itself to a doubt on its meaning.

7. Now the language used in Section 5 (1) (b) of the Supplementary Act is unambiguous and it clearly empowers the Chief Settlement Commissioner, subject to any rules that may be made, to revise any verified claim and make such orders in relation thereto as he thinks fit. A verified claim as defined in Sec. 2 (f) of the Supplementary Act means any claim registered under the Principal Act in respect of which a final order has been passed under that Act. Now it is difficult to contend that on a plain reading of Section 5 (1) (b) in the light of the definition of the expression "verified claim", the Chief Settlement Commissioner had no power suo motu to revise a claim on which a final order had been passed under the Principal Act by the Chief Claims Commissioner. It may be pointed out that according to the statutory scheme, under Section 5 (1) (a) of the Supplementary Act an aggrieved party is entitled to apply to the Chief Settlement Commissioner for revision of decisions of the Claims Officers and there is adequate provision for safeguarding the interests of the aggrieved parties from any possible injury by reason of lapse of time. The difference in the language used in Clauses (a) and (b) of Section 5 (1) throws sufficient light on the legislative intent. The use of the words "revise any verified claim" seems prima facie to extend the power of revision also to verified claims bearing the stamp of scrutiny by the Chief Settlement Commissioner. Had the Parliament intended this power to be restricted, as suggested on behalf of the appellant, then it would have expressed such intention in clear words. The statutory scheme also supports this view. Under the proviso to Section 4 (3) the Chief Settlement Commissioner has suo motu power of revision from the decisions of the Settlement Officers and under Section 5 (1) (a) he has the power of revision on applications by aggrieved parties from the decisions of Claims Officers. But under S. 5 (1) (b) the suo motu power of revision does not extend to all decisions but is confined only to verified claims though in this respect it takes within its fold all such claims and is not restricted to the claims verified only by the Claims Officers. On a plain reading of Section 5 (1) (b), therefore, the Chief Settlement Commissioner's special power of revision would seem to us to extend to suo motu revision of the verified claims which had become final under the Principal Act as a result of orders made by the Chief Claims Commissioner on revision. Neither any statutory bar nor any precedent has been cited against the exercise of this power; nor has any principle been brought to our notice which would induce us to restrict the plain language of Section 5 (1) (b).

8. The submission that an order made on a revision can in no case be subjected to further revision, is also unacceptable on the statutory scheme and language. No constitutional bar to further scrutiny of such orders on revision was pointed out. It may in this connection be borne in mind that verification of claims under the Principal Act involved proof in regard to title to and value of property left by the displaced persons in West Pakistan; and this had to be completed within a period of originally two years which was later extended by one year. The best evidence in this respect was only available in West Pakistan, and it is a matter of common knowledge that it was not easy for an average displaced person to secure such evidence. Chances of errors in verification and valuation of claims, in these circumstances, being not too few, the highest authority was advisedly in larger public interest vested with a wide power to review and reassess such verified claims.

9. It was then contended that the power of revision under Section 5 (1) (b) is restricted to the verification of the claim and its valuation is outside its purview. This contention is difficult to accept. It is true that "claim" as defined in the principal Act broadly speaking means the assertion of a right to ownership of, or to any interest in, immovable property. But the Claims Officer under that Act has also to value the claim and the final order embraces both verification of title and valuation. The definition of "verified claim" in Section 2 (f) of the Supplementary Act speaks of the final order and it includes valuation.

10. This takes us to the submission that the power of revision of the Chief Settlement Commissioner is circumscribed within the four corners of Rule 18 of the Displaced Persons (Verification of Claims) Supplementary Rules, 1954. This Rule, of course, specifically controls the exercise of the power of revision conferred by Section 5 (1) (b) and this is not disputed. Rule 18 is in the following terms:

"18. Special revision of verified claims under Clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 — The Chief Settlement Commissioner may, while exercising the powers of special revision conferred on him by Clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 5, call for the record of any verified claim and may pass any order in revision in respect of such verified claim in such manner as he thinks fit, if he is satisfied that such order should be passed on one or the other of the following grounds, namely:—

"(i) the discovery of any new matter or documentary evidence which after the exercise of due diligence was not within the knowledge of or could not be produced by the claimant at the time when the claim was verified; or

(ii) correction of any clerical or arithmetical mistakes apparent on the face of the record; or

(iii) gross or material irregularity or disparity in the valuation of the claim; or

(iv) any other sufficient reason:

Provided that the Chief Settlement Commissioner shall not entertain or take into consideration any application or representation made to him under this rule by any claimant if such application or representation is made after the 30th day of April 1954."

11. It was contended that the grounds on which the Chief Settlement Commissioner revised the verified claim do not fall within the first three clauses of this rule. The fourth clause, according to Shri Gosain's argument, must be read ejusdem generis and so read this clause would also be inapplicable to the case. Reliance in support of this argument was placed on M. M. B. Catholicos v. Most. Rev. Mar Poulouse, 1955-1 SCR 520 = (AIR 1954 SC 526) a case dealing with the power of review under Order 47, Rule 1, Civil P. C. the language of which, according to the appellant's counsel, is completely identical with that of rule 18.

12. Let us examine the language of these two provisions. Rule 18 has already been reproduced. Order 47, Rule 1 (c), Civil P. C. which alone is relevant for our purpose is in the following terms.

"Rule 1. Any person considering himself aggrieved—

(c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order.

13. From a plain reading of these two provisions the difference in their language is quite obvious. Clauses (i) and (ii) of Rule 18 are certainly similar to Cl. (c) of Order 47, Rule 1, but Clause (iii) of Rule 18 is wholly different from Cl. (c) of Rule 1 of Order 47. It is difficult to hold these clauses to be similar in kind or to have a common genus. The former seems not only to take within its fold gross and material irregularity in the valuation of the claim, which to some extent resembles one of the grounds on which revisional power as contemplated by Section 115, Civil P. C. can be exercised, but also to include cases where there is disparity in the valuation of the claim. Quite clearly this clause is much wider in scope than Order 47, Rule 1 (c). The expression "other sufficient cause" occurring in Clause (iv) of Rule 18 has therefore to be construed in this context. When in a statute there are general words following particular and specific words, the general words are sometimes construed as limited to things of the same kind as those specified. This rule of interpretation generally known as ejusdem generis rule has been pressed into service on behalf of the appellant. This rule reflects an attempt to reconcile incompatibility between the specific and general words, in view of the other rules of interpretation, that all words in a statute are given effect if possible, that a statute is to be construed as a whole and that no words in a statute are presumed to be superfluous. Ejusdem Generis rule being one of the rules of interpretation, only serves, like all such rules, as an aid to discover the legislative intent; it is neither final nor conclusive and is attracted only when the specific words enumerated, constitute a class, which is not exhausted and are followed by general terms and when there is no manifestation of intent to give broader meaning to the general words.

14. The first three categories contained in Rule 18, in our opinion, do not form a genus or a class with the result that Clause (iv) would not attract the ejusdem generis rule for its construction. But assuming that they constitute a class or kind of objects or genus, it appears to us that grounds given by the Settlement Commissioner are analogous to Clause (iii) which speaks of gross and material irregularity or disparity in the valuation of the claim. This submission must, therefore, be rejected.

15. We now come to the merits of the order of the Settlement Commissioner. After going through the order and the material on the record, to which our attention has been drawn, we are satisfied that the Settlement Commissioner has at more places than one based his conclusions on pure conjectures and surmises without there being any legal evidence on the record to support them. We do not consider it necessary to exhaustively deal with the argument in support of the errors of law on the face of the record for the purpose of considering the alleged infirmities in the order of the Settlement Commissioner. The learned Single Judge has dealt with this question at length and we are in agreement with his conclusions. We may only add that we have also looked at the original documents which appeared suspicious to the Settlement Commissioner, but we are unable to find any circumstance which could be said to be suspicious or abnormal so as to give rise to any reasonable doubt about their genuineness. The respondent's learned counsel also expressed his inability to bring to our notice any material throwing suspicion on the genuineness of these documents. Indeed the learned counsel was frank enough to express his inability to support the view taken by the Letters Patent Bench or to find fault with the conclusions of the learned Single Judge, whose order seems to be unexceptionable. We accordingly allow the appeal and setting aside the order of the Letters Patent Bench restore that of the Single Judge. It was agreed at the bar that as directed by the Single Judge the case should go back to the Chief Settlement Commissioner for a fresh decision in accordance with law. That this case can be remitted back to the Chief Settlement Commissioner in these proceedings was not disputed before us. We should, however, make it clear that this order is not to be construed to contain any expression of opinion on merit on the evidentiary value of the material on the record on the question of valuation of the claim. The appellant is entitled to his costs.

Appeal allowed.

Nathulal, Appellant v. Phoolchand, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2345 of 1966, D/- 16-10-1969.

(A) Contract Act (1872), Ss. 31 and 55 — Conditional agreement — Agreement to transfer land — Statute prescribing prior permission of authority — Agreement must be deemed subject to implied condition.

Where by a statute property is not transferable without the permission of the authority, an agreement to transfer the property must be deemed subject to the implied condition that the transferor will obtain the sanction of the authority concerned. AIR 1930 PC 287 and AIR 1964 SC 978, Rel. on. (Para 5)

(B) Contract Act (1872), Section 55 — Readiness and willingness — Purchaser need not produce money or vouch a concluded scheme for financing the transaction. AIR 1950 PC 90, Rel. on. (Para 6)

(C) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 53A — Defence of part performance — Conditions essential — Sale of land — Necessity of permission — Section 70 (8) of M. B. Land Revenue and Tenancy Act creates no bar.

The conditions necessary for making out the defence of part performance to an action in ejectment by the owner are:

(1) that the transferor has contracted to transfer for consideration any immovable property by writing signed by him or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty;

(2) that the transferee has, in part performance of the contract, taken possession of the property or any part thereof, or the transferee, being already in possession continues in possession in part performance of the contract;

(3) that the transferee has done some act in furtherance of the contract; and

(4) that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract.

If these conditions are fulfilled then notwithstanding that the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered or, where there is an instrument of transfer, that the transfer has not been completed in the manner prescribed therefor by the law for the time being in force, the transferor or any person claiming under him is debarred from enforcing against the transferee any right in respect of the property of which the transferee has taken or continued in possession, other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract. Section 70 (8) of the M. B. Land Revenue and Tenancy Act creates no bar to defence of part performance. (Para 9)

SHAH, J.: Nathulal—appellant in this appeal—was the owner of a Ginning Factory constructed on a plot of agricultural land bearing Khasra No. 259/1. The land stood entered in the revenue records in the name of Chittarmal—brother of Nathulal. On February 26, 1951, Nathulal agreed to sell to Phoolchand the land and the Ginning Factory for Rs. 43,011. He received in part payment Rs. 22,011 and put Phoolchand in possession of the property. Phoolchand agreed to pay the balance on or before May 7, 1951. The terms of the agreement were reduced to writing in counter-part and were duly signed by the parties.

2. On the plea that Phoolchand had failed to pay on the due date the balance of price, Nathulal rescinded the contract on October 8, 1951 and commenced an action in May, 1954 in the Court of the District Judge, Nimar, for a decree for possession of the land and the factory and for mesne profits from the date of delivery till possession was restored to him, alleging that Phoolchand was a trespasser because he had contrary to the express terms of the agreement made default in payment of the balance of the purchase price on or before May 7, 1951. Phoolchand contended that Nathulal had failed to get the name of Chittarmal “deleted” from the revenue record according to the terms of the agreement, that he Phoolchand was ready and willing to pay the balance of Rs. 21,000, that he had sent a telegram on May 7, 1951, offering to pay the balance against execution of the sale deed, that the agreement had been unlawfully altered by Nathulal after execution by adding a clause by which the possession of Phoolchand in default of payment of money on or before May 7, 1951, was declared unlawful.

3. The Trial Court decreed the suit holding that Phoolchand committed breach of contract in that he failed to pay the balance due by him on or before the due date. In appeal the High Court of Madhya Pradesh reversed the decree. The High Court declared that Nathulal was entitled to the balance of the consideration as also "mesne profits" at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per annum from May 7, 1951 till the date on which Rs. 21,000 were deposited by Phoolchand within two months of the passing of the decree. Subject to this direction Phoolchand was allowed to retain possession of the entire property i. e. land Khasra No. 259/1 including the Ginning Factory and structures standing on the land. It was directed that if Phoolchand, committed default Nathulal may claim possession of the entire property with mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 3,000 per annum from the date he was out of possession and till the date on which possession was delivered. The cross-objections filed by Nathulal relating to mesne profits were disposed of in the light of the directions given in the decree. With certificate granted by the High Court this appeal has been preferred by Nathulal.

4. In the view of the Trial Court Phoolchand was unable to procure the amount of Rs. 21,000 which he had agreed to pay on or before May 7, 1951 and on that account he had committed breach of the contract. The High Court held that Nathulal was not guilty of breach of contract, for, Phoolchand had arranged with a Bank to borrow upto Rs. 75,000, when needed by him, and Phoolchand had on that account sufficient resources at his disposal to enable him to pay the amount due. The Trial Court and the High Court have held that Phoolchand failed to pay the amount on or before May 7, 1951. They have also held that he had not made the tender as pleaded by him.

5. Under the terms of the agreement Nathulal had undertaken to get the name of his brother Chittarmal removed from the revenue records and to get his own name entered, but the lands continued to stand recorded in the name of Chittarmal till October 6, 1952, and before that date Nathulal rescinded the contract. Again by virtue of Section 70 (4) of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act 66 of 1950, Phoolchand not being an agriculturist the land could not be sold to him without the sanction of the State Government. In the absence of any specific clause dealing with this matter, a condition that Nathulal will secure the sanction under Section 70 (4) after paying the appropriate fee must be implied for it is well settled that where by statute property is not transferable without the permission of the authority, an agreement to transfer the property must be deemed subject to the implied condition that the transferor will obtain the sanction of the authority concerned: see Motilal v. Nanhelal, 57 Ind App 333 = (AIR 1930 PC 287) and Mrs. Chandnee Widya Vati Madden v. Dr. C. L. Katial, (1964) 2 SCR 495 = (AIR 1964 SC 978).

6. Phoolchand could be called upon to pay the balance of the price only after Nathulal performed his part of the contract. Phoolchand had an outstanding arrangement with his Banker to enable him to draw the amount needed by him for payment to Nathulal. To prove himself ready and willing a purchaser has not necessarily to produce the money or to vouch a concluded scheme for financing the transaction: Bank of India Ltd. v. Jamsetji A. H. Chinoy and Messrs. Chinoy and Co., 77 Ind App 76 at p. 91 = (AIR 1950 PC 90 at p. 96).

7. The High Court proceeded to decide the case largely upon the view that Nathulal committed breach of contract. But the question whether Nathulal had committed the breach is not of much significance. Nathulal was the owner of the land: he had executed no conveyance in favour of Phoolchand in the land or the factory. Nathulal had sued for possession relying upon his title, and Phoolchand could defeat that claim if he established his defence of part-performance under Section 53A of the Transfer of Property Act.

8. The argument raised by counsel for Nathulal, that by virtue of S. 70 (8) of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, the plea of part performance is not available to a person put in possession of the property under a contract of sale, has, in our judgment, no force. Section 70 (8) provides:

"No sale under this section shall be deemed to be valid until the sale deed effecting such a sale has been registered in accordance with the law of registration in force for the time being".

But this clause only requires that not only the conditions prescribed by Section 70, but registration of sale deed in accordance with the law of registration for the time being in force is a condition required to be complied with before a sale is deemed valid. There is no sale in the present case, and Phoolchand is not relying upon any sale. He is relying upon a contract of sale and equity which he may set up to defend his possession against the claim made by Nathulal. To the making of such a claim, relying upon the doctrine of part performance in Section 53A of the Transfer of Property Act, there is nothing in Section 70 (8) of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act 66 of 1950 which may operate as a bar.

9. The conditions necessary for making out the defence of part performance to an action in ejectment by the owner are:

(1) that the transferor has contracted to transfer for consideration any immoveable property by writing signed by him or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty;

(2) that the transferee has, in part performance of the contract, taken possession of the property or any part thereof, or the transferee, being already in possession continues in possession in part performance of the contract;

(3) that the transferee has done some act in furtherance of the contract; and

(4) that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract.

If these conditions are fulfilled then notwithstanding that the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, or, where there is an instrument of transfer, that the transfer has not been completed in the manner prescribed therefor by the law for the time being in force, the transferor or any person claiming under him is debarred from enforcing against the transferee any right in respect of the property of which the transferee has taken or continued in possession, other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract.

There is in this case a contract to transfer for consideration immoveable property by writing signed by Nathulal from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. In part performance of the contract, Phoolchand has taken possession of the property and he had in pursuance thereof paid an amount of Rs. 22,011. The argument raised by counsel for Nathulal that the act done in pursuance of the contract must be independent of the terms of the contract cannot be accepted. The first three conditions, for the defence of part performance to be effectively set up by Phoolchand exist. Mr. Shroff for Nathulal however contends that Phoolchand was not willing to perform his part of the contract.

10. Nathulal had expressly undertaken to have the revenue records rectified by securing the deletion of Chittarmal's name, and it was an implied condition of the contract that Nathulal will secure the sanction of the Collector to the transfer under Section 70 (4) of the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act 66 of 1950. The first condition was not fulfilled till October 6, 1952 and the second condition was never fulfilled. We are unable to agree with Mr. Shroff that the repeal of the Madhya Bharat Act 66 of 1950 by the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code, 1959, has retrospective operation.

11. In considering whether a person is willing to perform his part of the contract the sequence in which the obligations under a contract are to be performed must be taken into account. The argument raised by Mr. Shroff that Nathulal was bound to perform the two conditions only after the amount of Rs. 21,000 was paid is plainly contrary to the terms of the agreement. By virtue of Section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act the chapters and sections of the Transfer of Property Act which relate to contracts are to be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. If, therefore, under the terms of the contract the obligations of the parties have to be performed in a certain sequence, one of the parties to the contract cannot require compliance with the obligations by the other party without in the first instance performing his own part of the contract which in the sequence of obligations is performable by him earlier.

In view of the arrangement made by Phoolchand it was clear that he had at all relevant times made necessary arrangements for paying the amount due, but so long as Nathulal did not carry out his part of the contract, Phoolchand could not be called upon to pay the balance of the price. It must therefore be held that Phoolchand was at all relevant times willing to carry out his part of the contract.

12. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 113 and 163 of 1969, D/- 14-10-1969.

(A) Defence of India Rules (1962), Rule 132A (since repealed by Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1965) — Prosecution for offence under Rule cannot be launched subsequent to its repeal as there is no saving provision under the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules (1965) — AIR 1970 SC 494, Foll.

(Para 6)

(B) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 120B, 120A — Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (1947), Section 21 (1) — Contract contemplated under Section 21 (1) — Nature — Section 121 (1) does not cover criminal conspiracy similar to Section 120B — Complaint in respect of illegal acquisition of foreign exchange — Allegation therein that two accused agreed to obtain foreign exchange illegally — Framing of charge under Section 120B — Maintainability.

A complaint in respect of illegal acquisition of foreign exchange filed against the two accused contained the following allegations:

P, one of the accused, who was the Managing Director of a Company entered into agreement with a foreign Company for supply of raw material to his company. Under the agreement the foreign company also agreed to over-invoice the value of goods and give credit of the over-invoiced amount to the personal account of P. Another accused, L, a foreigner, also entered into agreement with P, by which he agreed to help P in opening the account in a foreign bank and to deposit in bank the amounts credited to P's account by the foreign company from time to time and to intimate P secretly about the accounts. All these agreements were entered into outside India and before coming into force of Foreign Exchange Regulation Act or Rule 132-B of Defence of India Rules. Acquisition of foreign exchange in this manner was not an offence at the time of the agreement between P and L, nonetheless, L agreed to assist P in the belief that he would be assisting P in acquiring foreign exchange illegally. L continued to help P even after acquisition of foreign exchange in such manner became offence under the law.

Held (Per Majority, Mitter & Hegde, JJ. contra), on the allegations in the complaint both the accused could be charged under S. 120B, Penal Code as it seemed that the several alleged acts of both the accused were in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy to obtain foreign exchange illegally. (Para 10)

Held, further that the alleged agreement between the two accused was not one which transgressed Section 21 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act. Hence Section 120B would apply. Agreement between P and the foreign company if proved, would however, fall within the mischief of Section 21 (1). (Para 8)

The combined effect of the several provisions of Section 21 does not lead to the view that sub-section (1), covers a case of criminal conspiracy similar to Section 120B. Section 21 does not in terms deal with an agreement to commit an offence or a legal act in an illegal way but merely provides that an agreement or contract by itself ought not to evade or avoid the provisions of the Act. The contracts or agreements contemplated under Section 21 are those which are entered into during the course of commercial transactions and it is the intention of the legislature to prohibit that such contracts or agreements ought not to provide for the evasion or avoidance of any of the provisions of the Act either directly or indirectly. The words "directly or indirectly" do not take in any agreement to do illegal acts in future:

1969 Mad LW (Cri) 274, Affirmed.
(Para 8)

(C) Penal Code (1860), Sections 120A, 120B — Agreement to do illegal act — Acts not amounting to offence done by one conspirator in furtherance of that agreement — He is still liable to be convicted under Section 120B.

Where the agreement between certain persons is a conspiracy to do or continue to do something which is illegal, it is immaterial whether the agreement to do any of the acts in furtherance of the commission of the offence do not strictly amount to an offence. The entire agreement must be viewed as a whole and it has to be ascertained as to what in fact the conspirators intended to do or the object they wanted to achieve. Consequently, even if the acts done by a conspirator in furtherance of the criminal conspiracy do not strictly amount to offence, he is liable to be convicted under Section 120B. LR 3 HL 305, Ref. to.
(Para 9)

(D) Penal Code (1860), Section 120A — Essentials of offence — Agreement between two or more persons — When constitutes conspiracy — Continuance of agreement — Effect.

The first of the offences defined in Section 120A, Penal Code which is itself punishable as a substantive offence is the very agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act or legal act by illegal means subject however to the proviso that where the agreement is not an agreement to commit an offence the agreement does not amount to a conspiracy unless it is followed up by an overt act done by one or more persons in pursuance of such an agreement. There must be a meeting of minds in the doing of the illegal act or the doing of a legal act by illegal means. If in the furtherance of the conspiracy certain persons are induced to do an unlawful act without the knowledge of the conspiracy of the plot they cannot be held to be conspirators, though they may be guilty of an offence pertaining to the specific unlawful act. The offence of conspiracy is complete when two or more conspirators have agreed to do or cause to be done an act which is itself an offence, in which case no overt act need be established. An agreement to do an illegal act which amounts to a conspiracy will continue as long as the members of the conspiracy remain in agreement and as long as they are acting in accord and in furtherance of the object for which they entered into the agreement.

The following Judgments of the Court were delivered by

JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J. (on behalf of Sikri and Ray, JJ. and himself): The Director of Enforcement, New Delhi, filed complaint on February 16, 1969 before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras against Lennart Schussler, accused No. 1, and M. R. Pratap, accused 2 Managing Director, the Rayala Corporation Ltd. hereinafter referred to as A.1 and A.2 respectively under Section 120-B I. P. C. and Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (a) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (VII) of 1947 (hereinafter called the Act). Two Criminal Miscellaneous Petitions, one filed by A1 being No. 459 of 1969 and the other filed by A2 being No. 621 of 1969 for quashing the complaint were dismissed by the Madras High Court by a common judgment against which these two appeals by certificate have been filed.

2. The complaint which is in respect of the acquisition of 88913.09 Swiss Kronars in contravention of the Act states that on reliable information received by the Assistant Director of Enforcement, Madras that A2 was utilising his position as Managing Director of the Rayala Corporation Ltd. in acquiring foreign exchange illicitly, on December 20, 1966, a search was conducted of the premises of the said company in the presence of A2, Jaga Rao and the legal adviser of the company one Sita Ram. During the search certain documents were recovered and seized, one of which was a letter dated the 25th March, 1965 in Swedish language from the Associated Swedish

Steels A. B. Sweden, known as ASSAB to A1 with the enclosures. The Rayala Corporation Private Ltd. was a concern manufacturing Halda typewriters for which purpose certain materials were being imported from Sweden. The firm with which initially the transactions were being entered into was known as A. B. Atvidabergs, later known as Facit AB, of which A1, a Swedish national, has been the export manager. It is alleged that in August 1963, A2, Jaga Rao and A1 met together at Stockholm and agreed to a plan regarding purchase of certain raw materials, namely, Steel alloy sheets directly from ASSAB instead of purchasing them from Atvidabergs. At that meeting A2 informed A1 that henceforth he would buy material on behalf of his company from ASSAB instead of M/s. Atvidabergs. A2 further informed A1 that the arrangement made between him and the ASSAB was to over-invoice the value of goods by 40 per cent of the true value and that he should be paid the difference of 40 per cent on account of the aforesaid over-invoicing by crediting it to his personal account, and that since under the laws of India this acquisition by him was unlawful and had to be kept secret, it should not be mentioned in the Official correspondence of Messrs. Rayala Corporation with the Swedish firm. He requested the first accused to help him in opening the account in Svenska Handels Banken, Sweden, in order not to transfer the money lying to his credit in Atvidabergs but also to have further deposits to his personal account from ASSAB on account of the difference between the actual value and the over-invoiced value. A1 agreed to act as requested by A2. A2 made arrangement with ASSAB to intimate to A1 the various amounts credited to A2's account and asked A1 to keep a watch over the correctness of the account and to further intimate to him the account position from time to time through unofficial channels and whenever A1 came to India. A1 is said to have agreed to comply with this request. Subsequently in November 1965 A1 came to India when he is said to have brought the incriminating letter dated the 25th March 1965 which was seized. He is said to have also agreed at that time with A2 to continue to help him to accumulate foreign exchange illegally in the same manner. In September 1966 also A1 arrived at Madras where he stayed for a month and at that time also he brought further details of the account. The gravamen of the charge is set out in paragraph 9 of the complaint as follows;— "Thus it is clear that A 1 and A 2 agreed to commit illegal acts, namely, acquisition by A 2 of foreign exchange illicitly and retaining the same abroad without surrendering the same to the Government of India and also to defraud the Government of India of foreign exchange thereby contravening Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Rule 132A of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1964 and further that between August 1963 and 1966, A 1 and A 2 in pursuance of the said agreement did commit acts in contravention of Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Rule 132A of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1964 and thereby committed offence punishable under Section 120B of the Indian Penal Code, read with Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Rule 132A of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1964".

3. The complaint also refers to the fact that C. C. No. 8736 of 1968 had already been filed against the Rayala Corporation Private Ltd. In view of this reference it is necessary, for a better appreciation of the issues involved in this petition, to give a brief account of the earlier proceedings taken by the Directorate of Enforcement in this regard. It appears that the earlier notice sent by the Enforcement Directorate dated the 25th August, 1967, was for the contravention of the Act in respect of 244,713.70 Swiss Kronars alleged to have been deposited in A 2's bank account, which amount included 88,913.09 Swiss Kronars. This notice was followed by a further show cause notice under Section 23 (3) of the Act dated the 4th November, 1967, to A2 as to why he should not be prosecuted in respect of 88913.09 Swiss Kronars. A 2 in his reply of November 13, 1967, to the show cause notice of the 25th August, 1967, denied the allegations. The Enforcement Director further issued another show cause notice dated the 15th November, 1967, to the other directors of the Corporation and its General Manager, Jaga Rao in continuation of the notice dated the 25th August, asking them to show cause why adjudication proceedings should not be instituted. On November 29, 1967, A 2 replied to the notice of the 4th November, 1967, denying the allegations. Thereafter on January 20, 1968, the Director of Enforcement issued a notice to the Rayala Corporation to show cause why it should not be prosecuted for violation in respect of 88,913.09 Swiss Kronars. Two months later, namely, on March 16, 1968, a revised show cause notice was issued to the Corporation and A 2 superseding the notice of 25th August, 1967 and intimating to them that they were prosecuting the Corporation and A 2 for the contravention of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act in respect of 88,913.09 Swiss Kronars. Four days thereafter the Director of Enforcement filed a complaint against the Corporation and A 2 under Rule 132A of the Defence of India Rules and Sections 4 (1), 4 (3), and 5 (1) (e) of the Act. Both the Corporation and A 2 filed Criminal Misc. Petns. being respectively Nos. 978 and 980 of 1968, (reported in 1969 Mad LW 98) for quashing the complaint but the High Court of Madras dismissed these petitions in October 1968. Two appeals by certificate preferred against that order, being Criminal Appeals Nos. 18 and 19 of 1969, (reported in AIR 1970 SC 494) were allowed by this Court on July 23, 1969, setting aside the order of the High Court rejecting the applications under Section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure for quashing the proceedings against the appellants therein. While the above proceedings were pending, A 1 who happened to be a passenger travelling by an aircraft from Singapore to Karachi via Palam was detained on November 27, 1968, by the officers of the Office of the Enforcement Directorate when the aircraft which had landed at Palam on November 26, 1968, for refuelling had to be temporarily grounded due to engine trouble. On November 30, 1968, the Enforcement Directorate served a notice for adjudication on A1 in his capacity as a director of the Rayala Corporation which was purported to be in continuation of the previous adjudication notice dated August 25, 1967 issued to the company under Section 23C of the Act. These allegations were also denied by A 1 on the 30th January 1969, and on 5th February, 1969, A 1 filed a writ petition in this Court for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus. It is however unnecessary to narrate the various stages of this and the subsequent petitions for directing A 1's release and for according him permission to leave this country for Sweden. The subsequent writ petition filed by him after the withdrawal of the first one filed on 5th February, 1969, came up for hearing along with these criminal appeals and this Court on the 10th September, 1969, while allowing the writ petition to be withdrawn passed a consent order permitting A 1 to depart from India provided he furnishes bank guarantee in the foreign exchange equivalent of Rs. 1,50,000/- in Swedish Kronars and on his undertaking to appear before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras or any other Magistrate to whom the complaint case might be transferred at the time of the disposal thereof.

4. The main question in these appeals is whether A 1 can be charged in respect of acts alleged against him in the complaint with an offence under Section 120B Indian Penal Code or with offences under the several provisions of the Act and Rule 132A of the Defence of India Rules, read with Section 120B Indian Penal Code.

5. Before considering this question it is necessary to mention that at the time of the alleged agreement between A 1 and A 2 at Stockholm neither the Defence of India Rules nor the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act contained any provision specifically making it an offence for a person resident in India to acquire foreign exchange abroad. Rule 132A of the Defence of India Rules was added on 21st January, 1964, by Defence of India (Amendment) Rules 1964 by which dealings in foreign exchange by persons other than an authorised person were prohibited. This provision remained in force till 31st March, 1965, when it was repealed. Section 4 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act was also amended as from 1st April, 1965, so as to prohibit the buying or otherwise acquiring or borrowing or selling or otherwise transferring or lending to any person other than an authorised dealer any foreign exchange without the previous general or special permission of the Reserve Bank. It is therefore apparent that at the time when the alleged agreement between A 1, A 2 and Jaga Rao is said to have taken place in Stockholm in August 1963, it was neither an offence under the Defence of India Rules nor under the Act to acquire foreign exchange in a foreign country. But it is contended by the learned Solicitor General that pursuant to that agreement A 1 continued to help and agreed to help even after it became an offence under the Defence of India Rules or under the Act and consequently no exception can be taken to the complaint against A 1. At any rate, Section 21 (1) of the Act would cover such agreements which are offences and consequently the accused can be charged with Section 120B, Indian Penal Code. On the other hand, learned counsel for the appellants Shri Asoke Sen submits that firstly, there was no mention of any allegation against A 1 in the several show cause notices issued either to the Rayala Corporation or to the directors of that Corporation or to A 2 but it is an afterthought brought about by the machinations of Jagga Rao who was hostile and inimical to A 2; secondly, as it appears on the enquiry made by A 2 at the instance of the Enforcement Directorate from Swenska Handels Banken, Stockholm, that in fact there is no account as alleged either in the name of the Rayala Corporation or in the name of the Managing Director of the Rayala Corporation, that is, A 2, there would be no basis for the complaint; and thirdly, the agreement alleged does not either come under Section 120B, Indian Penal Code or would amount to a contravention of any of the provisions of the Act including Section 21 (1) thereof. It would not be necessary at this stage to go into these questions because that has to be seen is whether, assuming the facts as stated in the complaint to be true, A 1 and A 2 could be charged with the offences specified therein. The answer to this question must depend upon the nature of the part which A 1 agreed to play in the acquisition of the foreign exchange under which agreement he is said to have continued to participate in the conspiracy by rendering help to A 2 in acquiring foreign exchange even after 21st of January, 1964, and also till after the amendment of Section 4 (1) of the Act.

6. Under Section 120B there must be an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence or where the agreement does not amount to an offence in the doing of an act which is legal, in an illegal way there should also be established an overt act. In so far as the offence under Rule 132A of the Defence of India Rules is concerned, in 1963 what Pratap did was not an offence, nor was it an offence under the Act as Section 4 was amended with effect from 1st April, 1965. In so far as any acts which may be considered to constitute an offence under Rule 132A of the Defence of India

Rules, it has been held by this Court in Criminal Appeals Nos. 18 and 19 of 1969, D/- 23-7-1969 (reported in AIR 1970 SC 494), Rayala Corporation etc. v. Director of Enforcement, that no prosecution can be launched for an offence under that provision subsequent to the repeal as there is no saving provision thereunder.

7. It is then contended that the agreement entered into in 1963 continued to be effective even after the acquisition of foreign exchange became an offence after the amendment of the Act on 1st April, 1965, and at any rate after this amendment an agreement by A 1 to assist A 2 was again said to have been arrived at in Madras in 1965. It is, therefore, necessary to examine whether such an agreement would constitute an offence and if so under what provision of law. The agreement in Madras has a reference to the initial agreement in Sweden. This alleged agreement between A 1 and A 2, as set out in the complaint, can be briefly stated to consist of the following, namely, in August 1963, A 2 asked A 1 to help him (a) to open an account in Swenska Handels Banken, Stockholm, (b) to get the money lying to A 2's credit with Atvidabergs accumulated by him as a result of over-invoicing transferred to Pratap's account with the bank and (c) to keep a watch on and check the correctness of the account of the acquisitions from time to time and not to mention anything in the official correspondence but to give information otherwise. Even in Madras in 1965 A 1 is alleged to have agreed to keep a watch on the account and bring him statements of the account. The offence by A 2 under the Act would consist of getting the goods which the Rayala Corporation was purchasing over-invoiced by 40 per cent so that permission to remit foreign exchange from India to the extent of the amount of the over-invoice could be obtained from the Reserve Bank and after money is received in Sweden by the Swedish Company that company was to credit Pratap's (A 2) account with 40 per cent of the over-invoice price. If these facts are established, they certainly amount to a contravention of Clause (1) and Clause (3) of Section 4 which provide that where any foreign exchange is acquired by any person other than by any authorised dealer for any particular purpose or where any person has been permitted conditionally to acquire foreign exchange the said person shall not use the foreign exchange so acquired otherwise than for that purpose or as the case may be, fail to comply with any condition to which the permission granted to him is subject, and where any foreign exchange so acquired cannot be so used or, as the case may be, the condition cannot be complied with, the said person shall without delay sell the foreign exchange to an authorised dealer. Now it is alleged that A 2 Pratap has in breach of this condition on which foreign exchange was released to the Rayala Corporation to pay the actual cost of the goods has not only not complied with the conditions on which the permission was granted but has also committed default in not selling the foreign exchange so acquired by him without delay to an authorised dealer.

8. Before dealing with the question whether the agreement of A1 to help A2 amounts to criminal conspiracy punishable under Section 120B I. P. C., it will be convenient first to dispose of the submission that Section 120B I. P. C. does not apply because Section 21 (1) covers the same ground. It would appear that the alleged agreement between A1 and A2 is not one which transgresses Section 21 (1) of the Act. What Section 21 (1) provides is that the provisions of the Act must be avoided or evaded by the agreement or contract itself. The contracts or agreements are those which are entered into during the course of commercial transactions and it is the intention of the legislature to prohibit that such contracts or agreements ought not to provide for the evasion or avoidance of any of the provisions of the Act either directly or indirectly. This assumption is made clear by the subsequent sub-section in which the legislature is anxious to preserve the integrity of these transactions by providing that any reference to any act being done without the permission of the Central Government or Reserve Bank shall not render the agreement invalid and it shall be an implied term of every contract governed by the law of any part of India that anything agreed to be done by any term of that contract which is prohibited to be done by or under any of the provisions of this Act except with the permission of the Central Government or Reserve Bank shall not be done unless such permission is granted. Sub-section (3) provides that notwithstanding anything in the Act or any provision in the contract that anything for which permission has to be obtained from the Central Government or Reserve Bank shall not be done without that permission, no legal proceedings shall be prevented from being brought in India to recover any sum which apart from any of the said provisions and any such term would be due whether as a debt, damages or otherwise but subject to the certain conditions provided in Clauses (a) to (c) therein. Similarly, sub-section (4) states that nothing shall be deemed to prevent any instrument being a bill of exchange or promissory note in spite of any inhibitions in the Act and notwithstanding anything contained in the Negotiable Instruments Act. The combined effect of the several provisions of Section 21 does not incline us to the view that sub-section (1) covers a case of criminal conspiracy similar to Section 120B. Section 21 does not in terms deal with an agreement to commit an offence or a legal act in an illegal way but merely provides that an agreement or contract by itself ought not to evade or avoid the provisions of the Act. The agreement entered into between ASSAB and A 2 Pratap would, if proved, come within the mischief of S. 21 (1) but the agreement such as the one alleged to have been entered into between A 1 and A 2 does not itself evade or avoid any of the provisions of the Act, rules or directions. The words directly or indirectly do not take in any agreement to do illegal acts in future.

8-A. It now remains to be seen whether the alleged agreement which A 1 and A 2 arrived at in Stockholm in 1963 and again in Madras in 1965, would, if established, amount to a criminal conspiracy. The first of the offence defined in Section 120A Penal Code which is itself punishable as a substantive offence is the very agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means subject however to the proviso that where the agreement is not an agreement to commit an offence the agreement does not amount to a conspiracy unless it is followed up by an overt act done by one or more persons in pursuance of such an agreement. There must be a meeting of minds in the doing of the illegal act or the doing of a legal act by illegal means. If in the furtherance of the conspiracy certain persons are induced to do an unlawful act without the knowledge of the conspiracy or the plot they cannot be held to be conspirators, though they may be guilty of an offence pertaining to the specific unlawful act. The offence of conspiracy is complete when two or more conspirators have agreed to do or cause to be done an act which is itself an offence, in which case no overt act need be established. It is also clear that an agreement to do an illegal act which amounts to a conspiracy will continue as long as the members of the conspiracy remain in agreement and as long as they are acting in accord and in furtherance of the object for which they entered into the agreement.

9. As has been noticed earlier at the time A 1 and A 2 entered into an agreement though A 2 thought it was an offence to acquire foreign exchange by the method he was employing it was not in fact an offence. It is none the less alleged that A 1 agreed to help in the belief that what he is doing would be to assist A 2 to acquire foreign exchange illegally. This agreement continued and A 1 was assisting A 2 even after the acquisition of foreign exchange became illegal and is said to have agreed even after he came to Madras in 1965 to continue to help in acquiring the foreign exchange. It is however contended that the agreement of A 1 with A 2 does not amount to a criminal conspiracy because all that A 1 has agreed to do was to help A 2 to open an account in the Swedish Bank, have the amounts lying to the credit of A 2 with Atvidabergs to that account and to help A 2 by keeping a watch over the account. It is true that none of these acts amounts to an offence, because the opening of the account in the Bank and having the amounts transferred from Atvidabergs was not an offence in August 1963, and there is nothing to show that A 1 had not completed that part of the agreement relating to Atvidabergs and the opening of the account with the bank before January, 1964, or that he had rendered the assistance after that date. If this part of the agreement does not amount to a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, then it is submitted that the subsequent watching over the account and sending or bringing a statement of the account of A 2 relating to the acquisition of the foreign exchange does not amount to an offence. The agreement which constitutes an offence, it is said is the one between A 2 and ASSAB. The subsequent act of A 1 was neither necessary to acquire nor does it further the acquisition of the foreign exchange in contravention of the provisions of the Act and is therefore not an offence under S. 120B of the Penal Code. This argument would postulate that the several acts which constitute it can be split up in parts and the criminal liability of A 1 must only be judged by the part he has played. It appears to us that this is not a justifiable contention, because what has to be seen is whether the agreement between A 1 and A 2 is a conspiracy to do or continue to do something which is illegal and if it is, it is immaterial whether the agreement to do any of the acts in furtherance of the commission of the offence do not strictly amount to an offence. The entire agreement must be viewed as a whole and it has to be ascertained as to what in fact the conspirators intended to do or the object they wanted to achieve. As observed by Willis, J., in his 11th answer given on behalf of the Judges when consulted by the Lord Chancellor in Denis Dowling Mulcahy v. Queen, LR 3 HL 305 at page 317:

"A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself, and the act of each of the parties promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced, if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for the use of criminal means."

10. In this case on the allegations A 2 asked A 1 to help him in acquiring foreign exchange illegally and A 1 agreed to help him. This agreement though initially may not have been an offence was none the less an offence subsequently but A 1 did not withdraw from it and was said to have continued to carry out that agreement. A 1's help was necessary for A 2's design because otherwise he would not know whether ASSAB was in fact crediting his account in the bank with the amount of over-invoice. Only when ASSAB credited A 2's account could he be said to have acquired the foreign exchange till then it was only an understanding or agreement under which if it is enforceable a debt would be created in favour of A 2. The knowledge that the amount was being credited from time to time was an essential part of the agreement between A 1 and A 2 and would be in furtherance of illegal and unlawful design to acquire foreign exchange contrary to the provisions of the Act. It consisted in, as has already been stated A 1 keeping a watch over the accounts, his coming over to India on several occasions, his bringing a letter in reply to his letter, with a statement of account annexed in November 1965 from ASSAB to himself, in which the amount of foreign exchange credited by ASSAB to A2's account with Svenska Handels Banken was mentioned, his statement at the time of handing it over that he brought the letter in person as he did not want to send it by post in view of the nature of the transaction and his further agreeing in Madras with A 2 that he will continue to help him. The several acts of A 1 are all acts in consequence of the agreement which had its origin in Sweden. A 2 Pratap one of the conspirators also in furtherance of that conspiracy obtained foreign exchange invoices which were over priced with a view to acquire the same in Sweden. It would, therefore, appear that on the allegations contained in the complaint A 1 and A 2 could be charged with an offence under Section 120B.

11. These appeals are accordingly dismissed with a word of caution that nothing that has been stated here should be taken as establishing any of the facts required to constitute the offence which if the prosecution case has to be sustained must be proved at the trial in accordance with law.

12. MITTER, J.:— These two appeals by certificate arise out of a common judgment of the Madras High Court in Cr. M. P. 469/1969 and Cr. M. P. No. 621/1969, the object of both being to quash the complaint in C. C. No. 5438 of 1969 on the file of the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras. Cr. M. P. 469 of 1969 was by Lennart Schussler while Cr. M. P. 621/1969 was by M. R. Pratap. The complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate was filed on February 16, 1969, by the Director of Enforcement against Schussler and Pratap under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with various sections of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947.

13. In order to appreciate how the complaint came to be made, it is necessary to note a few facts which preceded

it. The Rayala Corporation Private Ltd., (hereinafter referred to as the 'Corporation') used to manufacture Halda typewriters and in that connection import materials through A. B. Atvidabergs, Sweden later known as Facit AB. M. R. Pratap was the Managing Director of the Corporation. Schussler, a Swedish national, has been export manager of Facit AB for many years. He became a director of the corporation in April 1966. On information received about violation of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (hereinafter referred to as the 'Act') the Enforcement Directorate raided the premises of the corporation at Madras on 20th and 21st December, 1966 and seized certain records. According to the information at the Directorate a plan had been hatched in August 1963, between Pratap, Schussler and one Jaggarao, General Manager of the Corporation, in Stockholm regarding purchase of raw materials by the corporation directly from a firm known as ASSAB instead of Facit AB to give effect to an arrangement already made by Pratap with ASSAB to over-invoice the value of the goods imported by the corporation by 40% of their true value thereof and the difference of 40% to be paid to the personal account of Pratap. The part played by Schussler was to help Pratap in opening an account in Svenska Bendela Banken, Sweden (hereinafter referred to as the bank) and to transfer the moneys lying to his credit to Facit AB and to have further deposits made to his personal account on account of over-invoicing by Assab. It is the case of the Directorate that Pratap had been acquiring large amounts of foreign exchange abroad by the above means from before 1963 and had retained the same abroad to put it beyond the reach of the Government of India. On August 25, 1967, the Enforcement Directorate sent a notice to the corporation and Pratap alleging violations of Sections 4 (1) and 9 of the Act calling upon them to show cause why adjudication proceedings under the Act should not be had. The notice was not only in respect of 88,913.09 Krs. but an additional sum making a total of 244,713.70 Sw. Krs. alleged to have been deposited in a bank account. This was followed by a further show cause notice dated November 4, 1967, from the Directorate to Pratap under Section 23 (3) of the Act for prosecuting him under the Act in respect of 88,913.09 Krs. On November 13, 1967, Pratap replied to the show cause notice dated August 25, 1967, denying the allegations. On November 15, 1967, the Directorate sent show cause notices to the other Directors of the Corporation and its Manager in continuation of the notice dated 25th August, asking them to show cause why adjudication proceedings should not be instituted. On 29th November, 1967, Pratap denied the allegations in the notice dated 4th November. On 20th January, 1968, notice was issued by the Director of Enforcement to the Corporation to show cause why it should not be prosecuted for the violation of the Act in respect of 88,913.09 Sw. Krs. On March 16, 1968, a revised adjudication show cause notice was issued by the Director of Enforcement to the Corporation and Pratap superseding the notice dated August 25, 1967, and informing them that they were prosecuting the Corporation and Pratap for 88,913.09 Sw. Krs. and adjudicating in respect of 1,55,801 Sw. Krs. On March 20, 1968, the Director of Enforcement filed a complaint against the Corporation and Pratap under Rule 132-A of the Defence of India Rules and Sections 4 (1), 4 (3) and 5 (1) (e) of the Act. The Corporation and Pratap filed Cr. M. Ps. 978 and 980 of 1968 for quashing the complaint. The High Court of Madras dismissed these petitions in October 1968. The appeals preferred to this Court on a certificate were disposed of in July 1969, quashing the complaint.

14. Schussler happened to be a passenger travelling by an aircraft from Singapore to Karachi via Palam in November 1968. When the aircraft touched at Palam for a short space of time engine trouble was noticed and all the passengers including Schussler were asked to spend the rest of the night at a hotel until the aircraft became airworthy once more. Before Schussler could board the plane the next day i.e., 27th November, 1968, he was taken to the Enforcement Directorate Office and interrogated. His departure from India was prohibited at the instance of the Director of Enforcement under the Foreigners Order of 1948. On November 30, 1968 Schussler was served with an adjudication notice dated November 15, 1967, under Section 23-C of the Act in his capacity as Director of the Corporation and the notice was described as in continuation of the previous adjudication notice dated 25th August, 1967, issued to the company. On 13th December, 1968, Schussler replied to the show cause notice denying the allegations. On January 21, 1968, Schussler was served with another adjudication notice similar to the notice of 16th March 1968 in his capacity as Director of the Corporation under Section 23C of the Act. On 30th January, 1969, Schussler denied the allegations in the last adjudication notice. On February 5, 1969, Schussler filed a Writ Petition in this Court for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus etc. On 17th February, 1969, when the said Writ Petition came up for hearing before this Court a statement was made on behalf of the respondents that a complaint C. C. No. 5438 of 1969, had already been filed in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, under Section 120-B, Indian Penal Code read with different sections of the Act. A suggestion was then made that Schussler might be permitted to leave India by giving security by way of a bank guarantee for Rs. 1,50,000/-. Ultimately, on April 21, 1969, when the Writ Petition came up for hearing before this Court a consent order was made and the respondent agreed to withdraw the order dated November 30, 1968 under the Foreigners Act on condition that Schussler should move for bail before the Chief Presidency Magistrate and then apply for permission to the Foreigners Registration Officer to leave India. The Chief Presidency Magistrate granted bail to Schussler on two sureties but his application for permission to the Foreigners Registration Officer was rejected on the objection raised by the Additional Director, Enforcement. On April 30, 1969 Schussler filed Writ Petition No. 144 of 1969 for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus directing the respondents, the Foreigners Regional Registration Officer and others, to allow him to leave the territory of India and for other reliefs. This Writ Petition came up for hearing before this Court along with the above Criminal Appeals Nos. 113 and 163 of 1969 on 8th September. On 10th September the Court ordered that the Foreigners Regional Registration Officer would permit him to leave India on condition of his giving a bank guarantee for 155,800 Sw. Krs. and on his undertaking to appear before the Chief Presidency Magistrate Madras or any other Magistrate to whom the complaint case might be transferred at the time of disposal.

15. The complaint in this case filed on February 16, 1969 by the Director of Enforcement recites that to the knowledge of Schussler Pratap had before August 1963, acquired foreign exchange amounting to 756,529 Sw. Krs. by getting Facit AB to over-invoice the goods imported by the Corporation by 40 per cent of their true value and that in August 1963 an agreement was arrived at in Stockholm between Pratap, Schussler and Jaggarao for the opening of an account in the name of Partap in the bank with the help of Schussler not only to transfer the moneys lying to the credit of Pratap in Facit AB but also to cause further deposits to be made in the said account from Assab on account of similar over-invoicing by Assab of the value of the goods to be bought by the Corporation. Support for the case of the Directorate that Pratap had been acquiring foreign exchange illicitly by the above device of over-invoicing and retaining the same abroad in a Swedish bank was said to be received as a result of the search of the premises of the Corporation in December 1966 and in particular the seizure of the letter dated March 25, 1965, from Assab to Schussler in reply to Schussler's letter (not in the record) to the Assab. Reference is made in the complaint to several invoices and other documents seized during the course of search allegedly lending support to the case of the Directorate. According to the complaint such device had been adopted by the Corporation and Pratap in respect of 14 invoices involving 88,913.09 Krs. which had been released and secured for import of goods but was actually not utilised for the purpose and kept back abroad credited to the personal account of Pratap thus violating the order made by the Central Government by Notification dated 25th September 1958 No. F. 1 (67) E/57 under Section 9 of the Act. This amount of 88,913.09 Sw. Krs. was said to have been acquired surreptitiously in the year 1964-65 by Pratap without the previous or general permission of the Reserve Bank of India and Pratap had failed to offer the same to the Reserve Bank or to any authorised dealer within one month from the date of the acquisition in terms of the notification mentioned. The complaint goes on to relate that the letter of 25th March, 1965 was brought by Schussler in person to India when he came here in November 1965. The complaint also alleges that in November 1965 Schussler agreed with Pratap "to continue to help him and accordingly did help him to accumulate foreign exchange illegally in the same manner. Thereafter even later when Schussler became Director of Rayala Corporation similar transactions were continued by him and Pratap." In September 1966 Schussler came to Madras bringing further details of the said account. The complaint winds up with the statement that Schussler and Pratap had agreed to commit illegal acts, namely, acquisition by Pratap of foreign exchange illicitly and retaining the same abroad without surrendering it to the Government of India and to defraud the Government of India of foreign exchange thereby contravening Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Act and Rule 132-A of the Defence of India Rules 1962 and further between August 1963 and 1966 Schussler and Pratap in pursuance of the said agreement did commit acts in contravention of the said sections of the Act and the said Rule 132-A and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with the said sections of the Act and the said rule.

16. The relevant provisions of the Act may now be noticed. Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Act as originally provided that:

"Except with the previous general or special permission of the Reserve Bank, no person other than an authorised dealer shall in India, and no person resident in India other than an authorised dealer shall outside India, buy or borrow from or sell or lend to, or exchange with, any person not being an authorised dealer, any foreign exchange."

The above was considered to be sufficient to attract the ban on acquisition of foreign exchange by other means e.g., by over-invoicing the price of goods imported as was alleged to have been done by the Corporation and Pratap. The section as amended with effect from April 1, 1965 contains the words "or otherwise acquire" in between the words "by" and "or borrow from" and the words "or otherwise transfer" in between the words "sell" and "or lend to". Rule 132-A of the Defence of India Rules was promulgated on January 21, 1964 and cured the lacuna in Sec. 4 (1) of the Act as from the said date. But this rule was omitted from the rules by a notification dated March 30, 1965 in view of the amendment of Section 4 (1) which became effective from April 1, 1965.

17. Section 4 (3) prohibits the use of any foreign exchange for a purpose other than for which it was given and runs as follows:

"Where any foreign exchange is acquired by any person other than an authorised dealer for any particular purpose, or where any person has been permitted conditionally to acquire foreign exchange, the said person shall not use the foreign exchange so acquired otherwise than for that purpose or as the case may be, fail to comply with any condition to which the permission granted to him is subject, and where any foreign exchange so acquired cannot be used or, as the case may be, the conditions cannot be complied with, the said person shall without delay sell the foreign exchange to an authorised dealer."

18. Section 5 contains certain restrictions on payments. The provision, Section 5 (1) (e), reads:

"Save as may be provided in and in accordance with any general or special exemption from the provisions of this subsection which may be granted conditionally by the Reserve Bank, no person in, or resident in, India shall—

(a) to (d) x x x x
(e) make any payment to or for the credit of any person as consideration for or in association with —

(i) the receipt by any person of a payment or the acquisition by any person of property outside India;

(ii) the creation or transfer in favour of any person of a right whether actual or contingent to receive a payment or acquire property outside India;

xx xx xx xx xx."

Section 9 reads:

"The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, order every person in, or resident in, India—

(a) who owns or holds such foreign exchange as may be specified in the notification, to offer it, or cause it to be offered for sale to the Reserve Bank on behalf of the Central Government or to such person as the Reserve Bank may authorise for the purpose, at such price as the Central Government may fix, being a price which is in the opinion of the Central Government not less than the market rate of the foreign exchange when it is offered for sale;

(b) who is entitled to assign any right to receive such foreign exchange as may be specified in the notification to transfer that right to the Reserve Bank on behalf of the Central Government on payment of such consideration therefor as the Central Government may fix:

Provided that the Central Government may by the said notification or another order exempt any persons or class of persons from the operation of such order:

Provided further that nothing in this section shall apply to any foreign exchange acquired by a person from an authorised dealer and retained by him with the permission of the Reserve Bank for any purpose."

19. The other provisions which are necessary to note are:

"Section 21 (1). No person shall enter into any contract or agreement which would directly or indirectly evade or avoid in any way the operation of any provision of this Act or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder.

Section 23 (1). If any person contravenes the provisions of Section 4, Section 5, Section 9, Section 10 or sub-section (2) of Section 12, Section 17, Section 18A or Section 18B or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder, he shall—

(a) be liable to such penalty not exceeding three times the value of the foreign exchange in respect of which the contravention has taken place, or five thousand rupees, whichever is more, as may be adjudicated by the Director of Enforcement in the manner hereinafter provided, or

(b) upon conviction by a Court, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

(1A) If any person contravenes any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule, direction or order made thereunder, for the contravention of which no penalty is expressly provided, he shall, upon conviction by a Court, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

(3) No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under sub-section (1) except upon a complaint in writing made by the Director of Enforcement, or

(aa) xx xx xx xx

(b) of any offence punishable under sub-section (1A) of this section or Section 23F, except upon complaint in writing made by the Director of Enforcement or any officer authorised in this behalf by the Central Government or the Reserve Bank by a general or special order:

Provided that where any such offence is the contravention of any of the provisions of this Act or any rule, direction or order made thereunder which prohibits the doing of an act without permission, no such complaint shall be made unless the person accused of the offence has been given an opportunity of showing that he had such permission.

23C. (1) If the person committing a contravention is a company, every person who, at the time the contravention was committed, was in charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the company as well as the company, shall be deemed to be guilty of the contravention and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall render any such person liable to punishment if he proves that the contravention took place without his knowledge or that he exercised all due diligence to prevent such contravention.

23D. (1) For the purpose of adjudicating under Clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Sec. 23 whether any person has committed a contravention, the Director of Enforcement shall hold an inquiry in the prescribed manner after giving that person a reasonable opportunity of being heard and if, on such inquiry, he is satisfied that the person has committed the contravention, he may impose such penalty as he thinks fit in accordance with the provisions of the said Section 23:

Provided that if, at any stage of the inquiry, the Director of Enforcement is of opinion that having regard to the circumstances of the case, the penalty which he is empowered to impose would not be adequate, he shall, instead of imposing any penalty himself, make a complaint in writing to the court.

(2) While holding an inquiry under this section, the Director of Enforcement shall have power to summon and enforce the attendance of any person to give evidence or to produce a document or any other thing which, in the opinion of the Director of Enforcement, may be useful for, or relevant to, the subject-matter of the inquiry:

Of the two agreements mentioned in the complaint the one arrived at in August 1963 was not unlawful. Section 4 (1) of the Act did not make it unlawful for anyone to acquire foreign exchange abroad. Any foreign exchange acquired by Pratap after January 21, 1964 when Rule 132-A of the Defence of India Rules was promulgated would be an unlawful acquisition but there could be no conspiracy under Section 120-A in respect of the agreement arrived at in August, 1963. In paragraph 7 of the complaint it was only Pratap who was charged with contravention of Section 9 of the Act in respect of 88,913-09 Sw. Krs. but the agreement of November, 1965 stands on a different footing. According to paragraph 8 of the complaint, Schussler agreed with Pratap at Madras in November, 1965 to help him to accumulate foreign exchange as before by getting the same credited to his account in the bank. This agreement would be one in violation of Sections 4 (1) and 9 of the Act. However any violation of Section 4 (1) or Section 9 or Section 4 (3) and Section 5 (1) (e)—the last two provisions being hardly applicable to the facts of the case—would be offences under the Act, in respect whereof the Director of Enforcement was competent to levy penalty under Section 23 (1) (a) of the Act after following the procedure for adjudication prescribed in Section 23D of the Act or alternatively by making a complaint in court under Section 23 (1) (b).

20. The recent judgment of this Court in Cr. As. 18 and 19/1969 dated 23-7-1969 (reported in AIR 1970 SC 494) arising out of the complaint in Case No. 8736 of 1968 has laid down that before a complaint can be filed under Sec. 23 (1) (b) the Director of Enforcement must not only initiate proceedings under Section 23 (1) (a) but proceed with the inquiry under Section 23-D (1) and form an opinion in course thereof that having regard to the circumstances of the case, the penalty which he was empowered to impose under Section 23 (1) (a) would not be adequate and that it was necessary to make a complaint in writing to the court instead of levying a penalty himself.

21. Mr. Sen arguing the appeal of Schussler contended that the Act was a complete Code containing provisions not only for punishment of violation of different sections of the Act but also a conspiracy to commit acts prohibited under the Act which might otherwise have been amenable to the jurisdiction under Sections 120-A and 120-B of the Indian Penal Code. In this connection, he referred to the provisions in Section 21 (1) of the Act. Under Section 21 (1) any agreement which could directly or indirectly evade in any way the operation of the provisions of the Act or any rule, direction or order made thereon was forbidden. The contravention of Section 21 (1) does not find a place in Section 23 (1) of the Act but it would be an offence covered by Section 23 (1A) and any contravention of Section 21 (1) would be punishable upon conviction by a court with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years or with fine or with both. The punishment is the same as the one prescribed under Section 23 (1) (b) and is greater than that laid down in Section 120-B (2) of the Indian Penal Code.

22. The learned Solicitor-General arguing the case of the respondents contended that Section 21 (1) did not touch a criminal conspiracy which is covered by Section 120-A of the Penal Code. I find myself unable to accept this argument. An agreement which can form the basis of a criminal conspiracy under Section 120-A may, inter alia be one to do or cause to be done an illegal act or an offence. Under Section 21 (1) of the Act any agreement which directly or indirectly evades in any way the operation of the Act etc. is forbidden. An agreement by two persons whereby one agrees to help the other by facilitating transfer of foreign exchange from a foreign exporter into the banking account of that other is an agreement the object whereof is not only the acquisition of foreign exchange but the retention of it abroad. This is clearly an agreement to evade the operation of the provisions of the Act relating to the illegal acquisition and retention of foreign exchange.

23. In my view, the Act is a complete Code with regard to the offences specified by it though it is not a self-sufficient Code with regard to the procedure to be followed irrespective of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is true that there are different sections in the Act regarding the power to search persons believed to have secreted any documents which will be useful or relevant to any proceeding under the Act (Section 19A), to arrest any person believed to be guilty of an offence punishable under the Act (19-B), to stop and search conveyances (19-C), to search premises (19-D), to examine persons during the course of any enquiry in connection with any offence (19-E), to summon persons to give evidence and produce documents in connection with enquiries (19-F), to retain custody of documents (19-G) which are not in consonance with the provisions of the Procedure Code. Section 24A contains a very special rule of evidence regarding the proof of documents seized and the evidentiary value thereof at complete variance with the Indian Evidence Act. Some of these powers are more drastic and are in addition to similar powers contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure. But so far as the violation of the different provisions of the Act, or rule or direction or order made thereunder are concerned, the Act is a complete Code including in its ambit a criminal conspiracy to acquire foreign exchange abroad illicitly and retaining the same abroad by reason of the provisions of Section 21 (1).

24. The judgment of this Court in Cr. As. Nos. 18 and 19 of 1969 (reported in AIR 1970 SC 494) lays down that a complaint under Section 23 (1) (b) cannot be launched before the Director of Enforcement has taken up the adjudication proceedings and made some inquiry in those proceedings and formed the opinion that it was necessary to have resort to the more drastic provision of conviction by a court as envisaged by Section 23 (1) (b).

25. No proceedings have been started either against Schussler or Pratap in pursuance of the notices dated 30th November, 1968 and 21st January, 1969. It would therefore appear that in respect of the substantive offences for contravention of the different sections of the Act, the Director of Enforcement cannot at present make a complaint as he has not followed the procedure laid down in Section 23D of the Act. It would therefore be absurd to allow him to file a complaint for violation of Section 21 (1) by making a charge under Section 120-B, I. P. C. when the overt acts alleged are contraventions of different provisions of the Act, punishable only under S. 23 (1) (b) by following the procedure indicated in Section 23-D. To allow the prosecution to be proceeded with at this stage would in effect be stultifying Sec. 23 (1) (b) by allowing the establishment of commission of offences punishable only by following a procedure not yet adopted by the Director of Enforcement.

26. Mr. Sen relied on the decision in Rex v. Barnett, 1951-2 KB 425 in aid of his contention that when a statute makes unlawful that which was lawful before and appoints a specific remedy that remedy and no other must be pursued. In that case a number of persons alleged to be dealers in scrap metal were charged on account of an indictment to the effect that they conspired together and with other persons unknown, to contravene the provisions of Section 1 of the Auctions (Building Agreements) Act, 1927, by being dealers, agreeing to offer and accept consideration as an inducement or reward for abstaining from bidding at sales by auction. What in effect had happened there was that the prosecution alleged that a number of persons had agreed to form a ring and in pursuance of that agreement they attended at auction sales where cable and other Ministry of Supply commodities were being sold and that after some representatives of the ring bid for and acquired goods on behalf of the ring they were reaucted and the profits shared by the ring in an agreed proportion. The forming of a ring in order to bid at an auction in the way indicated was not an offence at law up to the passing of the Act of 1927 and it was therefore submitted on behalf of the persons who had been convicted on account of indictment at the Central Criminal Court before the Court of Criminal Appeal that as the agreement was not an offence under the common law and only became one under the Act of 1927 the procedure laid down by the Act should be followed. The submission on behalf of the prosecution was that the indictment alleged was a conspiracy which was something different from the offences which the Act created. It was pointed out by the Court of Appeal that although it was possible to frame a charge alleging conspiracy to contravene this Act in any given set of circumstances, the court must ascertain what in fact was alleged. According to the court:

"In alleging the conspiracy to contravene the Act particulars are given, and those particulars are 'by, being dealers, agreeing to offer and accept consideration as an inducement or reward for abstaining from bidding at sales by auction.' This Court is of opinion that those particulars of this particular conspiracy describe in terms offences which the Act creates, or are substantially the same." The same can be said on the facts of this case. The particulars of conspiracy alleged in this case are offences which the Act has created. In my view the Director of Enforcement must first take up the adjudication proceedings, it being open to him in the course thereof to form an opinion that the penalty which he may impose will not be adequate having regard to the circumstances of the case, whereupon he can make a complaint in writing to the court. He can at the same time make a complaint about the agreement to evade the operation of the provisions of the Act calling for punishment under Section 23 (1A) of the Act. The agreement with overt acts alleged for proving a conspiracy under Section 120-B I. P. C. is in reality an offence under Section 23 (1A) read with Section 21 (1). The complaint does not lie at this stage and must be quashed.

27. In the result I would allow the appeals and quash the complaint made on 16th February, 1967.

28. HEGDE, J.: I have gone through the judgment just now read out by my esteemed colleague Mitter, J. I agree with him that these appeals should be allowed following the rule laid down by this Court in Criminal Appeals Nos. 18 and 19 of 1969, D/- 23-7-1969 (reported in AIR 1970 SC 494). In my opinion it is a fundamental principle of law that what cannot be done directly should not be permitted to be done indirectly.

29. From the facts and circumstances of the case I am satisfied that the complaint with which we are concerned is not a bona fide one. It has been filed with a collateral purpose viz. to justify the unlawful detention of Schussler, in this country. It may be noted that in the first complaint filed by the Director of Enforcement, the allegation was that the Rayala Corporation and its Managing Agent, Pratap had contravened the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act. When that complaint was pending trial, Schussler came to deplane in this country due to some engine trouble in the plane in which he was travelling. That occasion was availed to detain him illegally in this country. I am convinced that Schussler's detention in this country was unjustified.

30. Even if we accept all the facts stated in the complaint as correct, the same do not amount to an offence under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code. According to the complaint Pratap and Schussler "agreed to commit illegal acts namely acquisition by A-2 (Pratap) foreign exchange illicitly and retaining the same abroad without surrendering the same to the Government of India and also to defraud the Government of India of foreign exchange thereby contravening Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Rule 132-A of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1964 and further that between August, 1963 and August 1966 A-1 (Schussler) and A-2 (Pratap) in pursuance of the said agreement did commit acts in contravention of Sections 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and Rule 132-A of the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1964 and thereby committed offence punishable under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with Ss. 4 (3), 5 (1) (e) and 9 of the F. E. R. Act and Rule 132-A of Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1964".

31. The material allegations made in the complaint read as follows:

"The Rayala Corporation Private Limited is a private Limited Company with headquarters at Madras, manufacturing 'Halda' typewriters out of materials imported from abroad. Originally they were importing raw materials through one A. B. Atvidabergs, Sweden, now known as Facit AB. The first accused has been working as the Export Manager of that concern. The raw material supplied by Atvidabergs was over-invoiced at the instance of the 2nd accused and thereby foreign exchange was illicitly acquired in Swedish Kronor to the tune of 7,56,529 by the 2nd accused Pratap before August 1963 with the full knowledge of the 1st accused.

Later in August 1963 the 2nd accused and the General Manager of Rayala Corporation Mr. Jagga Rao went to Sweden. There Jagga Rao, 2nd accused and the first accused met together at Stockholm and agreed to a plan regarding purchase of certain raw materials viz. steel alloy sheet directly from M/s. Associated Swedish Steels AB, Sweden, also known as ASSAB, instead of purchasing the same from M/s. Atvidabergs. The 2nd accused told the first accused that henceforth he would buy on behalf of his company raw materials from ASSAB. He informed him of the arrangements made with ASSAB people to over-invoice the value of the goods by 40% of the true value and that he should be paid the difference of 40% on account of aforesaid over-invoicing to his personal account. He also told the 1st accused that since under the laws of India this acquisition by him was unlawful, it had got to be kept a secret, without any mention in the official correspondence of M/s. Rayala Corporation with the Swedish firm. He requested the first accused to help him in opening an account in Swenska Handles Banken, Sweden in order not only to transfer the money lying to his credit in Atvidabergs but also to have further deposits to his personal account from ASSAB on account of the difference between the actual value and the over-invoiced value. A-1 agreed to act as requested by the second accused, A-2 also made arrangements with ASSAB to intimate to A-1 the various amounts credited to A-2's account and asked A-1 to keep a watch over the correctness of the account, which A-1 agreed to do so. A-2 also asked A-1 to intimate to him the account position from time to time through unofficial channels or whenever A-1 comes to India periodically. In fact A-1 was coming to India periodically once in six months, since he was also a Director of a company called Facit Asia Ltd., in Madras. In pursuance of this conspiracy between the two accused the 2nd accused arranged with ASSAB to have the difference between the over-invoiced price and the actual price credited to the personal account of the second accused in Swenska Handles Banken and the statement of account sent to A-1."

32. These allegations merely make out that Schussler was an accessory after the fact and not that he was a conspirator. If a person agreed with a robber to receive the stolen property and arrange for its safe keeping he does not become a co-conspirator with the robber in the commission of the offence of robbery. On the facts alleged it is clear that Schussler had nothing to do either with the acquisition of foreign exchange by Pratap or in the matter of Pratap's failure to repatriate the same to this country. The accusation against him is that he provided facility for its retention in Sweden.

33. In the result I allow these appeals and acquit the appellant.

ORDER

34. In accordance with the opinion of the majority these appeals are dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Writ Petns. Nos. 222, 300 and 298 of 1969, D/- 10-2-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 14, 19, 31 and 32 — Company and its shareholders — Banking Company taken over by State — Infringement of fundamental rights of company and shareholders — Distinction pointed out — Tests indicated — Companies Act (1956) Ss. 34, 41 — Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Preamble — Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Ordinance (8 of 1969), Preamble.

A Company registered under the Companies Act is a legal person, separate and distinct from its individual members. Property of the Company is not the property of the shareholders. A shareholder has merely an interest in the Company arising under its Articles of Association, measured by a sum of money for the purpose of liability, and by a share in the profit. Again a director of a Company is merely its agent for the purpose of management. The holder of a deposit account in a company is its creditor he is not the owner of any specific fund lying with the Company. A shareholder, a depositor or a director may not therefore be entitled to move a petition for infringement of the rights of the Company, unless by the action impugned by him, his rights are also infringed. (Para 13)

By petition praying for a writ against infringement of fundamental rights, except in a case where the petition is for a writ of habeas corpus and probably for infringement of the guarantee under Articles 17, 23 and 24, a shareholder may seek relief in respect of his own rights and not of others. A measure, executive or legislative may impair the right of the shareholders as well as of the Company. In such a case jurisdiction of the Court to grant relief to shareholders cannot be denied. The test in determining whether the shareholder's right is impaired is not formal; it is essentially qualitative. (Para 14)

Where petitioner who claims to be a shareholder, director and holder of deposit and current accounts with the Bank claims that by Act 22 of 1969 and by the Ordinance 8 of 1969 the rights guaranteed to him under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution are impaired, that the Act and the Ordinance are without legislative competence in that they interfere with the guarantee of freedom of trade and are not made in the public interest; that the Parliament had no legislative competence to enact the Act and the President had no power to promulgate the Ordinance, because the subject matter of the Act and the Ordinance is (partially at least) within the State List; and that the Act and Ordinance are invalid because they vest the undertaking of the named banks in the new corporations without a public purpose and without setting out principles and the basis for determination and payment of a just equivalent for the property expropriated, and that in consequence of the hostile discrimination practised by the State the value of his investment in the shares is substantially reduced, his right to receive dividend from his investment has ceased, and he has suffered great financial loss, he is deprived of the right as a shareholder to carry on business through the agency of the Company, and that in respect of the deposits the obligations of the corresponding new banks not of his choice are substituted without his consent, the petition is maintainable. AIR 1954 SC 119 and AIR 1951 SC 41, Rel. on; AIR 1963 SC 1811 and AIR 1965 SC 40, Distinguished. (Para 15)

Where the petitioner does not seek to enforce the guarantee of freedom of trade and commerce in Art. 301 but claims that in enacting the Act the Parliament has violated a constitutional restriction imposed by Part XIII on its legislative power and that in determining the extent to which his fundamental freedoms are impaired, the statute which the Parliament is incompetent to enact must be ignored, the petition cannot be thrown out because guarantee of freedom of trade does not occur in Part III. (Para 18)

Assuming that he is not entitled to set up his right to enforce his guaranteed rights as a director, the petition will not still fail. (Para 19)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 123 — President's power to issue Ordinance — Satisfaction of President — Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Ordinance (8 of 1969), Preamble — Question of its validity being academical not decided (Obiter).

Obiter (Per majority) — Under the Constitution, the President being the constitutional head, normally acts in all matters including the promulgation of an Ordinance on the advice of his Council of Ministers. The Ordinance is promulgated in the name of the President and in a constitutional sense on his satisfaction; it is in truth promulgated on the advice of his Council of Ministers and on their satisfaction. One of the requirements for promulgation of an Ordinance is that the President is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action. The satisfaction relates to the existence of circumstances, as well as to the necessity to take immediate action on account of those circumstances. Determination by the President of the existence of circumstances and the necessity to take immediate action on which the satisfaction depends, is not declared final.

Since the Ordinance 8 of 1969 has been repealed by Act 22 of 1969, the question of its validity is now academic. Since the Act, was found to be invalid the Supreme Court declined to express opinion in this case on the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court to examine whether the condition relating to satisfaction of the President was fulfilled.

(Para 27)

(C) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Ss. 5, 15 (2) (e) — Act is not ultra vires the powers of Parliament — Only 'banking' business taken over — Named Banks reserved right to carry on non-banking business, which was not taken over — Scope of the meaning of 'Banking' in Entry 45 in List I — Banking Regulation Act (1949), S. 5(b) — Acquisition of undertaking is covered by 'Property' in Entry 42 in List III, which includes not only assets but also liabilities and obligations of a going concern — Constitution of India, Sch. VII List I,

Entry 45, List II Entry 26, List III Entry 42.

The expression "banking" is not defined in any Indian Statute except in the Banking Regulation Act, 1949. By S. 5(b) of that Act "Banking" means "the accepting for the purpose of lending or investment of deposits of money from the public repayable on demand or otherwise, and withdrawable by cheque, draft or otherwise." The definition does not include other commercial activities which a banking institution may engage in. In modern times in India as elsewhere, to attract business, banking establishments render, and compete in rendering, a variety of miscellaneous services for their constituents. If the test for determining what "Banking" means in the constitutional Entry 45, List I, Sch. VII is any commercial activity which bankers at a given time engage in, great obscurity will be introduced in the content of that expression. The coverage of constitutional entry in a Federal Constitution which carves out a field of legislation must depend upon a more satisfactory basis. The legislative entry in List I of the Seventh Schedule is "Banking" and not "Banker" or "Banks". To include within the connotation of the expression "Banking" in Entry 45 List I, power to legislate in respect of all commercial activities which a banker by the custom of bankers or authority of law engages in, would result in re-writing the Constitution. Investment of power to legislate on a designated topic covers all matters incidental to the topic. A legislative entry being expressed in a broad designation indicating the contour of plenary power must receive a meaning conducive to the widest amplitude, subject however to limitations inherent in the federal scheme which distributes legislative power between the Union and the constituent units. But the field of "Banking" cannot be extended to include trading activities which not being incidental to banking encroach upon the substance of the entry 26 "trade and commerce" in List II. But this does not lend any practical support to the argument that Act 22 of 1969, to the extent it makes provisions in respect of the undertaking of the named banks relating to non-banking business, is ultra vires the Parliament. In the first instance there is no evidence that the named banks were before July, 19, 1969, carrying on non-banking business distinct and independent of the banking business, or that the banks held distinct assets for any non-banking business, apart from the assets of the banking business. Again by Act 22 of 1969 the corresponding banks are entitled to engage in business of banking and non-banking which the named banks were engaged in or competent to engage in prior to July 19, 1969, and the named banks are entitled to engage in business other than banking as defined in S. 5(b) of the Banking Regulation Act, but not the business of banking. By enacting that the corresponding new banks may carry on business specified in S. 6(1) of the Banking Regulation Act and that then named banks shall not carry on banking business as defined in S. 5(b) of that Act, the impugned Act did not encroach upon any entry in the State List. By S. 15 (2) (e) of the impugned Act the named banks are expressly reserved the right to carry on business other than banking, and it is not claimed that thereby there is any encroachment upon the State List. Exercise of the power to legislate for acquisition of the undertaking of the named banks also does not trespass upon the State list. (Paras 33, 37, 38, 39)

Power to legislate for acquisition of property is exercisable only under Entry 42 of List III, and not as an incident of the power to legislate in respect of a specific head of legislation in any of the three lists. AIR 1954 SC 251, Ref.

Under that entry "property" can be compulsorily acquired. In its normal connotation "property" means the "highest right a man can have to anything, being that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels which does not depend on another's courtesy: it includes ownership, estates and interests in corporeal things, and also rights such as trade marks copyrights, patents and even rights in personam capable of transfer or transmission, such as debts; and signifies a beneficial right to or a thing considered as having a money value, especially with reference to transfer or succession, and to their capacity of being injured. The expression "undertaking" in S. 4 of Act 22 of 1969 clearly means a going concern with all its rights, liabilities and assets as distinct from the various rights and assets which compose it. Power to legislate for acquisition of "property" in Entry 42 List III therefore includes the power to legislate for acquisition of an undertaking. The expression "property" in Entry 42 List III has a wide connotation, and it includes not only assets, but organisation, liabilities and obligations of a going concern as a unit. A law may, therefore, be enacted for compulsory acquisition of an undertaking as defined in S. 5 of Act 22 of 1969. (Paras 40, 41)

The contention that the Parliament is incompetent to legislate for acquisition of the named banks in so far as it relates to assets of the non-banking business fails for two reasons — (i) that there is no evidence that the named banks held any assets for any distinct non-banking business and (ii) that the acquisition is not shown to fall within an entry in List II of the Seventh Schedule. (Para 42)

(D) Constitution of India, Arts. 19(1)(f) and 31(2) — Articles are not mutually exclusive — Acquisition must satisfy requirements of both the Articles, namely, there must be public purpose and reasonableness of restriction—Enquiry into reasonableness is not excluded. AIR 1950 SC 27 and AIR 1951 SC 270 and AIR 1955 SC 41 and AIR 1960 SC 1203 and (1967) 2 SCR 949, Overruled.

Per Majority, Ray, J. contra:

Clauses (1) and (2) of Art. 31 subordinate the exercise of the power of the State to the basic concept of the rule of law. Deprivation of a person of his property and compulsory acquisition may be effectuated by the authority of law. The law limiting the authority of the State must be within the competence of the Legislature enacting it, and not violative of a constitutional prohibition, nor impairing the guarantee of a fundamental right. A person may be deprived of his property by authority of a statute only if it does not impair the fundamental rights guaranteed to him. AIR 1960 SC 1080 and AIR 1963 SC 864 and AIR 1962 SC 821, Ref. (Para 48)

Protection of the guarantee is ensured by declaring that a person may be deprived of his property by authority of law; Article 31 (1) and that private property may be compulsorily acquired for a public purpose and by the "authority of a law" containing provisions fixing or providing for determination and payment of compensation; Art. 31(2). Exercise of either power by State action results in abridgement total or partial — of the right to property of the individual. Article 19(1)(f) is a positive declaration in the widest terms of the right to acquire, hold and dispose of property, subject to restrictions (which may assume the form of limitations or complete prohibition) imposed by law in the interests of the general public. The guarantee under Art. 19(1)(f) does not protect merely an abstract right to property; it extends to concrete rights to property as well: AIR 1963 SC 864, Referred. (Para 44)

The constitutional scheme declares the right to property of the individual and then delimits it by two different provisions: Article 19(5) and cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 31. Limitations under Art. 19(5) and Art. 31 are not generically different, for the law authorizing the exercise of the power to take the property of an individual for a public purpose or to ensure the well-being of the community, and the law authorising the imposition of reasonable restrictions under Art. 19(5) are intended to advance the larger public interest. It is true that the guarantee against deprivation and compulsory acquisition operates in favour of all persons, citizens as well as non-citizens, whereas the positive declaration of the right to property guarantees the right to citizens. But a wider operation of the guarantee under Art. 31 does not alter the true character of the right it protects. Article 19(5) and Article 31 (1) and (2) operate to delimit the exercise of the right to hold property. (Para 45)

Under the Constitution, protection against impairment of the guarantee of fundamental rights is determined by the nature of the right, the interest of the aggrieved party and the degree of harm resulting from the State action. Impairment of the right of the individual and not the object of the State in taking the impugned action, is the measure of protection. To concentrate merely on power of the State and the object of the State action in exercising that power is therefore to ignore the true intent of the article. (Para 46)

Examining the problem not merely in semantics but in the broader and more appropriate context of the constitutional scheme which aims at affording the individual the fullest protection of his basic rights and on that foundation to erect a structure of a truly democratic polity, the conclusion is inevitable that the validity of the State action must be adjudged in the light of its operation upon the rights of the individual and groups of individuals in all their dimensions. Article 19 (1) (f) and Art. 31 (2) are not mutually exclusive. AIR 1950 SC 27 and AIR 1951 SC 270 and AIR 1955 SC 41 and AIR

The theory that the object and form of the State action determine the extent of protection which the aggrieved party may claim is not consistent with the constitutional scheme. Each freedom has different dimensions. (Para 57)

Limitations prescribed for ensuring due exercise of the authority of the State to deprive a person of his property and of the power to compulsorily acquire his property, are, therefore, specific classes of limitations on the right to property falling within Art. 19(1)(f). Property may be compulsorily acquired only for a public purpose. Where the law provides for compulsory acquisition of property for a public purpose it may be presumed that the acquisition or the law relating thereto imposes a reasonable restriction in the interest of the general public. If there is no public purpose to sustain compulsory acquisition, the law violates Art. 31 (2). If the acquisition is for a public purpose, substantive reasonableness of the restriction which includes deprivation may, unless otherwise established, be presumed, but enquiry into reasonableness of the procedural provisions will not be excluded. For instance if a tribunal is authorised by an Act to determine compensation for property compulsorily acquired, without hearing the owner of the property, the Act would be liable to be struck down under Article 19(1)(f). (Paras 58, 60)

Article 31 (2) is not a complete code relating to infringement of the right to property by compulsory acquisition, and the validity of the law is liable to be tested in the light of the reasonableness of the restrictions, imposed thereby. The challenge to the validity of the provision for acquisition is not liable to be tested only on the ground of non-compliance with Art. 31 (2). Article 31 (2) requires that property must be acquired for a public purpose and that it must be acquired under a law with characteristics set out in that article. Formal compliance with the conditions under Art. 31 (2) is not sufficient to negative the protection of the guarantee of the right to property. Acquisition must be under the authority of a law and the expression "law" means a law which is within the competence of the Legislature, and does not impair the guarantee of the rights in Part III. Articles 19 (1) (f) and 31 (2) are not mutually exclusive. (Para 62)

If property is compulsorily acquired for a public purpose, and the law satisfies the requirements of Articles 31 (2) and 31 (2A), the Court may readily presume that by the acquisition a reasonable restriction on the exercise of the right to hold property is impressed in the interests of the general public. But that is not because the claim to plead infringement of the fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (f) does not avail the owner; it is because the acquisition imposes a permissible restriction on the right of the owner of the property compulsorily acquired. (Para 63)

The validity of law which authorises deprivation of property and a law which authorises compulsory acquisition of property for a public purpose must be adjudged by the application of the same tests. (Para 64)

Per Ray, J. Contra: Art. 19 (1) (f) does not have any application to acquisition or requisition of property for a public purpose under authority of a law which provides for compensation as mentioned in Article 31. In regard to property rights the State generally has power to take away property and justify such deprivation on the ground of reasonable restriction in the interest of the general public, but in case of deprivation of property by acquisition or requisition the Constitution has conferred power when the law passed provides compensation for the property acquired by the State. Therefore the acquisition or requisition for public purpose is a restriction recognised by the Constitution in regard to property rights. (Paras 156, 158)

(E) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969) Ss. 5, 6, 15 — Taking over by State, Banking business with assets etc. of named banks — Non-banking business not taken over but left to be carried out by named banks without name and assets — Restrictions held not reasonable within meaning of the first limb of Art. 19 (6) — Reasonableness of restrictions in respect of non-monopolies rights can be inquired into — (Constitution of India Art. 19(6)).

Per Majority, Ray J. Contra:

By S. 4 the entire undertaking of each named bank vests in the union, and the Bank is prohibited from engaging in the business of banking in India and even in a foreign country, except where by the laws of a foreign country banking business owned or controlled by Government cannot be carried on, the named bank will be entitled to continue the business in that country. The business which the named banks carried on was (i) the business of banking as defined in S. 5(b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and business incidental thereto; and (ii) other business which by virtue of the Act 22 of 1969 they were not prohibited from carrying on, though not part of or incidental to the business of banking. By Act 22 of 1969 the named banks cannot engage in business of banking as defined in Section 5(b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, but may engage in other forms of business. By the Act, however, the entire undertaking of each named bank is vested in the new corporation set up with a name identical with the name of that bank, and authorised to carry on banking business previously carried on by the named bank, and its managerial and other staff is transferred to the corresponding new bank. The newly constituted corresponding bank is entitled to engage in business described in S. 6(1) of the Banking Regulation Act, and for that purpose to utilise the assets, goodwill and business connections of the existing bank.

The named banks are declared entitled to engage in business other than banking; but they have not assets with which that business may be carried on, and since they are prohibited from carrying on banking business, by virtue of S. 7 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, they cannot, use in their title the words "Bank" or "Banking", and even engage in non-banking business in their names. A business organization deprived of its entire assets and undertaking, its managerial and other staff, its premises, and even its name, even if it has a theoretical right to carry on non-banking business, would not be able to do so, especially when even the fraction of the value of its undertaking made payable to it as compensation, is not made immediately payable to it. (Paras 65, 66)

Validity of the provisions of the Act which transfer the undertaking of the named banks and prohibit those banks from carrying on business of banking and practically prohibit them from carrying on non-banking business falls to be considered in the light of Art. 19(1)(f) and Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. These rights are not absolute; they are subject to the restrictions prescribed in the appropriate clauses of Art. 19. (Para 67)

By virtue of new clause (6) of Art. 19 that the validity of a law creating a State monopoly which indirectly impinges on any other right cannot be challenged on the ground that it imposes restrictions which are not reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public. But if the law contains other incidental provisions which do not constitute an essential and integral part of the monopoly created by it the validity of those provisions is liable to be tested under the first part of Art. 19 (6). If they directly impair any other fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1), the validity of those provisions will be tested by reference to the corresponding clauses of Art. 19. AIR 1954 SC 728 and AIR 1963 SC 1047, Rel. on; AIR 1969 SC 1081 and AIR 1970 SC 129 and AIR 1969 SC 1100, Ref.

Clause (6) of Art. 19 is however not restricted to laws creating State monopolies, and the rule enunciated in Akadasi Padhan's case, (1963) Supp 2 SCR 691 applies to all laws relating to the carrying on by the State of any trade, business, industry or service. By Art. 298 the State is authorised to carry on trade which is competitive, or excludes the citizens from that trade completely or partially. The basic and essential provisions of law which are "integrally and essentially connected" with the carrying on of a trade by the State will not be exposed to the challenge that they impair the guarantee under Art. 19 (1) (g), whether the citizens are excluded completely or partially from carrying on that trade, or the trade is competitive. Imposition of restrictions which are incidental or subsidiary to the carrying on of trade by the State whether to the exclusion of the citizens or not must, however, satisfy the test of the main limb. (Para 70)

The law which prohibits after July 19, 1969, the named banks from carrying on banking business, being a necessary incident of the right assumed by the Union, is not liable to be challenged because of Art. 19 (6) (ii) in so far as it affects the right to carry on business. There is no satisfactory proof in support of the plea that the enactment of Act 22 of 1969 was not in the larger interest of the nation, but to serve political ends. Granting that the objectives laid down by the Reserve Bank were being carried out, it cannot be said that the Act was enacted in abuse of legislative power. (Para 71)

The Parliament has under Entry 45 List I the power to legislate in respect of banking and other commercial activities of the named banks necessarily incidental thereto; it has the power to legislate for acquiring the undertaking of the named banks under Entry 42, List III. The Supreme Court has the power to strike down a law on the ground of want of authority, but the Court will not sit in appeal over the policy of the Parliament in enacting a law. The Court cannot find fault with the Act merely on the ground that it is inadvisable to take over the undertaking of banks which, it is said by thrift and efficient management had set up an impressive and efficient business organization serving large sectors of industry. (Para 72)

Where restrictions imposed upon the carrying on of a business are so stringent that the business cannot in practice be carried on, the Court will regard the imposition of the restrictions as unreasonable.

If compensation paid is in such a form that it is not immediately available for restarting any business, declaration of the right to carry on business other than banking becomes an empty formality, when the entire undertaking of the named banks is transferred to and vests in the new banks together with the premises and the names of the banks, and the named banks are deprived of the services of its administrative and other staff.

The restriction imposed upon the right of the named banks to carry on "non-banking" business is, plainly unreasonable. The Act which while theoretically declaring the right of the named banks to carry on "non-banking" business makes it impossible in a commercial sense for the banks to carry on any business. AIR 1954 SC 119 and AIR 1952 SC 115, Rel. on. (Paras 76, 77)

Per Ray, J. Contra:— The disputed businesses are the legitimate businesses of a banking company as mentioned in Section 6 (1) of the 1949 Act and are comprised in the undertaking of the bank and Article 19 (1) (f) is not attracted in case of acquisition or requisition of property dealt with by Article 31 (2). Article 19 (6) confers power on the State to have a valid monopoly business. Section 15 (2) of the 1969 Act allows the existing banks to carry on business other than banking. If as a result of acquisition, the bank will complain of lack of immediate resources to carry on these businesses the Act provides compensation and the existing banks will devise ways and means for carrying on the business. Constitutionality of the Act cannot be impeached on the ground of lack of immediate resources to carry on business. In the present case, the acquisition is not unconstitutional and the bank is free to carry on all business other than banking. It cannot be suggested that after compensation has been provided for, the State will have to provide moneys to enable the existing banks to carry on these businesses. That would be asking for something beyond the limits of the Constitution. If the entire undertaking of a banking company is taken by way of acquisition the assets cannot be separated to distinguish those belonging to banking business from others belonging to non-banking business because assets are not in fact divided on any such basis. Furthermore, that would be striking at the root of acquisition of the entire undertaking. It would be strange to hold in the teeth of express provisions in the Act of 1969 permitting the banks to carry on business other than banking that the same will amount to a prohibition on the bank to carry on these businesses. A permissive provision allowing the banks to carry on these businesses other than banking does not become unreasonable. If that provision was not there the business could be carried on and the argument would not be available at all. The express making of the provision obviously for greater safety cannot change the position. (Para 180)

(F) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969) Ss. 2 (d), 15 (2) — Constitution of India Art. 14 — Class legislation — Validity — Tests for valid classification — Selection of Banks for being taken over — No opinion whether there is reasonable connection between differentia and object of Act, expressed in absence of data — Selection not struck down on ground of hostile discrimination — But S. 15 (2) struck down on ground that there was hostile discrimination against named banks in that they were prohibited from carrying on banking business and also in practice from carrying on non-banking business.

Per Majority, Ray J. Contra:—

Article 14 forbids class legislation, but not reasonable classification in making laws. The test of permissible classification lies in two cumulative conditions (i) classification under the Act must be founded on an intelligible differentia distinguishing persons, transactions or things grouped together from others left out of the groups and (ii) the differentia has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act; there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act. AIR 1951 SC 41 and AIR 1951 SC 318 and AIR 1952 SC 75 and AIR 1955 SC 191 and AIR 1958 SC 538 and AIR 1964 SC 1633, Ref. (Paras 78, 79)

By the definition of "existing bank" in S. 2(d) of the Act, fourteen named banks in the first Schedule are, out of many commercial banks engaged in the business of banking, selected for special treatment, in that the undertaking of the named banks is taken over, they are prevented from carrying on in India and abroad banking business and the Act operates in practice to prevent those banks engaging in business other than banking. (Para 80)

By reason of the transfer of the undertaking of the named banks, the interests of the banks and the share-holders are vitally affected. Investment in bank shares is regarded in India, especially in the shares of larger banks, as a safe investment on attractive terms with a steady return and fluidity of conversion. Since the taking over of the undertaking, there has resulted a steep fall in the ruling market quotations of the shares of a majority of the named banks. Dividend may no longer be distributed, for the banks have no liquid assets and they are not engaged in any commercial activity. It may take many years before the compensation payable to the banks may be finalised, and be available to the named banks for utilising it in any commercial venture open to the banks under the Act. Under the scheme of determination of compensation, the total payable to the banks will be a fraction of the value of their net assets, and that compensation will not be available to the banks immediately. The ground for selection of the 14 banks is that these banks held deposits, as shown in the return as on the last Friday of June 1969 furnished to the Reserve Bank under S. 27 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, of not less than rupees fifty crores. (Para 82)

The object of Act 22 of 1969 is according to the long title to provide for the acquisition and transfer of the undertakings of certain banking companies in order to serve better the needs of development of the economy in conformity with the national policy and objectives and for matters connected, therewith or incidental thereto. The national policy may be taken to be the policy contained in the directive principles of State policy, especially Arts. 38 and 39 of the Constitution. For achieving the needs of a developing economy in conformity with the national policy and objectives, the resources of all the banks—foreign as well as Indian—are inadequate. Of the total deposits with commercial banks 27 per cent are with the State Bank of India and its subsidiaries; the named commercial banks of which the undertaking is taken over hold approximately 56 per cent of the deposits. The remaining 17 per cent of the deposits are shared by the foreign banks and the other scheduled and non-scheduled commercial banks. 83 per cent of the total resources may obviously not meet wholly or even substantially the needs of development of the economy. (Para 83)

But in the absence of any reliable data, the Supreme Court did not think it necessary to express an opinion on the question whether selection of the undertaking of some out of many banking institutions, for compulsory acquisition, is liable to be struck down as hostile discrimination, on the ground that there is no reasonable relation between the differentia and the object of the Act which cannot be substantially served even by the acquisition of the undertakings of all the banks out of which the selection is made. (Para 84)

But the fourteen named banks are prohibited from carrying on banking business, a disability for which there is no rational explanation. Banks other than the named banks may carry on banking business in India and abroad, new banks may be floated for carrying on banking business, but the named banks are prohibited from carrying on banking business. When after acquiring the assets, undertaking, organization, goodwill and the names of the named banks they are prohibited from carrying on banking business, whereas other banks Indian as well as foreign are permitted to carry on banking business, a flagrantly hostile discrimination is practised. Section 15(2) of the Act is, therefore, liable to be struck down. Again, in considering the validity of S. 15 (2) (e) in its relation to the guarantee of freedom to carry on business other than banking the named banks are also, though theoretically competent in substance prohibited from carrying on non-banking business. The restriction is unreasonable, it must also be held that the guarantee of equality is impaired by preventing the named banks carrying on the non-banking business. (Para 87)

Per Ray, J.:—Where the legislature finds that public need is great and these 14 banks will be able to supply that need for the development of national economy classification is reasonable and not arbitrary and is based on practical grounds and consideration supported by the large resources of over Rs. 50 crores of each of these 14 banks and their administration and management. Therefore the acquisition of the undertakings does not offend Article 14 because of intelligible differentia and its rational relation to the object to be achieved by the Act of 1969 and it follows that these banks cannot therefore be allowed to carry on banking business to nullify the very object of the Act. (Para 169)

(G) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Sections 4, 5, 68, Sch. II — Constitution of India, Article 31 (2) — Compensation must be just compensation — Method of valuation of undertaking must be reasonable — Several methods available — One adopted resulting in less compensation — Court will not interfere — Court will interfere if no method is laid down or if method laid down is not reasonable — Assets include good-will and it has to be valued — Unexpired term of lease has to be valued — Valuation of cash and secret reserve — Held that the Act adopted irrelevant principle by omitting important items — Act struck down as contravening Art. 31 (2).

Existence of a public purpose and provision for giving compensation for compulsory acquisition of property of an individual are conditions of the exercise of the power to acquire private property. If either condition be absent, the guarantee under Article 31 (2) is impaired, and the law providing for acquisition will be invalid. But jurisdiction of the Court to question the law on the ground that compensation provided thereby is not adequate is expressly excluded. (Para 88)

The law providing for acquisition must again either fix the amount of compensation or specify the principles on which, and the manner in which, the compensation is to be determined and given. The law which does not ensure the guarantee will, except where the grievance only is that the compensation provided by the law is inadequate, be declared void.

(Para 90)

Article 31 (2) before and after it was amended guaranteed a right to compensation for compulsory acquisition of property and by giving to the owner, for compulsory acquisition of his property, compensation which was illusory, or determined by the application of principles which were irrelevant, the constitutional guarantee of compensation was not complied with.

(Para 99)

The principle specified by the law for determination of compensation is beyond the pale of challenge, if it is relevant to the determination of compensation and is a recognized principle applicable in the determination of compensation for property compulsorily acquired and the principle is appropriate in determining the value of the class of property sought to be acquired. Case law Ref.

(Para 100)

The Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969) is liable to be struck down as it fails to provide to the expropriated banks compensation determined according to relevant principles. Section 4 of the Act transfers the undertaking of every named bank to and vests it in the corresponding new bank. Section 6 (1) provides for payment of compensation for acquisition of the undertaking, and the compensation is to be determined in accordance with the principles specified in the Second Schedule. Section 6 (2) then provides that though separate valuations are made in respect of the several matters specified in Sch. II of the Act, the amount of compensation shall be deemed to be a single compensation. Compensation being the equivalent in terms of money of the property compulsorily acquired, the principle for determination of compensation is intended to award to the expropriated owner the value of the property acquired. The scheme of valuation of property recognizes several principles or methods for determining the value to be paid as compensation to the owner for loss of his property: there are different methods applicable to different classes of property in the determination of the value to be paid as recompense for loss of his property. A method appropriate to the determination of value of one class of property may be wholly inappropriate in determining the value of another class of property. If an appropriate method or principle for determination of compensation is applied, the fact that by the application of another principle which is also appropriate a different value is reached, the Court will not be justified in entertaining the contention that out of the two appropriate methods, one more generous to the owner should have been applied by the Legislature.

But a principle specified by the Parliament for determining compensation of the property to be acquired is not conclusive. If that view be accepted, the Parliament will be invested with a charter of arbitrariness and by abuse of legislative process the constitutional guarantee of the right to compensation may be severely impaired. The principle specified must be appropriate to the determination of compensation for the particular class of property sought to be acquired. If several principles are appropriate and one is selected for determination of the value of the property to be acquired, selection of that principle to the exclusion of other principles is not open to challenge, for the selection must be left to the wisdom of the Parliament.

(Important methods of determining compensation indicated.) (Paras 103, 104)

The expression "property" in Article 31 (2) as in Entry 42 of List III is wide enough to include an undertaking, and an undertaking subject to obligation may be compulsorily acquired under a law made in exercise of power under Entry 42, List III. But when an undertaking is acquired as a unit, the principles for determination of compensation must be relevant and also appropriate to the acquisition of the entire undertaking. In determining the appropriate rate of the net profits the return from gilt-edged securities may, unless it is otherwise found unsuitable, be adopted.

(Para 105)

Compensation to be determined under the Act is for acquisition of the undertaking, but the Act instead of providing for valuing the entire undertaking as a unit provides for determining the value of some only of the components, which constitute the undertaking, and reduced by the liabilities. It also provides different methods of determining compensation in respect of each such component. This method for determination of compensation is prima facie not a method relevant to the determination of compensation for acquisition of the undertaking. Aggregate of the value of components is not necessarily the value of the entirety of a unit of property acquired, especially when the property is a going concern, with an organized business. On that ground alone, acquisition of the undertaking is liable to be declared invalid, for it impairs the constitutional guarantee for payment of compensation for acquisition of property, of law. Even if it be assumed that the aggregate value of the different components will be equal to the value of the undertaking of the named bank as a going concern the principles specified, do not give a true recompense to the banks for the loss of the undertaking. In determining the compensation for undertaking — (i) certain important classes of assets are omitted from the heads (a) to (h); in Part I, Sch. II, (ii) the method specified for valuation of lands and buildings is not relevant to determination of compensation, and the value determined thereby in certain circumstances is illusory as compensation; and (iii) the principle for determination of the aggregate value of liabilities is also irrelevant.

The undertaking of a banking company taken over as a going concern would ordinarily include the goodwill and the value of the unexpired period of long-term leases in the prevailing conditions in urban areas. But goodwill of the banks is not one of the items in the assets in the Schedule, and in Cl. (f) though provision is made for including a part of the premium paid in respect of leasehold properties proportionate to the unexpired period, no value of the leasehold interest for the unexpired period is given.

Goodwill of a business is an intangible asset; it is the whole advantage of the reputation and connections formed with the customers together with the circumstances making the connection durable. It is that component of the total value of the undertaking which is attributable to the ability of the concern to earn profits over a course of years or in excess of normal amounts because of its reputation, location and other features. Goodwill of an undertaking therefore is the value of the attraction to customers arising from the name, and reputation for skill, integrity, efficient business management, or efficient service. Business of banking thrives on its reputation for probity of its dealings, efficiency of the service it provides, courtesy and promptness of the staff, and above all the confidence it inspires among the customers for the safety of the funds entrusted. Existence of these powers and exercise thereof by the Reserve Bank may and do ensure to a certain extent the safety of the funds entrusted to the Banks. But the business which a bank attracts still depends upon the confidence which the depositor reposes in the management. A banking establishment has a goodwill, and the value of the goodwill of a bank is not insignificant and cannot be ignored in valuing the undertaking as a going concern.

There is no provision made for payment of compensation for the unexpired period of the leases. Having regard to the present day conditions it is clear that with rent control on leases operating in various States the unexpired period of leases has also a substantial value.

(Para 110)

The value determined by excluding important components of the undertaking, such as the goodwill and value of the unexpired period of leases, will not be compensation for the undertaking. (Para 111)

Under Clause (a) of Part I — Assets — the amount of cash in hand and with the Reserve Bank and the State Bank of India (including foreign currency notes which shall be converted at the market rate of exchange) are liable to be included. Cash in hand is not an item which is capable of being compulsorily acquired, not because it is not property, but because taking over the cash and providing for acquisition thereof, compensation payable at some future date amounts to levying a "forced loan" in the guise of acquisition. AIR 1952 SC 252 & AIR 1953 SC 328, Ref.

(No opinion however was expressed on the question whether in adopting the method of determination of compensation, by aggregating the value of assets which constitute the undertaking, the rule that cash and choses in action are incapable of compulsory acquisition may be applied.)

(Para 112)

Provision for valuing land or building does not lay down a relevant principle of valuation of buildings. (Para 113)

Again in determining the compensation under clause (e), the annual rent is reduced by several outgoings and the balance is capitalized. The vice of items (v) and (vi) of clause (1) or Explanation 2 is that they provide for deduction of a capital charge out of the annual rental which according to no rational system of valuing property by capitalization of the rental method is admissible. The assets would show a minus figure as value of the building, and on the liabilities side the entire amount of mortgage liability would be debited. The method provided by the Act permits the annual interest on the amount of the encumbrance to be deducted before capitalization, and the capitalized value is again reduced by the amount of encumbrance. In effect, a single debt is, in determining the compensation debited twice, first, in computing the value of assets and again, in computing the liabilities. (Para 114)

Item (e) does not specify a relevant principle for determination of compensation for lands and buildings. (Para 118)

A banking company is entitled to withhold from the balance-sheet its secret reserves but there must be some account in respect of these secret reserves. The expression "books of the Bank" may not be equated with the balance-sheets or the books of account only. Omission to value 'secret reserves' in valuing assets, is not a defect. (Para 120)

The expression "liabilities existing at the commencement of the Act" includes all debts due or to become due. The present value of the contingent liabilities at the date of the acquisition and not the total contingent liabilities may on any rational system of accounting be debited against the aggregate value of the assets. For instance, if a banking company is liable to pay to its employees gratuity, the present value of the liability to pay gratuity at the date of the acquisition made on actuarial calculation may alone be debited and not the total face value of the liability. (Para 121)

The Constitution guarantees a right to compensation an equivalent in money of the property compulsorily acquired. That is the basic guarantee. The law must therefore provide compensation, and for determining compensation relevant principles must be specified; if the principles are not relevant the ultimate value determined is not compensation. (Para 122)

The Constitution guarantees that the expropriated owner must be given the value of his property, i.e., what may be regarded reasonably as compensation for loss of the property and that such compensation should not be illusory and not reached by the application of irrelevant principles. The determination of compensation to be paid for the acquisition of an undertaking as a unit after awarding compensation for some items which go to make up the undertaking and omitting important items amounts to adopting an irrelevant principle in the determination of the value of the undertaking, and does not furnish compensation to the expropriated owner. (Para 123)

By the method adopted for valuation of the undertaking, important items of assets have been excluded, and principles some of which are irrelevant and some not recognised are adopted. What is determined by the adoption of the method adopted in Sch. II does not award to the named banks compensation for loss of their undertaking. The ultimate result substantially impairs the guarantee of compensation, and on that account the Act is liable to be struck down. (Para 127)

Section 4 of the Act is a kingpin in the mechanism of the Act. Sections 4, 5 and 6 read with Sch. II provide for the statutory transfer and vesting of the undertaking of the named banks in the corresponding new banks and prescribe the method of determining compensation for expropriation of the undertaking. Those provisions are void as they impair the fundamental guarantee under Article 31 (2). Sections 4, 5 and 6 and Sch. II are not severable from the rest of the Act. The Act must, in its entirety, be declared void and action taken or deemed to be taken in exercise of the powers under the Act also must be declared unauthorized. (Para 132)

Per Ray, J., contra:—

If the quantum of compensation fixed by the legislature is not liable to be challenged before the Court on the ground that it is not a just equivalent, the principles specified for determination of compensation will also not be open to challenge on the plea that the compensation determined by the application of these principles is not a just equivalent. The right declared by the Constitution guarantees compensation before a person is compulsorily expropriated of the property for public purpose. Principles may be challenged on the ground that they are not relevant to the property acquired or the time of acquisition of the property but not on the plea that the principles are not relevant to the determination of a fair or just equivalent of the property acquired. A challenge to the statute that a principle specified by it does not provide or award a just equivalent will be a clear violation of the Constitutional declaration that inadequacy of compensation provided for is not justiciable. (Para 201)

When principles are laid down in a statute for determination of compensation all that the Court will see is whether those principles are relevant for determination of compensation. The relevancy is to compensation and not to adequacy. It cannot be held that when the relevant principle set out is ascertained value, the petitioner could yet contend that market value should be the principle. It would really be going into adequacy of compensation by preferring the merits of the principle to those of the other for the oblique purpose of arriving at what is suggested to be just equivalent. It is unthinkable that the legislature after the Constitution Fourth Amendment Act intended that the word 'compensation' would mean just equivalent when the legislature put a bar on challenge to the adequacy of compensation. Just compensation cannot be inadequate and anything which is impeached as unjust or unfair is impinging on adequacy. Therefore, just equivalent cannot be the criterion in finding out whether the principles are relevant to compensation or whether compensation is illusory. If the amount fixed is not obviously and shockingly illusory or the principles are relevant to determination of compensation, namely, they are principles in relation to property acquired or are principles relevant to the time of acquisition of property there is no infraction of Article 31 (2) and the owner cannot impeach it on the ground of 'just equivalent' of the property acquired.

If it be suggested that no compensation has been provided for any particular asset that will be questioning adequacy of compensation because compensation has been provided for the entire undertaking. The compensation provided for the undertaking cannot be called illusory because in the present case principles have been laid down. (Para 209)

Whether or not the goodwill has a saleable value, this question of fact is to be determined in each case. Upon sale of a business there may be restriction as to user of the name of the business sold. That is another aspect of sale of goodwill of a business. The 14 banks carried on business under licence by reason of Section 22 of the Act of 1949. The concept of sale in such a situation is unreal. Furthermore, the possibility of nationalisation of undertakings like banks cannot be ruled out. Possibility of nationalisation will affect the value of goodwill. In the case of compulsory acquisition it is of grave doubt whether goodwill passes to the acquiring authority. No facts have been pleaded in the petition to show as to what goodwill the bank has. Goodwill is not shown in assets. In the present case the names of the 14 banks and the corresponding new banks are not the same and it cannot therefore be said that any goodwill has been transferred. The 14 banks will be able to carry on business other than banking in their names. Again under the Act compensation is being paid for the assets and secret reserves which are provided for by depreciating the value of assets will also be taken into account. Any challenge as to compensation for goodwill falls within the area of adequacy. (Para 217)

The principles which have been set out in the 1969 Act are relevant to the determination of compensation. When it is said that principles will have to be relevant to the compensation, the relevancy will not be as to adequacy of compensation but to the property acquired and the time of acquisition. It may be that adoption of one principle may confer lesser sum of money than another but that will not be a ground for saying that the principle is not relevant. (Para 220)

(H) Constitution of India, Art. 31 (2) — Compensation otherwise than in form of money i. e. in form of bond — Valuation of compensation — Principles laid down. (Obiter)

(Obiter) — Compensation may be provided under a statute, otherwise than in the form of money; it may be given as equivalent of money, e.g., a bond, but in judging whether the law provides for compensation, the money value at the date of expropriation of what is given as compensation, must be considered. If the rate of interest compared with the ruling commercial rate is low, it will reduce the present value of the bond. The Constitution guarantees a right to compensation an equivalent of the property expropriated and the right to compensation cannot be converted into a loan on terms which do not fairly compare with the prevailing commercial terms. If the statute in providing for compensation devises a scheme for payment of compensation by giving it in the form of bonds, and the present value of what is determined to be given is thereby substantially reduced, the statute impairs the guarantee of compensation. A scheme for payment of compensation may take many forms. If the present value of what is given reasonably approximates to what is determined as compensation according to the principles provided by the statute, no fault may be found. But if the law seeks to convert the compensation determined into a forced loan, or to give compensation in the form of a bond of which the market value at the date of expropriation does not approximate the amount determined as compensation, the Court must consider whether what is given is in truth compensation which is inadequate, or that it is not compensation at all. By giving to the expropriated owner compensation in bonds of the face-value of the amount determined maturing after many years and carrying a certain rate of interest, the constitutional guarantee is not necessarily complied with. If the market value of the bonds is not approximately equal to the face value, the expropriated owner may raise a grievance that the guarantee under Article 31 (2) is impaired. (Paras 125, 126)

(I) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Sections 1 (2), 29 — Retrospective operation of Act — Does not violate Article 31 (2) of the Constitution — (Constitution of India, Art. 31 (2) — (C. P. C. (1908), Preamble — Retrospective operation of expropriation statutes).

Per Ray, J.: There can be retrospective legislation affecting acquisition of property and such retrospective operation and validation of actions with regard to acquisition does not offend Article 31 (2) of the Constitution. The Act of 1969 which is retrospective in operation does not violate Article 31 (2) because it speaks of authority of a law without any words of limitation or restriction as to law being in force at the time. (Para 146)

(J) Words and Phrases — "Undertaking" — Meaning of — Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Section 5.

Per Ray, J.:— By the word 'undertaking' is meant the entire organisation. Company, whether it has a plant or whether it has an organisation, is considered as one whole unit and the entire business of the going concern is embraced within the word 'undertaking'. The word 'undertaking' is used in the Indian Electricity Act, the Air Corporation Act, 1953, the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920 (Sections 3, 4, 6 and 7), the State Bank Subsidiaries Banks Act 1959 (Section 10 (1)) and the Banking Regulation Act, 1949 (Section 36 AE (1)). (Para 175)

(K) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Section 11 — Section does not suffer from excessive delegation — (Constitution of India, Articles 14, 245).

Per Ray, J.:—

Section 11 of the 1969 Act does not suffer from the vice of excessive delegation; there are guidelines for reaching the objectives set out in the Preamble of the Act. The Act of 1969 contains enough guidance. First, the Government may give directions only in regard to policy involving public interest; secondly, directions can only be given by the Central Government and no one else; thirdly, these directions can only be given by the Central Government after consultation with the Governor of the Reserve Bank; fourthly, directions given by the Government are in regard to matters involving public interest which means that this is objective and subject to judicial scrutiny and both the Central Government and the Governor of Reserve Bank are high authorities. (Paras 181, 182)

(L) Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act (22 of 1969), Preamble — Article 305 of Constitution applies and not Articles 301 and 302 — (Constitution of India, Articles 305, 301, 302).

Per Ray, J.:—

Article 305 directly applies to a law relating to banking and all businesses necessarily incidental to it carried on by the State to the complete or partial exclusion of 14 banks. Article 302 can have no application in such a case. An individual cannot complain of violation of Article 301. Article 302 is an enabling provision and it has to be read in relation to Article 301. Acquisition of property by itself cannot violate Article 301 which relates to free trade, commerce throughout India. The object of acquisition is that the State shall carry on business to the exclusion, complete or partial of the 14 banks. (Paras 186, 187)

(M) Constitution of India, Article 123 — Satisfaction of President is subjective — Validity of Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Ordinance (8 of 1969) cannot be challenged.

Per Ray, J.:—

The interpretation of Article 123 is to be made first on the language of the Article and secondly the context in which that power is reposed in the President. When power is conferred on the President to promulgate Ordinances the satisfaction of the President is subjective.

(Para 227)

The only way in which the exercise of power by the President can be challenged is by establishing bad faith or mala fide and corrupt motive. Bad faith will destroy any action. Such bad faith will be a matter to be established by a party propounding bad faith. He should affirm the state of facts. He is not only to allege the same but also to prove it. (Para 233)

The validity of the Ordinance of 1969 cannot be challenged by contending that the satisfaction of the President under Article 123 was open to challenge in a Court of law. (Para 223)

The fact that Parliament would be in session on 21st July, 1969 and that the Ordinance was promulgated on Saturday, 19th July, 1969, was not indicative of the fact that the Ordinance was not promulgated legitimately but in a hasty manner and the President should have waited. If the President has power when the House is not in session he can exercise that power when he is satisfied that there is an emergency to take immediate action. That emergency may take place even a short time before Parliament goes into session. It will depend upon the circumstances which were before the President. The fact that the Ordinance was passed shortly before the Parliament session began does not show any mala fide. It is not for the Union to furnish facts and information which were before President because first such information might be a State secret, secondly, it was for the party who alleged non-existence of circumstances to prove the same and thirdly, the State was not called upon to meet any case of mala fide. (Para 234)

SHAH, J. (For Majority): Rustom Cavasji Cooper—hereinafter called 'the petitioner'—holds shares in the Central Bank of India Ltd., the Bank of Baroda Ltd., the Union Bank of India Ltd., and the Bank of India Ltd., and has accounts—current and fixed deposit—with those Banks: he is also a Director of the Central Bank of India Ltd. By these petitions he claims a declaration that the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Ordinance 8 of 1969 promulgated on July 19, 1969, and the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act 22 of 1969 which replaced the Ordinance with certain modifications impair his rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution, and are on that account invalid.

2. In India there was till 1949, no comprehensive legislation governing banking business and banking institutions. The Central Legislature enacted the Banking Companies Act 10 of 1949 (later called "The Banking Regulation Act") to consolidate and amend the law relating to certain matters concerning banking. By Section 5 (b) of that Act, "banking" was defined as meaning "the accepting for the purpose of lending or investment, of deposits of money from the public, repayable on demand or otherwise"; and by Section 5 (c) a "banking company" meant "any company which transacts the business of banking in India". By Section 6 it was enacted that in addition to the business of banking as defined in Section 5 (b) a banking company may engage in one or more of the forms of business specified in clauses (a) to (o) of sub-s. (1). By sub-s. (2) of Section 6 banking companies were prohibited from engaging "in any form of business other than those referred to in sub-section (1)". The Act applied to commercial banks, and enacted provisions, amongst others, relating to prohibition of employment of managing agents and restrictions on certain forms of employment; minimum paid up capital and reserves; regulation of voting rights of shareholders and election of Board of Directors; prohibition of charge on unpaid capital; restriction on payment of dividend; maintenance of a percentage of assets; return of unclaimed deposits; and accounts and balance-sheets. It also enacted provisions authorising the Reserve Bank to issue directions to and for trial of proceedings against the Banks and for speedy disposal of winding up proceedings of Banks.

3. The Banking Regulation Act was amended by Act 58 of 1968, to give effect to the policy of "social control" over commercial banks. Act 58 of 1968 provided for reconstitution of the Boards of Directors of commercial banks with a Chairman who had practical experience of the working of a Bank or financial, economic and business administration, and with a membership not less than 51 per cent consisting of persons having special knowledge or practical experience in accountancy, agriculture and rural economy, banking, co-operation, economics, finance, law and small-scale industry. The Act also provided that no loans shall be granted to any Director of the Bank or to any concern in which he is interested as Managing Director, Manager, employee, or guarantor or partner or in which he holds substantial interest. The Reserve Bank was invested with power to give directions to commercial banks and to appoint directors or observers in the interest of depositors or proper management of the Banking Companies, or in the interest of Banking policy (which expression was defined by Section 5 (ca)) as "any policy which is specified from time to time by the Reserve Bank in the interest of the banking system or in the interest of monetary stability or sound economic growth, having due regard to the interests of the depositors, volume of deposits and other resources of the bank and the need for equitable allocation and the efficient use of these deposits and resources". The Reserve Bank was also invested with power to remove managerial and other personnel from office and to appoint additional directors, and to issue directions prohibiting certain activities in relation to Banking Companies. The Central Government was given power to acquire the business of any Bank if it failed repeatedly to comply with any direction issued by the Reserve Bank under certain specific provision in regard to any matter concerning the affairs of the Bank and if acquisition of the Bank was considered necessary in the interest of the depositors or in the interest of the banking policy or for the better provision of credit generally or of credit to any particular section of the community or in a particular area.

4. During the last two decades the Reserve Bank reorganised the banking structure. A number of units which accounted for a small section of the banking business were amalgamated under directions of the Reserve Bank. The total number of commercial banking institutions was reduced from 566 in 1951 to 89 in 1969 — 73 scheduled and 16 non-scheduled.

5. In exercise of the authority conferred by the State Bank of India Act 23 of 1955 the undertaking of the former Imperial Bank of India was taken over by a public corporation controlled by the Central Government. The State Bank took over seven subsidiaries under authority conferred by Act 38 of 1959. There were in June 1969, 14 commercial banks operating in India each having deposits exceeding Rs. 50 crores. The following is an analysis of the commercial banking structure in India in June 1969:

	No. of Banks	No. of Offices	Deposits (in Crores)	Credit (in Crores)
State Bank of India	1	1,566	948	967
Subsidiaries of State Bank of India	7	888	291	219
Indian Scheduled Commercial Banks (each with deposit exceeding Rs. 50 Crores)	14	4,130	2,632	1,829
Banks incorporated in Foreign Countries	15*	130	478	385*
Other Indian Scheduled Banks	36	1,324	296	197
Non-scheduled Commercial Banks	16	216	28	16

*Only 13 were operating.

6. Late in the afternoon of July 19, 1969 (which was a Saturday) the Vice-President (acting as President) promulgated, in exercise of the power conferred by clause (1) of Article 123 of the Constitution, Ordinance 8 of 1969 transferring to and vesting the undertaking of 14 named commercial banks in corresponding new banks set up under the Ordinance. The long title of the Ordinance read as follows:

"An Ordinance to provide for the acquisition and transfer of the undertakings of certain banking companies in order to serve better the needs of development of the economy in conformity with national policy and objectives and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto."

By Section 2 "banking company" was defined as not including a foreign company within the meaning of Section 591 of the Companies Act, 1956. An "existing bank" was defined by Section 2 (b) as meaning "a banking company specified in column 1 of the First Schedule, being a company the deposits of which, as shown in the return as on the last Friday of June, 1969, furnished to the Reserve Bank under Section 27 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, were not less than rupees fifty crores". In the Schedule to the Act were included the names of fourteen commercial banks:

- (1) The Central Bank of India Ltd.
- (2) The Bank of India Ltd.
- (3) The Punjab National Bank Ltd.
- (4) The Bank of Baroda Ltd.
- (5) The United Commercial Bank Ltd.
- (6) Canara Bank Ltd.
- (7) United Bank of India Ltd.
- (8) Dena Bank Ltd.
- (9) Syndicate Bank Ltd.
- (10) The Union Bank of India Ltd.
- (11) Allahabad Bank Ltd.
- (12) The Indian Bank Ltd.
- (13) The Bank of Maharashtra Ltd.
- (14) The Indian Overseas Bank Ltd.

These banks are hereinafter referred to as the named banks.

A "corresponding new bank" was defined in relation to an existing bank as meaning "the body corporate specified against such bank in column 2 of the First Schedule". By Section 2 (g) it was provided that the words and expressions used in the Ordinance and not defined, but defined in the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, had the meaning respectively assigned to them in that Act. Thereby the definitions of "banking" and "banking company" in Section 5 (b) and Section 5 (c) of the Banking Regulation Act were incorporated in the Ordinance.

7. The principal provisions of the Ordinance were. — (1) Corporations styled in the ordinance “corresponding new banks” shall be established, each such corporation having paid-up capital equal to the paid-up capital of the named bank in relation to which it is a corresponding new bank. The entire capital of the new bank shall stand vested in the Central Government. The corresponding new banks shall be authorised to carry on and transact the business of banking as defined in clause (b) of Section 5 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and also to engage in one or more forms of business specified in sub-section (1) of Section 6 of that Act. The Chairman of the named bank holding office immediately before the commencement of the Ordinance shall be the Custodian of the corresponding new bank. The general superintendence and direction of the affairs and business of a corresponding bank shall be vested in the Custodian, who shall be the chief executive officer of that bank.

(2) The undertaking within or without India of every named bank on the commencement of the Ordinance shall stand transferred to and vested in the corresponding new bank. The expression “undertaking” shall include all assets, rights, powers, authorities and privileges, and all property, movable and immovable, cash balances, reserve fund investments and all other rights and interests arising out of such property as are immediately before the commencement of the Ordinance in the ownership, possession, power or control of the named bank in relation to the undertaking, including all books of accounts, registers, records and all other documents of whatever nature relating thereto. It shall also include all borrowings, liabilities and obligations of whatever kind then subsisting of the named bank in relation to the undertaking. If according to the law of any foreign country, the provisions of the Ordinance by themselves do not effectively transfer or vest any asset or liability situated in that country in the corresponding new bank the affairs of the named bank in relation to such asset or liability shall stand entrusted to the chief executive officer of the corresponding new bank with authority to take steps to wind up the affairs of that bank. All contracts, deeds, bonds, agreements, powers of attorney, grants of legal representation and other instruments of whatever nature subsisting or having effect immediately before the commencement of the Ordinance, and to which the named bank is a party or which are in favour of the named bank shall be of as full force and effect against or in favour of the corresponding new bank, and be enforced or acted upon as fully and effectively as if in the place of the named bank the corresponding new bank is a party thereto or as if they are issued in favour of the corresponding new bank. In pending suits or other proceedings by or against the named bank, the corresponding new bank shall be substituted in those suits or proceedings. Any reference to any named bank in any law other than the Ordinance, or in any contract or other instrument shall be construed as a reference to the corresponding new bank in relation to it.

(3) The Central Government shall have power to frame a scheme for carrying out the provisions of the Act, and for that purpose to make provisions for the corresponding new banks relating to capital structure, constitution of the Board of Directors, manner of payment of compensation to the shareholders, and matters incidental, consequential and supplemental. Corresponding new banks shall also be guided in the discharge of their functions by such directions in regard to matters of policy involving public interest as the Central Government may give.

(4) On the commencement of the Ordinance, every person holding office as Chairman, Managing Director, or other Director of a named bank, shall be deemed to have vacated office, and all officers and other employees of a named bank shall become officers or other employees of the corresponding new banks. Every named bank shall stand dissolved on such date as the Central Government may by notification in that behalf appoint.

(5) The Central Government shall give compensation to the named banks determined according to the principles set out in Second Schedule, that is to say,—

(a) where the amount of compensation can be fixed by agreement, it shall be determined in accordance with such agreement,

(b) where no such agreement can be reached, the Central Government shall refer the matter to the Tribunal within a period of three months from the date on which the Central Government and the existing bank fail to reach an agreement regarding the amount of compensation.

Compensation so determined shall be paid to each named bank in marketable Central Government securities. For the purpose of determining compensation, Tribunals shall be set up by the Central Government with certain powers of a Civil Court.

(6) The Central Government shall have power to make such orders not inconsistent with the provisions of the Ordinance which may be necessary for the purpose of removing defects.

8. Under the Ordinance the entire undertaking of every named commercial bank was taken over by the corresponding new bank, and all assets and contractual rights and all obligations to which the named bank was subject stood transferred to the corresponding new bank. The Chairman and the Directors of the Banks vacated their respective offices. To the named banks survived only the right to receive compensation to be determined in the manner prescribed. Compensation, unless settled by agreement, was to be determined by the Tribunal, and was to be given in marketable Government securities. The entire business of each named bank was accordingly taken over, its Chief Executive Officer ceased to hold office and assumed the office of Custodian of the corresponding new bank, its directors vacated office; and the services of the administrative and other staff stood transferred to the corresponding new bank. The named bank had thereafter no assets, no business, and no managerial, administrative or other staff; it was incompetent to use the word "Bank" in its name, because of the provisions contained in Section 7 (1) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and was liable to be dissolved by a notification of the Central Government.

9. Petitions challenging the competence of the President to promulgate the Ordinance were lodged in this Court on July 21, 1969. But before the petitions could be heard by this Court, a Bill to enact provisions relating to acquisition and transfer of undertakings of the existing banks was introduced in the Parliament, and was enacted on August 9, 1969, as "The Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act 22 of 1969". The long title of the Act was in terms identical with the long title of the Ordinance. By sub-section (1) of Sec. 27 of the Act, Ordinance 8 of 1969 was repealed. In the First Schedule were included the names of the 14 banks named in the Ordinance in juxtaposition with the names of the corresponding new banks.

By sub-section (2) of Section 1, the Act came into force on July 19, 1969, and the undertaking of every named bank was deemed, with effect from that date, to have vested in the corresponding new bank. By Section 27 (2), (3) and (4) actions taken or things done under the Ordinance inconsistent with the provisions of the Act were not to be of any force or effect, and no right, privilege, obligation or liability was to be deemed to have been acquired, accrued or incurred under the Ordinance.

10. The general scheme of the Ordinance relating to the transfer to and vesting in the corresponding new bank of the undertaking of each named bank, payment of compensation, and management of the corresponding new bank, remained unaltered. The Act departed from the Ordinance in certain matters:

(1) Under the Act the named banks remain in existence for certain purposes and they are not liable to be dissolved by order of the Government. If under the laws in force in any foreign country it is not permissible for a Banking Company, owned or controlled by Government, to carry on the business of banking in that country, the assets, rights, powers, authorities and privileges and property, movable and immovable, cash balances and investments of any named bank operating in that country shall not vest in the corresponding new bank. The directors of the named banks shall remain in office and may register transfers or transmission of shares; arrive at an agreement about the amount of compensation payable under the Act or appearing before the Tribunal for obtaining a determination as to the amount of compensation; distribute to shareholders the amount of compensation received by the Bank under the Act for the acquisition of its undertaking; carrying on the business of banking in any country outside India if under the law in force in that country any bank, owned or controlled by Government, is prohibited from carrying on the business of banking there; and carry on any business other than the business of banking. The Central Government has power to authorise the corresponding new bank to advance the amount required by the named bank in connection with the functions which the directors may perform. Reference to any named bank in any law, or in any contract or other instrument shall be construed as a reference to the corresponding new bank in relation to it, but not in cases where the named bank may carry on any business and in relation to that business.

(2) Principles for determination of compensation and the manner of payment are modified. Interim compensation may be paid to a named bank if it agrees to distribute to its shareholders in accordance with their rights and interests. A major change is made in the principles for determining compensation set out in Sch. II. By Explanation I to Cl. (e) of Part I of Sch. II, the value of any land or buildings to be taken into account in valuing the assets is to be the market value of the land or buildings, but where such market value exceeds the "ascertained value", that "ascertained value" is to be taken into account, and by Explanation II the "ascertained value" of any building wholly occupied on the date of the commencement of the Act is to be twelve times the amount of the annual rent or the rent for which the building may reasonably be expected to be let out from year to year, and reduced by one-sixth of the amount of the rent on account of maintenance and repairs, annual premium paid to insure the building against risk of damage or destruction, annual charge, if any, on the building, ground rent, interest on any mortgage or other capital charge on the building, interest on borrowed capital if the building has been acquired, constructed, repaired, renewed or re-constructed with borrowed capital, and the sums paid on account of land revenue or other taxes in respect of such building.

(3) The Central Government may re-constitute any corresponding new bank into two or more corporations; amalgamate any corresponding new bank or with another banking institution; transfer the whole or any part of the undertaking of a corresponding new bank to any other banking institution; or transfer the whole or any part of the undertaking of any other banking institution to a corresponding new bank. The Board of Directors of the corresponding new banks are to consist of representatives of the depositors of the corresponding new bank, employees of such banks, farmers, workers and artisans to be elected in the prescribed manner and of other persons as the Central Government may appoint.

(4) The profits remaining after making provision for bad and doubtful debts, depreciation in assets, contributions to staff and superannuation funds and all other matters for which provision is necessary under any law, the corresponding new bank shall transfer the balance of profits to the Central Government.

(5) Provision of law relating to winding up of corporations do not apply to the corresponding new banks, and a corresponding new bank may be ordered to be liquidated only by the order of the Central Government.

11. The petitioner challenges the validity of the Ordinance and the Act on the following principal grounds:

I. The Ordinance promulgated in exercise of the power under Article 123 of the Constitution was invalid, because the condition precedent to the exercise of the power did not exist;

II. That in enacting the Act the Parliament encroached upon the State List in the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution, and to that extent the Act is outside the legislative competence of the Parliament;

III. That by enactment of the Act, fundamental rights of the petitioner guaranteed by the Constitution under Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 31 (2) are impaired;

IV. That by the Act the guarantee of freedom of trade under Article 301 is violated; and

V. That in any event retrospective operation given to Act 22 of 1969 is ineffective, since there was no valid Ordinance in existence. The provision in the Act retrospectively validating infringement of the fundamental rights of citizens was not within the competence of the Parliament. That sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 11 and Section 26 are invalid.

12. The Attorney-General contended that the petitions are not maintainable, because no fundamental right of the petitioner is directly impaired by the enactment of the Ordinance and the Act, or by any action taken thereunder. He submitted that the petitioner who claims to be a shareholder, director and holder of deposit and current accounts with the Banks is not the owner of the property of the undertaking taken over by the corresponding new banks and is on that account incompetent to maintain the petitions complaining that the rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution were impaired.

13. A company registered under the Companies Act is a legal person, separate and distinct from its individual members. Property of the Company is not the property of the shareholders. A shareholder has merely an interest in the Company arising under its Articles of Association, measured by a sum of money for the purpose of liability, and by a share in the profit. Again a director of a Company is merely its agent for the purpose of management. The holder of a deposit account in a Company is its creditor: he is not the owner of any specific fund lying with the Company. A shareholder, a depositor or a director may not therefore be entitled to move a petition for infringement of the rights of the Company, unless by the action impugned by him, his rights are also infringed.

14. By a petition praying for a writ against infringement of fundamental rights, except in a case where the petition is for a writ of habeas corpus and probably for infringement of the guarantees under Articles 17, 23 and 24, the petitioner may seek relief in respect of his own rights and not of others. The shareholder of a Company, it is true, is not the owner of its assets; he has merely a right to participate in the profits of the Company subject to the contract contained in the Articles of Association. But on that account the petitions will not fail. A measure executive or legislative may impair the rights of the Company alone, and not of its shareholders; it may impair the rights of the shareholders and not of the Company: it may impair the rights of the shareholders as well as of the Company. Jurisdiction of the Court to grant relief cannot be denied, when by State action the rights of the individual shareholder are impaired, if that action impairs the rights of the Company as well. The test in determining whether the shareholder's right is impaired is not formal; it is essentially qualitative; if the State action impairs the right of the shareholders as well as of the Company, the Court will not, concentrating merely upon the technical operation of the action, deny itself jurisdiction to grant relief.

15. The petitioner claims that by the Act and by the Ordinance the rights guaranteed to him under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution are impaired. He says that the Act and the Ordinance are without legislative competence in that they interfere with the guarantee of freedom of trade and are not made in the public interest; that the Parliament had no legislative competence to enact the Act and the President had no power to promulgate the Ordinance, because the subject-matter of the Act and the Ordinance is (partially at least) within the State List; and that the Act and Ordinance are invalid because they vest the undertaking of the named banks in the new corporations without a public purpose and without setting out principles and the basis for determination and payment of a just equivalent for the property expropriated. He says that in consequence of the hostile discrimination practised by the State the value of his investment in the shares is substantially reduced, his right to receive dividend from his investment has ceased, and he has suffered great financial loss, he is deprived of the rights as a shareholder to carry on business through the agency of the Company, and that in respect of the deposits the obligations of the corresponding new banks not of his choice are substituted without his consent.

16. In Dwarkadas Shrinivas v. The Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd., 1954 SCR 674 = (AIR 1954 SC 119) this Court held that a preference shareholder of a company is competent to maintain a suit challenging the validity of the "Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Company (Emergency Provisions) Ordinance" 2 of 1950 (which was later replaced by Act 27 of 1950), which deprived the Company of its property without payment of compensation within the meaning of Article 31. Mahajan, J., observed:

"The plaintiff and the other preference shareholders are in imminent danger of sustaining direct injury as a result of the enforcement of this Ordinance, the direct injury being the amount of the call that they are called upon to pay and the consequent forfeiture of their shares."

Das, J., in the same case examined the matter in some detail and observed at p. 722 (of SCR) = (at pp. 134-135 of AIR):

"The impugned Ordinance, * * * directly affects the preference shareholders by imposing on them this liability, or the risk of it, and gives them a sufficient interest to challenge the validity of the Ordinance, * * * Certainly he can show that the Ordinance under which these persons have been appointed was beyond the legislative competence of the authority which made it or that the Ordinance had not been duly promulgated. If he can, with a view to destroy the locus standi of the persons who have made the call raise the question of the invalidity of the Ordinance * * *, I can see no valid reason why, for the self-same purpose, he should not be permitted to challenge the validity of the Ordinance on the ground of its unconstitutionality for the breach of the fundamental rights of the company or of other persons." A similar view was also taken in Chiranjit Lal Chowduri v. Union of India, 1950 SCR 869 = (AIR 1951 SC 41) by Mukherjea, J., at p. 899 (of SCR) = (at pp. 52-53 of AIR), by Fazl Ali, J., at p. 876 (of SCR) = (at p. 44 of AIR), by Patanjali Shastri, J., at p. 889 (of SCR) = (at p. 49 of AIR) and by Das, J., at p. 922 (of SCR) = (at pp. 61-62 of AIR).

17. The judgment of this Court in State Trading Corporation of India Ltd. v. Commercial Tax Officer, Visakhapatnam, (1964) 4 SCR 99 = (AIR 1963 SC 1811) has no bearing on this question. In that case in a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution the State Trading Corporation challenged the infringement of its right to hold property and to carry on business under Article 19 (1) (f) and (g) of the Constitution, and this Court opined that the Corporation not being a citizen was incompetent to enforce the rights guaranteed by Article 19. Nor has the judgment in Tata Engineering and Locomotive Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, (1964) 6 SCR 885 = (AIR 1965 SC 40) any bearing on the question arising in these petitions. In a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution filed by a Company challenging the levy of sales-tax by the State of Bihar, two shareholders were also impleaded as petitioners. It was urged on behalf of the shareholders that in substance the interests of the Company and of the shareholders were identical and the shareholders were entitled to maintain the petition. The Court rejected that contention, observing that what the Company could not achieve directly, it could not relying upon the doctrine of "lifting the veil" achieve indirectly. The petitioner seeks in this case to challenge the infringement of his own rights and not of the Banks of which he is a shareholder and a director and with which he has accounts — current and fixed deposit.

18. It was urged that in any event the guarantee of freedom of trade does not occur in Part III of the Constitution, and the petitioner is not entitled to maintain a petition for breach of that guarantee in this Court. But the petitioner does not seek by these petitions to enforce the guarantee of freedom of trade and commerce in Article 301: he claims that in enacting the Act the Parliament has violated a constitutional restriction imposed by Part XIII on its legislative power and in determining the extent to which his fundamental freedoms are impaired, the statute which the Parliament is incompetent to enact must be ignored.

19. It is not necessary to consider whether Article 31A (1) (d) of the Constitution bars the petitioner's claim to enforce his rights as a director. The Act prima facie does not (though the Ordinance purported to) seek to extinguish or modify the right of the petitioner as a director: it seeks to take away expressly the right of the named Banks to carry on banking business, while reserving their right to carry on business other than banking. Assuming that he is not entitled to set up his right to enforce his guaranteed rights as a director, the petition will not still fail. The Preliminary objection raised by the Attorney-General against the maintainability of the petitions must fail.

I. Validity of Ordinance 8 of 1969—

20. Power to issue Ordinance is by Article 123 of the Constitution vested in the President. Article 123 provides:

"(1) If at any time, except when both Houses of Parliament are in session, the President is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action, he may promulgate such Ordinance as the circumstances appear to him to require.

(2) An Ordinance promulgated under this Article shall have the same force and effect as an Act of Parliament, but every such Ordinance—

(a) shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament and shall cease to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the reassembly of Parliament, or, if before the expiration of that period resolutions disapproving it are passed by both Houses, upon the passing of the second of those resolutions; and

(b) may be withdrawn at any time by the President.

Explanation.—Where the Houses of Parliament are summoned to reassemble on different dates, the period of six weeks shall be reckoned from the later of those dates for the purposes of this clause.

(3) If and so far as an Ordinance under this article makes any provision which Parliament would not under this Constitution be competent to enact, it shall be void."

21. Under the Constitution, the President being the constitutional head, normally acts in all matters including the promulgation of an Ordinance on the advice of his Council of Ministers. Who-ther in a given case the President may decline to be guided by the advice of his Council of Ministers is a matter which need not detain us. The Ordinance is promulgated in the name of the President and in a constitutional sense on his satisfaction: it is in truth promulgated on the advice of his Council of Ministers and on their satisfaction. The President is under the Constitution not the repository of the legislative power of the Union; but with a view to meet extraordinary situations demanding immediate enactment of laws, provision is made in the Constitution investing the President with power to legislate by promulgating Ordinances.

22. Power to promulgate such Ordinance as the circumstances appear to the President to require is exercised — (a) when both Houses of Parliament are not in session; (b) the provision intended to be made is within the competence of the Parliament to enact; and (c) the President is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action. Exercise of the power is strictly conditioned. The clause relating to the satisfaction is composite: the satisfaction relates to the existence of circumstances, as well as to the necessity to take immediate action on account of those circumstances. Determination by the President of the existence of circumstances and the necessity to take immediate action on which the satisfaction depends, is not declared final.

(23) The Attorney-General contended that the condition of satisfaction of the President in both the branches is purely subjective and the Union of India is under no obligation to disclose the existence of, or to justify the circumstances of the necessity to take immediate action. He relied upon the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Bhagat Singh v. King Emperor, 58 Ind App 169= (AIR 1931 PC 111); King Emperor v. Benoari Lal Sharma, 72 Ind App 57= (AIR 1945 PC 48); and upon a decision of the Federal Court in Lakhi Narayan Das v. Province of Bihar, 1949 FCR 693= (AIR 1950 FC 59) which interpreted the analogous provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, conferring upon the Governor-General in the first two cases, and upon the Governor of a Province in the last case, power to issue Ordinances. He also relied upon the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Hubli Electricity Co. Ltd. v. Province of Bombay, 76 Ind App 57= (AIR 1949 PC 136).

24. The Attorney-General said that investment of legislative power upon the President being an incident of the division of sovereign functions of the Union and a "matter of high policy", the expression "the President is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action" is incorporated as a guidance and not as a condition of the exercise of power. He invited our attention to the restraints inherent in the Constitution on the exercise of the power to promulgate Ordinance clauses (1) and (2) of Art. 74; clauses (3) and (4) of Article 75 and Article 361, and submitted that the rule applicable to the interpretation of Parliamentary Statutes conferring authority upon officers of the State to act in a prescribed manner on being satisfied about the existence of certain circumstances is inept in determining the true perspective of the power of the head of the State in situations of emergency.

25. On the other hand, Mr. Palkhivala contended that the President is not made by Article 123 the final arbiter of the existence of the conditions on which the power to promulgate an Ordinance may be exercised. Power to promulgate an Ordinance being conditional, counsel urged, this Court in the absence of a provision — express or necessarily implicit in the Constitution — to the contrary, is competent to determine whether the power was exercised not for a collateral purpose, but on relevant circumstances which, prima facie, establish the necessity to take immediate action. Counsel submitted that the rules applicable to the interpretation of statutes conferring power exercisable on satisfaction of the specified circumstances upon the President and upon officers of the State, are not different. The nature of the power to perform an official act where the authority is of a certain opinion, or that in his view certain circumstances exist or that he has reasonable grounds to believe, or that he has reasons to believe, or that he is satisfied, springing from a constitutional provision is in no manner different from a similar power under a Parliamentary Statute, and no greater sanctity may attach to the exercise of the power merely because the source of the power is in the Constitution and not in a Parliamentary Statute. There is, it was urged, nothing in the constitutional scheme which supports the contention that the clause relating to satisfaction is not a condition of the exercise of power.

26. Counsel relied upon the judgments of this Court in Barium Chemical Ltd. v. Company Law Board, 1966 Supp SCR 311= (AIR 1967 SC 295) and Rohtas Industries Ltd. v. S. D. Agarwal, AIR 1969 SC 707; upon the decisions of the House of Lords in Padfield v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (1968) 1 All ER 694; and of the Judicial Committee in Durayappah v. Fernando, 1967 AC 337; Nakkuda Ali v. M. F. De S. Jayarathne, 1951 AC 66; Ross-Clunis v. Papadopoulos, 1958-2 All ER 23 and contended that the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Bhagat Singh's case, 58 Ind App 169= (AIR 1931 PC 111) and Benoari Lal Sharma's case, 72 Ind App 57= (AIR 1945 PC 48) interpreted a provision which was in substance different from the provision of Article 123, that the decision in Lakhi Narayan Das's case, 1949 FCR 693= (AIR 1950 FC 59) merely followed the two judgments of the Judicial Committee and since the status of the President under the Constitution qua the Parliament is not the same as the constitutional status of the Governor-General under the Government of India Act, 1935 the decisions cited have no bearing on the interpretation of Art. 123.

27. The Ordinance has been repealed by Act 22 of 1969, and the question of its validity is now academic. It may assume significance only if we hold that Act 22 of 1969 is valid. Since the Act is in our view invalid for reasons hereinafter stated, we accede to the submission of the Attorney-General that we need express no opinion in this case on the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court to examine whether the condition relating to satisfaction of the President was fulfilled.

II. Authority of Parliament to enact Act 22 of 1969—

28. On behalf of the petitioner it is urged that the Act is not within the legislative power of the Parliament and that, in any event, to the extent to which it vests in the corresponding new banks the assets of business other than banking, it trenches upon the authority of the State Legislature, and is on that account void. The relevant legislative entries in the Seventh Schedule and the constitutional provisions which have a bearing on the question of acquisition and taking over of undertaking of a bank may first be read.

29. The Parliament has exclusive legislative power with respect to "Banking" Entry 45 List I; "Incorporation, regulation and winding up of trading Corporations including banking, insurance and financial corporations, but not including co-operative societies"; Entry 43 List I; and "Incorporation, regulation and winding up of corporations, whether trading or not, with objects not confined to one State, but not including Universities"; Entry 44 List I.

30. The States have exclusive legislative authority with respect to the following subjects in List II:

Entry 26 — "Trade and commerce within the State, subject to the provisions of entry 33 of List III,"

Entry 30 — "Money-lending and money-lenders; relief of agricultural indebtedness."

31. The Parliament and the States have concurrent legislative authority with respect to the following subjects in List III:

Entry 33 — "Trade and commerce in, and the production, supply and distribution of,—

(a) the products of any industry where the control of such industry by the Union is declared by Parliament by law to be expedient in the public interest, and imported goods of the same kind as such products;

(b) foodstuffs, including edible oil-seeds and oils;

(c) cattle fodder, including oilcakes and other concentrates;

(d) raw cotton, whether ginned or unginned, and cotton seed; and

(e) raw jute."

Entry 42 — "Acquisition and requisition of property."

32. The argument raised by Mr. Setalvad, intervening on behalf of the State of Maharashtra and the State of Jammu and Kashmir, that the Parliament is competent to enact Act 22 of 1969, because the subject-matter of the Act is "with respect to" regulation of trading corporations and matters subsidiary and incidental thereto, and on that account is covered in its entirety by Entries 43 and 44 of List I of the Seventh Schedule, cannot be upheld. Entry 43 deals with incorporation, regulation and winding up of trading corporations including banking companies. Law regulating the business of a corporation is not a law with respect to regulation of a corporation. In List I entries expressly relating to trade and commerce are Entries 41 and 42. Again several entries in List I relate to activities commercial in character. Entry 45 "Banking"; Entry 46 "Bills of exchange, cheques, promissory notes and other like instruments"; Entry 47 "Insurance"; Entry 48 "Stock exchanges and future markets"; Entry 49 "Patents, inventions and designs". There are several entries relating to activities commercial as well as non-commercial in List II — Entry 21 "Fisheries"; Entry 24 "Industries x x x"; Entry 25 "Gas and Gas works"; Entry 26 "Trade and commerce"; Entry 30 "Money-lending and money-lenders"; Entry 31 "Inns and Inn-keeping"; Entry 33 "Theatres and dramatic performances, cinemas etc.". We are unable to accede to the argument that the State Legislatures are competent to legislate in respect of the subject-matter of those entries only when the commercial activities are carried on by individuals and not when they are carried on by Corporations.

32-A. The object of Act 22 of 1969 is to transfer the undertaking of each named bank and to vest it in the corresponding new bank set up with authority to carry on banking and other business. Each such corresponding new bank is controlled by the Central Government of which the entire capital is to stand vested in and allotted to the Central Government. The principal provisions of the Act which effectuate that object relate to setting up of "corresponding new banks" as statutory corporations to carry on and transact the business of banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and one or more other forms of business specified in Section 6 (1) of that Act, with power to acquire and hold property for the purpose of the business, and to dispose of the same; administration of the corresponding new banks as institutions carrying on banking and other business; the undertaking of each named bank in its entirety stands transferred to and vested in a new corporation set up for that purpose; principles for determination of compensation and method of payment thereof to each named bank for transfer of its undertaking; and that the named bank may not carry on banking business, but may carry out business other than banking.

32-B. Mr. Palkhivala submitted that the Parliament may legislate in respect of the business of banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and matters incidental thereto, and also for acquisition of that part of the undertaking of each named bank which relates to the business of banking, but not in respect of any other business not incidental to banking in which the named bank was engaged prior to July 19, 1969, for the power to legislate in respect of such other business falls within Entry 26 of List II. As a corollary thereto, counsel submitted that power to legislate in respect of acquisition under Entry 42 of List III may be exercised by the Parliament only for effectuating legislation under a head falling in List I or List III of the Seventh Schedule.

32-C. It is necessary to determine the true scope of "banking" in Entry 45 List I, the meaning of the expression "property", and the limitations on the power of the Parliament to legislate in respect of acquisition of property in Entry 42, List III. Matters not in contest may be eliminated. Power to legislate for setting up corporations to carry on banking and other business and to acquire, hold and dispose of property and to provide for administration of the corporations is conferred upon the Parliament by Entries 43, 44 and 45 of the first list. Power to enact that the named banks shall not carry on banking business (as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act) is incidental to the power to legislate in respect of banking. Power to legislate for determination of compensation and method of payment of compensation for compulsory acquisition of the assets of the named banks, in so far as it relates to banking business is also within the power of the Parliament.

33. The expression "banking" is not defined in any Indian statute except the Banking Regulation Act, 1949. It may be recalled that by Section 5 (b) of that Act "banking" means "the accepting for the purpose of lending or investment of deposits of money from the public repayable on demand or otherwise, and withdrawable by cheque, draft or otherwise". The definition did not include other commercial activities which a banking institution may engage in.

34. In support of his contention Mr. Palkhivala relied upon the observation of Lord Porter in Commonwealth of Australia v. Bank of New South Wales, 1950 AC 235 that banking consists of the creation and transfer of credit, the making of loans, purchase and disposal of investments and other kindred transactions; and upon the statement in Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 2, Article 270 at pp. 150 and 151 that:

"A 'banker' is an individual partnership or corporation, whose sole or predominant ing business is banking, that is the receipt of money on current or deposit account and the payment of cheques drawn by and the collection of cheques paid by a customer", and in the foot-note (g) at p. 151 that:

"Numerous other functions are undertaken at the present day by banks such as the payment of domiciled bills, custody of valuables, discounting bills, executor and trustee business, or acting in relation to stock exchange transactions, and banks have functions under certain financial legislation, x x x. These functions are not strictly banking business."

35. The Attorney-General said that the expression "banking" in Entry 45 List I means all form of business which since the introduction of western methods of banking in India, banking institutions have been carrying on in addition to banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, and on that account all forms of business described in Section 6 (1) of the Banking Regulation Act in clauses (a) to (n) are, if carried on in addition to the "hard-core of banking", banking and the Parliament is competent to legislate in respect of that business under Entry 45, List I. In support of his contention that apart from the business of accepting money from the public for lending or investment, and withdrawable by cheque, draft or otherwise, banking includes many allied business activities which banking institutions engaged in, the Attorney-General invited our attention to clause 21 of the Charter of the Bank of Bengal (Act VI of 1839); Sec. 27 of Act 4 of 1862; to Sections 36 and 37 of the Presidency Banks Act XI of 1876; to Section 91 (15) of the British North America Act; to Paget's Law of Banking, 7th Edn., at p. 5; to the standard form of memorandum of association of a Banking Company in Palmer's Company Precedents Form 138; and to the Statement of Objects and Reasons in support of the Bill which was enacted as the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

36. The Charter of the Bank of Bengal, the Presidency Banks Act 4 of 1862, Ch. X-A of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, as incorporated by the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, merely described the business which a banking institution could carry on. It was not intended thereby to include those activities within the expression "banking". The Acts enacted after the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, also support that inference. Under Section 33 of the State Bank of India Act, 1955, the State Bank is entitled to carry on diverse business activities beside banking. Similarly the Banks subsidiary to the State Bank were by Section 36 of Act 38 of 1959 to act as agents of the State Bank, and also to carry on and transact business of banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and were also competent to engage in such one or more other forms of business specified in Section 6 (1) of that Act. These provisions do not aid in construing the Entry "Banking" in Entry 45 List I.

37. In modern times in India as elsewhere, to attract business, banking establishments render and compete in rendering, a variety of miscellaneous services for their constituents. If the test for determining what "banking" means in the constitutional entry is any commercial activity which bankers at a given time engage in, great obscurity will be introduced in the content of that expression. The coverage of constitutional entry in a Federal Constitution which carves out a field of legislation must depend upon a more satisfactory basis.

38. The legislative entry in List I of the Seventh Schedule is "Banking" and not "Banker" or "Banks". To include within the connotation of the expression "Banking" in Entry 45 of List I, power to legislate in respect of all commercial activities which a banker by the custom of bankers or authority of law engages in, would result in rewriting the Constitution. Investment of power to legislate on a designated topic covers all matters incidental to the topic. A legislative entry being expressed in a broad designation indicating the contour of plenary power must receive a meaning conducive to the widest amplitude, subject however to limitations inherent in the federal scheme which distributes legislative power between the Union and the constituent units. But the field of "banking" cannot be extended to include trading activities which not being incidental to banking encroach upon the substance of the entry "trade and commerce" in List II.

39. Rejection of the argument of the Attorney-General does not lend any practical support to the argument of Mr. Palkhivala that Act 22 of 1969, to the extent it makes provisions in respect of the undertaking of the named banks relating to non-banking business, is ultra vires the Parliament. In the first instance there is no evidence that the named banks were before July 19, 1969, carrying on non-banking business distinct and independent of the banking business, or that the banks held distinct assets for any non-banking business, apart from the assets of the banking business. Again by Act 22 of 1969 the corresponding banks are entitled to engage in business of banking and non-banking which the named banks were engaged in or competent to engage in prior to July 19, 1969, and the named banks are entitled to engage in business other than banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, but not the business of banking. By enacting that the corresponding new banks may carry on business specified in Section 6 (1) of the Banking Regulation Act and that the named banks shall not carry on banking business as defined in Section 5 (b) of that Act, the impugned Act did not encroach upon any entry in the State List. By Section 15 (2) (e) of the impugned Act the named banks are expressly reserved the right to carry on business other than banking, and it is not claimed that thereby there is any encroachment upon the State List. Exercise of the power to legislate for acquisition of the undertaking of the named banks also does not trespass upon the State List.

40. Before the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, Entry 33, List I invested the Parliament with power to enact laws with respect to acquisition or requisitioning for the purpose of the Union, and Entry 36, List II, conferred upon the State Legislature the power to legislate with respect to acquisition or requisitioning for the remaining purposes. Those entries are now deleted, and a single Entry 42, List III invests the Parliament and the State Legislature with power to legislate with respect to "acquisition and requisitioning" of property. By Entry 42 in the Concurrent List power conferred upon the Parliament and the State Legislatures to legislate with respect to "Principles on which compensation for property acquired or requisitioned for the purpose of the Union or for any other public purpose is to be determined, and the form in which such compensation is to be given". Power to legislate for acquisition of property is exercisable only under Entry 42 of List III, and not as an incident of the power to legislate in respect of a specific head of legislation in any of the three lists: Rajahmundry Electric Supply Corporation Ltd. v. State of Andhra, 1954 SCR 779 at p. 785 = (AIR 1954 SC 251 at p. 253). Under that entry "property" can be compulsorily acquired. In its normal connotation "property" means the "highest right a man can have to anything, being that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels which does not depend on another's courtesy: it includes ownership, estates and interests in corporeal things, and also rights such as trade-marks, copy-rights, patents and even rights in personam capable of transfer or transmission, such as debts; and signifies a beneficial right to or a thing considered as having a money value, especially with reference to transfer or succession, and to their capacity of being injured". The expression "undertaking" in Section 4 of Act 22 of 1969 clearly means a going concern with all its rights, liabilities and assets — as distinct from the various rights and assets which compose it. In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 6, Article 75 at p. 43, it is stated that "Although various ingredients go to make up an undertaking the term describes not the ingredients but the completed work from which the earnings arise."

41. Transfer of and vesting in the State Corporations of the entire undertaking of a going concern is contemplated in many Indian Statutes: e.g., Indian Electricity Act, 1910, Sections 6, 7 and 7A; Air Corporation Act, 1953, Sections 16 and 17; Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, Sections 3 and 4, State Bank of India Act, 1955, Section 6 (2), (3) and (4); State Bank of India (Subsidiary Banks) Act, 1959; Banking Regulation Act, 1949, Section 36 AE; and Cotton Textile Companies Act, 1967, Ss. 5 (1) and (5) 1 (6) (1)? Power to legislate for acquisition of "property" in Entry 42, List III therefore includes the power to legislate for acquisition of an undertaking. But, says Mr. Palkhivala, liabilities of the banks which are included in the connotation of the expression "undertaking" cannot be treated as "property". It is however the assets, rights and obligations of a going concern which constitute the undertaking; the obligations and liabilities of the business form an integral part of the undertaking, and for compulsory acquisition cannot be divorced from the assets, rights and privileges. The expression "property" in Entry 42, List III has a wide connotation, and it includes not only assets, but the organisation, liabilities and obligations of a going concern as a unit. A law may, therefore, be enacted for compulsory acquisition of an undertaking as defined in Section 5 of Act 22 of 1969.

42. The contention raised by Mr. Pal-khivala that the Parliament is incompetent to legislate for acquisition of the named banks in so far as it relates to assets of the non-banking business fails for two reasons — (i) that there is no evidence that the named banks held any assets for any distinct non-banking business; and (ii) that the acquisition is not shown to fall within an entry in List II of the Seventh Schedule.

III. Infringement of the fundamental rights of the petitioner—

43. Clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 subordinate the exercise of the power of the State to the basic concept of the rule of law. Deprivation of a person of his property and compulsory acquisition may be effectuated by the authority of law. It is superfluous to add that the law limiting the authority of the State must be within the competence of the Legislature enacting it and not violative of a constitutional prohibition, nor impairing the guarantee of a fundamental right. This Court held in Kavalappara Kottarathil Kochuni v. State of Madras, (1960) 3 SCR 887 = (AIR 1960 SC 1080); Swami Motor Transport Co. (P) Ltd. v. Sri Sankaraswamigal Mutt, 1963 Supp 1 SCR 282 = (AIR 1963 SC 864) and Maharana Shri Jayavantsinghji v. State of Gujarat, 1962 Supp 2 SCR 411 at p. 438 = (AIR 1962 SC 821 at p. 833) that a person may be deprived of his property by authority of a statute only if it does not impair the fundamental rights guaranteed to him. It is again not contested on behalf of the Union that the law authorising acquisition of property must be within the competence of the law-making authority and must not violate a constitutional prohibition or impair the guarantee of any of the fundamental rights in Part III. But it is claimed that since Article 31 (2) and Article 19 (1) (f) while operating on the same field of the right to property are mutually exclusive, a law directly providing for acquisition of property for a public purpose cannot be tested for its validity on the plea that it imposes limitations on the right to property which are not reasonable.

44. By Articles 31 (1) and (2) the right to property of individuals is protected against specific invasions by State action. The function of the two clauses — clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 — is to impose limitations on the power of the State and to declare the corresponding guarantee of the individual to his right to property. Limitation on the power of the State and the guarantee of right are plainly complementary. Protection of the guarantee is ensured by declaring that a person may be deprived of his property by "authority of law": Article 31 (1); and that private property may be compulsorily acquired for a public purpose and by the "authority of a law" containing provisions fixing or providing for determination and payment of compensation: Article 31 (2). Exercise of either power by State action results in abridgement — total or partial — of the right to property of the individual. Article 19 (1) (f) is a positive declaration in the widest terms of the right to acquire, hold and dispose of property, subject to restrictions (which may assume the form of limitations or complete prohibition) imposed by law in the interests of the general public. The guarantee under Article 19 (1) (f) does not protect merely an abstract right to property: It extends to concrete rights to property as well: Swami Motor Transport Co. (P) Ltd's case, 1963 Supp 1 SCR 282 = (AIR 1963 SC 864).

45. The constitutional scheme declares the right to property of the individual and then delimits it by two different provisions: Article 19 (5) authorizing the State to make laws imposing reasonable restrictions on the exercise of that right, and clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 recognizing the authority of the State to make laws for taking the property. Limitations under Article 19 (5) and Article 31 are not generically different, for the law authorizing the exercise of the power to take the property of an individual for a public purpose or to ensure the well-being of the community, and the law authorising the imposition of reasonable restrictions under Article 19 (5) are intended to advance the larger public interest. It is true that the guarantee against deprivation and compulsory acquisition operates in favour of all persons, citizens as well as non-citizens, whereas the positive declaration of the right to property guarantees the right to citizens. But a wider operation of the guarantee under Article 31 does not alter the true character of the right it protects. Article 19 (5) and Article 31 (1) and (2), in our judgment, operate to delimit the exercise of the right to hold property.

46. Under the Constitution, protection against impairment of the guarantee of fundamental rights is determined by the nature of the right, the interest of the aggrieved party and the degree of harm resulting from the State action. Impairment of the right of the individual and not the object of the State in taking the impugned action, is the measure of protection. To concentrate merely on power of the State and the object of the State action in exercising that power is therefore to ignore the true intent of the Constitution. In this Court, there is, however, a body of authority that the nature and extent of the protection of the fundamental rights is measured not by the operation of the State action upon the rights of the individual, but by its object. Thereby the constitutional scheme which makes the guaranteed rights subject to the permissible restrictions within their allotted fields fundamental got blurred and gave impetus to a theory that certain Articles of the Constitution enact a code dealing exclusively with matters dealt with therein, and the protection which an aggrieved person may claim is circumscribed by the object of the State action.

46-A. Protection of the right to property or personal freedom is most needed when there is an actual threat. To argue that State action which deprives a person permanently or temporarily of his right to property or personal freedom, operates to extinguish the right or the remedy is to reduce the guarantee to an empty platitude. Again to hold that the extent of, and the circumstances in which, the guarantee of protection is available depends upon the object of the State action, is to seriously erode its effectiveness. Examining the problem not merely in semantics but in the broader and more appropriate context of the constitutional scheme which aims at affording the individual the fullest protection of his basic rights and on that foundation to erect a structure of a truly democratic polity, the conclusion, in our judgment, is inevitable that the validity of the State action must be adjudged in the light of its operation upon the rights of the individual and groups of individuals in all their dimensions.

47. But this Court has held in some cases to be presently noticed that Article 19 (1) (f) and Article 31 (2) are mutually exclusive.

48. Early in the history of this Court the question of inter-relation between the diverse provisions affording the guarantee of fundamental rights in Part III fell to be determined. In A. K. Gopalan v. State of Madras, 1950 SCR 88= (AIR 1950 SC 27) a person detained pursuant to an order made in exercise of the power conferred by the Preventive Detention Act 4 of 1950 applied to this Court for a writ of habeas corpus claiming that the Act contravened the guarantee under Articles 19, 21 and 22 of the Constitution. The majority of the Court (Kania, C. J., and Patanjali Sastri, Mahajan, Mukherjea and Das, JJ.) held that Article 22 being a complete code relating to preventive detention, the validity of an order of detention must be determined strictly according to the terms and "within the four corners of that Article". They held that a person detained may not claim that the freedom guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (d) was infringed by his detention, and that validity of the law providing for making orders of detention will not be tested in the light of the reasonableness of the restrictions imposed thereby on the freedom of movement, nor on the ground that his right to personal liberty is infringed otherwise than according to the procedure established by law. Fazl Ali, J., expressed a contrary view. This case has formed the nucleus of the theory that the protection of the guarantee of a fundamental freedom must be adjudged in the light of the object of State action in relation to the individual's right and not upon its influence upon the guarantee of the fundamental freedom, and as a corollary thereto, that the freedoms under Articles 19, 21, 22 and 31 are exclusive — each article enacting a code relating to protection of distinct rights.

49. Kania, C. J., proceeded on the theory that different articles guarantee distinct rights. He observed at p. 100 (of SCR)= (at p. 35 of AIR):

".....it (Article 19) * * means that the legislation to be examined must be directly in respect of one of the rights mentioned in the sub-clauses. If there is a legislation directly attempting to control a citizen's freedom of speech or expression, or his right to assemble peaceably and without arms, etc., the question whether that legislation is saved by the relevant saving clause of Article 19 will arise. If, however, the legislation is not directly in respect of any of these subjects, but as a result of the operation of other legislation, * * * the question of the application of Article 19 does not arise. The true approach is only to consider the directness of the legislation and not what will be the result of the detention otherwise valid, on the mode of the detenu's life."

The learned Chief Justice also observed that Article 19 (1) (d) had nothing to do with detention, preventive or punitive, and the concept of personal liberty in Article 21 being entirely different from the concept of the right to move freely throughout the territory of India, Article 22 was a complete code dealing with preventive detention.

50. Patanjali Sastri, J., observed at p. 191 (of SCR) = (at pp. 69-70 of AIR):

"..... article 19 seems * * to presuppose that the citizen to whom the possession of these fundamental rights is secured retains the substratum of personal freedom on which alone the enjoyment of these rights necessarily rests. * * Article 19 guarantees to the citizens the enjoyment of certain civil liberties while they are free, while articles 20-22 secure to all persons—citizens and non-citizens—certain constitutional guarantees in regard to punishment and prevention of crime."

51. Mahajan J., was of the view that Article 22 was "self-contained in respect of laws on the subject of preventive detention." Mukherjea, J., observed (at p. 254) (of SCR) = (at p. 93 of AIR) that there was no conflict between Article 19 (1) (d) and Article 22, for the former did not contemplate freedom from detention either punitive or preventive, but speaks of a different aspect or phase of civil liberty. In his view Articles 20 to 22 embodied the entire protection guaranteed by the Constitution in relation to deprivation of life and personal liberty with regard to substantive as well as procedural law. He proceeded to observe at p. 261 (of SCR) = (at p. 96 of AIR):

"..... by reason of preventive detention, a man may be prevented from exercising the right of free movement within the territory in India * * *, but that is merely incidental to or consequential upon loss of liberty resulting from the order of detention."

But the learned Judge observed at p. 263 (of SCR) = (at p. 97 of AIR):

"It may not, I think, be quite accurate to state that the operation of Article 19 of the Constitution is limited to free citizens only and that the rights have been described in that article on the pre-supposition that the citizens are at liberty. The deprivation of personal liberty may entail as a consequence the loss or abridgement of many of the rights described in Article 19, but that is because the nature of these rights is such that free exercise of them is not possible in the absence of personal liberty."

52. Das, J., observed at p. 304 (of SCR) = (at p. 113 of AIR):

"Therefore, the conclusion is irresistible that the rights protected by Article 19 (1), in so far as they relate to rights attached to the person i.e., the rights referred to in sub-clauses (a) to (e) and (g), are rights which only a free citizen, who has the freedom of his person unimpaired, can exercise."

The learned Judge further observed:

"..... a lawful detention, whether punitive or preventive, does not offend against the protection conferred by Article 19 (1) (a) to (e) and (g), for those rights must necessarily cease when the freedom of the person is lawfully taken away. In short, those rights end where the lawful detention begins. So construed, Article 19 and Article 21 may, therefore, easily go together and there is, in reality, no conflict between them."

53. Fazl Ali, J., struck a different note: he observed at p. 148 (of SCR) = (at pp. 52-53 of AIR):

"the scheme of the Chapter dealing with the fundamental rights does not contemplate * * that each article is a code by itself and is independent of the others. * * * The case of a person who is convicted of an offence will come under Articles 20 and 21 and also under Article 22 so far as his arrest and detention in custody before trial are concerned. Preventive detention, which is dealt with in Article 22, also amounts to deprivation of personal liberty which is referred to in Article 21, and is a violation of the right of freedom of movement dealt with in Article 19 (1) (d)."

At p. 149 (of SCR) = (at p. 53 of AIR) the learned Judge observed:

"The words used in Article 19 (1) (d) must be construed as they stand, and we have to decide upon the words themselves whether in the case of preventive detention the right under Article 19 (1) (d) is or is not infringed. But, * * *, however, literally we may construe the words used in Article 19 (1) (d) and however restricted may be the meaning we may attribute to those words, there can be no escape from the conclusion that preventive detention is a direct infringement of the right guaranteed in Article 19 (1) (d)."

At p. 170 (of SCR) = (at p. 61 of AIR) he observed:

"..... this Article (Article 22) * * does not exclude the operation of Articles 19 and 21, and it must be read subject to those two articles, in the same way as Articles 19 and 21 must be read subject to Article 22. The correct position is that Article 22 must prevail in so far as there are specific provisions therein regarding preventive detention, but, where there are no such provisions in that Article, the operation of Articles 19 and 21 cannot be excluded. The mere fact that different aspects of the same right have been dealt with in three different Articles will not make them mutually exclusive except to the extent I have indicated."

The view expressed in A. K. Gopalan's case, 1950 SCR 88 = (AIR 1950 SC 27) was re-affirmed in Ram Singh v. State of Delhi, 1951 SCR 451 = (AIR 1951 SC 270).

54. The principle underlying the judgment of the majority was extended to the protection of the freedom in respect of property, and it was held that Article 19 (1) (f) and Article 31 (2) were mutually exclusive in their operation. In A. K. Gopalan's case, 1950 SCR 88 = (AIR 1950 SC 27), Das, J., suggested that if the capacity to exercise the right to property was lost, because of lawful compulsory acquisition of the subject of that right, the owner ceased to have that right for the duration of the incapacity. In Chiranjit Lal Chowduri's case, 1950 SCR 869 = (AIR 1951 SC 41), Das, J., observed at p. 919 (of SCR) = (at p. 60 of AIR):

"..... the right to property guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f) would * * * continue until the owner was under Article 31 deprived of such property by authority of law."

In State of West Bengal v. Subodh Gopal 1954 SCR 587 = (AIR 1954 SC 92) the same learned Judge observed that "Article 19 (1) (f) read with Article 19 (5) presupposes that the person to whom the fundamental right is guaranteed retains his property over or with respect to which alone that right may be exercised." The principle so stated was given a more concrete shape in a later decision: State of Bombay v. Bhanji Munji, 1955-1 SCR 777 = (AIR 1955 SC 41). In Bhanji Munji's case 1955-1 SCR 777 = (AIR 1955 SC 41), speaking for a unanimous Court, Bose, J., observed:

"..... it is enough to say that Article 19 (1) (f) read with clause (5) postulates the existence of property which can be enjoyed, and over which rights can be exercised because otherwise the reasonable restrictions contemplated by Clause (5) could not be brought into play. If there is no property which can be acquired, held or disposed of, no restriction can be placed on the exercise of the right to acquire, hold or dispose of it, and as Clause (5) contemplates the placing of reasonable restrictions on the exercise of those rights it must follow that the Article postulates the existence of property over which the rights are to be exercised."

Bhanji Munji's case, 1955-1 SCR 777 = (AIR 1955 SC 41) was accepted without any discussion in Babu Barkya v. State of Bombay, (1961) 1 SCR 128 = (AIR 1960 SC 1203); Smt. Sitabati Debi v. State of West Bengal, 1967-2 SCR 949 and other cases. In these cases it was held that the substantive provisions of a law relating to acquisition of property were not liable to be challenged on the ground that they imposed unreasonable restrictions on the right to hold property.

55. Bhanji Munji's case, 1955-1 SCR 777 = (AIR 1955 SC 41), it must be remembered, arose under Article 31 before it was amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act. It was held by this Court that Clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 as they then stood dealt with the same subject-matter i. e., compulsory acquisition of property: see Subodh Gopal's case, 1954 SCR 587 = (AIR 1954 SC 92) and Dwarkadas Shrinivas's case, 1954 SCR 674 = (AIR 1954 SC 119). But since the amendment by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act it has been held that Clauses (1) and (2) deal with different subject-matters. In Kavalappara Kottarrathil Kochuni's case, 1960-3 SCR 887 = (AIR 1960 SC 1080), Subba Rao, J., delivering the judgment of the majority of the Court observed that Cl. (2) of Article 31 alone deals with compulsory acquisition of property by the State for a public purpose, and not Article 31 (1), and he proceeded to hold that the expression "authority of law" means authority of a valid law, and on that account validity of the law seeking to deprive a person of his property is open to challenge on the ground that it infringes other fundamental rights, e. g., under Article 19 (1) (f). It was broadly observed that Bhanji Munji's case, 1955-1 SCR 777 = (AIR 1955 SC 41) after the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act "no longer holds the field". But Kavalappara Kottarathil Kochuni's case, 1960-3 SCR 887 = (AIR 1960 SC 1080) did not deal with the validity of a law relating to compulsory acquisition. With the decision in Kavalappara Kottarathil Kochuni's case, 1960-3 SCR 887 = (AIR 1960 SC 1080) there arose two divergent lines of authority: (1) "authority of law" in Art. 31 (1) is liable to be tested on the ground that it violates other fundamental rights and freedoms including the right to hold property guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f); and (2) "authority of a law" within the meaning of Article 31 (2) is not liable to be tested on the ground that it impairs the guarantee of Article 19 (1) (f) in so far as it imposes substantive restrictions — though it may be tested on the ground of impairment of other guarantees. The expression "law" in the two clauses had therefore different meanings. It was for the first time (obiter dicta apart) in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Ranojirao Shinde, 1968-3 SCR 489 = (AIR 1968 SC 1053) this Court opined that the validity of law in Clause (2) of Article 31 may be adjudged in the light of Article 19 (1) (f). But the Court in that case did not consider the previous catena of authorities which related to the inter-relation between Article 31 (2) and Article 19 (1) (f).

56. We have carefully considered the weighty pronouncements of the eminent Judges who gave shape to the concept that the extent of protection of important guarantees, such as the liberty of person, and right to property, depends upon the form and object of the State action, and not upon its direct operation upon the individual's freedom. But it is not the object of the authority making the law impairing the right of a citizen, nor the form of action taken that determines the protection he can claim: it is the effect of the law and of the action upon the right which attract the jurisdiction of the Court to grant relief. If this be the true view and we think it is, in determining the impact of State action upon constitutional guarantees which are fundamental, it follows that the extent of protection against impairment of a fundamental right is determined not by the object of the Legislature nor by the form of the action, but by its direct operation upon the individuals rights.

57. We are of the view that the theory that the object and form of the State action determine the extent of protection which the aggrieved party may claim is not consistent with the constitutional scheme. Each freedom has different dimensions. Article 19 (1) (f) enunciates the right to acquire, hold and dispose of property: Clause (5) of Article 19 authorizes imposition of restrictions upon the right. Article 31 assures the right to property and grants protection against the exercise of the authority of the State. Clause (5) of Article 19 and Clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 prescribe restrictions upon State action, subject to which the right to property may be exercised. Article 19 (5) is a broad generalization dealing with the nature of limitations which may be placed by law on the right to property. The guarantees under Article 31 (1) and (2) arise out of the limitations imposed on the authority of the State by law to take over the individual's property. The true character of the limitations under the two provisions is not different. Clause (5) of Article 19 and clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 are parts of a single pattern. Article 19 (1) (f) enunciates the basic right to property of the citizens and Article 19 (5) and Clauses (1) and (2) of Article 31 deal with limitations which may be placed by law subject to which the rights may be exercised.

58-60. Limitations prescribed for ensuring due exercise of the authority of the State to deprive a person of his property and of the power to compulsorily acquire his property are, therefore, specific classes of limitations on the right to property falling within Article 19 (1) (f). Property may be compulsorily acquired only for a public purpose. Where the law provides for compulsory acquisition of property for a public purpose it may be presumed that the acquisition or the law relating thereto imposes a reasonable restriction in the interest of the general public. If there is no public purpose to sustain compulsory acquisition, the law violates Article 31 (2). If the acquisition is for a public purpose, substantive reasonableness of the restriction which includes deprivation may, unless otherwise established, be presumed, but enquiry into reasonableness of the procedural provisions will not be excluded. For instance if a tribunal is authorised by an Act to determine compensation for property compulsorily acquired, without hearing the owner of the property, the Act would be liable to be struck down under Article 19 (1) (f).

61. In dealing with the argument that Article 31 (2) is a complete code relating to infringement of the right to property by compulsory acquisition, and the validity of the law is not liable to be tested in the light of the reasonableness of the restrictions imposed thereby it is necessary to bear in mind the enunciation of the guarantee of fundamental rights which has taken different forms. In some cases it is an express declaration of a guaranteed right: Articles 29 (1), 30 (1), 26, 25 and 32; in others to ensure protection of individual rights they take specific forms of restrictions on State action—legislative or executive—Articles 14, 15, 16, 20, 21, 22 (1), 27 and 28; in some others, it takes the form of a positive declaration and simultaneously enunciates the restriction thereon: Articles 19 (1) and 19 (2) to (6); in some cases, it arises as an implication from the delimitation of the authority of the State, e. g., Articles 31 (1) and 31 (2); in still others, it takes the form of a general prohibition against the State as well as others: Articles 17, 23 and 24. The enunciation of rights either express or by implication does not follow a uniform pattern. But one thread runs through them: they seek to protect the rights of the individual or groups of individuals against infringement of those rights within specific limits. Part III of the Constitution weaves a pattern of guarantees on the texture of basic human rights. The guarantees delimit the protection of those rights in their allotted fields; they do not attempt to enunciate distinct rights.

62. We are therefore unable to hold that the challenge to the validity of the provision for acquisition is liable to be tested only on the ground of non-compliance with Article 31 (2). Article 31(2) requires that property must be acquired for a public purpose and that it must be acquired under a law with characteristics set out in that Article. Formal compliance with the conditions under Art. 31 (2) is not sufficient to negative the protection of the guarantee of the right to property. Acquisition must be under the authority of a law and the expression "law" means a law which is within the competence of the Legislature and does not impair the guarantee of the rights in Part III. We are unable, therefore, to agree that Articles 19 (1) (f) and 31 (2) are mutually exclusive.

63. The area of protection afforded against State action by the freedom under Article 19 (1) (f) and by the exercise of the power of the State to acquire property of the individual without his consent must still be reconciled. If property is compulsorily acquired for a public purpose, and the law satisfies the requirements of Articles 31 (2) and 31 (2A), the Court may readily presume that by the acquisition a reasonable restriction on the exercise of the right to hold property is imposed in the interests of the general public. But that is not because the claim to plead infringement of the fundamental right under Article 19 (1) (f) does not avail the owner; it is because the acquisition imposes a permissible restriction on the right of the owner of the property compulsorily acquired.

64. We have found it necessary to examine the rationale of the two lines of authority and determine whether there is anything in the Constitution which justifies this apparently inconsistent development of the law. In our judgment, the assumption in A. K. Gopalan's case, 1950 SCR 88 = (AIR 1950 SC 27) that certain articles in the Constitution exclusively deal with specific matters and in determining whether there is infringement of the individual's guaranteed rights, the object and the form of the State action alone need be considered, and effect of the laws on fundamental rights of the individuals in general will be ignored cannot be accepted as correct. We hold that the validity of "law" which authorises deprivation of property and "a law" which authorises compulsory acquisition of property for a public purpose must be adjudged by the application of the same tests. A citizen may claim in an appropriate case that the law authorising compulsory acquisition of property imposes fetters upon his right to hold property which are not reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public. It is immaterial that the scope for such challenge may be attenuated because of the nature of the law of acquisition which providing as it does for expropriation of property of the individual for public purpose may be presumed to impose reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public.

65. Whether the provisions of Sections 4 and 5 of Act 22 of 1969 and the other related provisions of the Act impair the fundamental freedoms under Article 19 (1) (f) and (g) now falls to be considered. By Section 4 the entire undertaking of each named bank vests in the Union, and the Bank is prohibited from engaging in the business of banking in India and even in a foreign country, except where by the laws of a foreign country banking business owned or controlled by Government cannot be carried on, the named bank will be entitled to continue the business in that country. The business which the named banks carried on was—(1) the business of banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, and business incidental thereto; and (2) other business which by virtue of Section 6 (1) they were not prohibited from carrying on, though not part of or incidental to the business of banking. It may be recalled that by Act 22 of 1969 the named banks cannot engage in business of banking as defined in Section 5 (b) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, but may engage in other forms of business. By the Act, however, the entire undertaking of each named bank is vested in the new corporation set up with a name identical with the name of that Bank, and authorised to carry on banking business previously carried on by the named bank, and its managerial and other staff is transferred to the corresponding new bank. The newly constituted corresponding bank is entitled to engage in business described in Section 6 (1) of the Banking Regulation Act, and for that purpose to utilize the assets, goodwill and business connections of the existing bank.

66. The named banks are declared entitled to engage in business other than banking; but they have no assets with which that business may be carried on, and since they are prohibited from carrying on banking business, by virtue of Section 7 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, they cannot use in their title the words "Bank" or "Banking", and even engage in "non-banking business" in their old names. A business organization deprived of its entire assets and undertaking, its managerial and other staff, its premises, and its name, even if it has a theoretical right to carry on non-banking business, would not be able to do so, especially when even the fraction of the value of its undertaking made payable to it as compensation, is not made immediately payable to it.

67. Validity of the provisions of the Act which transfer the undertaking of the named banks and prohibit those banks from carrying on business of banking and practically prohibit them from carrying on non-banking business falls to be considered in the light of Article 19 (1) (f) and Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. By Article 19 (1) (f) right to acquire, hold and dispose of property is guaranteed to the citizens and by Art. 19 (1) (g) the right to practise any profession, or to carry on any occupation, trade or business is guaranteed to the citizens. These rights are not absolute: they are subject to the restrictions prescribed in the appropriate clauses of Article 19. By Cl. (5) it is provided, inter alia, that nothing in sub-cl. (f) of Cl. (1) shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevent the State from making any law, imposing in the interests of the general public, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by that sub-clause either in the interests of the general public or for the protection of the interests of any Scheduled Tribe. Clause (6) as amended by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, reads:

"Nothing in sub-clause (g) of the said clause shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevent the State from making any law imposing, in the interests of the general public, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by the said sub-clause, and, in particular, nothing in the said sub-clause, shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it relates to, or prevent the State from making law relating to—

(i) the professional or technical qualifications necessary for practising any profession or carrying on any occupation, trade or business, or

(ii) the carrying on by the State, or by a corporation-owned or controlled by the State, of any trade, business, industry or service, whether to the exclusion, complete or partial, of citizens or otherwise." Clause (6) of Article 19 consists of two parts: (1) the right declared by sub-cl. (g) is not protected against the operation of any law imposing, in the interests of the general public, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by that sub-clause; and (2) in particular sub-cl. (g) does not affect the operation of any law relating, inter alia, to carrying on by the State or by a corporation-owned or controlled by the State, of any trade, business, industry or service whether or not such law provides for the exclusion, complete or partial, of citizens.

68. According to Mr. Palkhivala it was intended by the use of the expression "in particular" to denote a special class of trade, business, industry or service out of the general class referred to in the first part, and on that account a law which relates to the carrying on by the State of any particular business, industry or service, to the exclusion—complete or partial—of citizens or otherwise, is also subject to the enquiry whether it imposes reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right in the interests of the general public. Counsel urged that the law imposing restrictions upon the exercise of the right to carry on any occupation, trade or business is subject to the test of reasonable restrictions imposed in the interests of the general public, likewise, the particular classes specified in the second part of the Article must also be regarded as liable to be tested in the light of the same limitations. Counsel strongly relied upon the decision of the House of Lords in Earl Fitzwilliam's Wentworth Estates Co. v. Minister of Housing and Local Government, (1952) 1 All ER 509. The House of Lords in that case did not lay down any general proposition. They were only dealing with the meaning of the words "in particular" in the context in which they occurred and it was held that the expression "in particular" was not intended to confer a separate and distinct power wholly independent of that contained in the first limb. It cannot be said that the expression "in particular" used in Article 19 (1) (g) is intended either to particularise or to illustrate the general law set out in the first limb.

69. It was observed in Saghir Ahmed v. State of U. P., 1955-1 SCR 707 = (AIR 1954 SC 728) by Mukherjea, J., at p. 727 (of SCR) = (at p. 739 of AIR):

"The new clause—Article 19 (6)—has no doubt been introduced with a view to provide that a State can create a monopoly in its own favour in respect of any trade or business; but the amendment does not make the establishment of such monopoly a reasonable restriction within the meaning of the first clause of Article 19 (6). The result of the amendment is that the State would not have to justify such action as reasonable at all in a court of law, and no objection could be taken to it on the ground that it is an infringement of the rights guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution."

70. In dealing with the validity of a law creating a State monopoly in Akadasi Padhan v. State of Orissa, 1963 Supp 2 SCR 691 = (AIR 1963 SC 1047), this Court unanimously held, that the validity of a law creating a State monopoly which "indirectly impinges on any other right" cannot be challenged on the ground that it imposes restrictions which are not reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public. But if the law contains other incidental provisions which do not constitute an essential and integral part of the monopoly created by it, the validity of those provisions is liable to be tested under the first part of Article 19 (6). If they directly impair any other fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 (1), the validity of those provisions will be tested by reference to the corresponding clauses of Article 19. The Court also observed that the essential attributes of the law creating a monopoly will vary with the nature of the trade or business in which the monopoly is created. They will depend upon the nature of the commodity, the nature of trade in which it is involved and other circumstances. At p. 707 (of SCR) = (at p. 1054 of AIR) Gajendragadkar, J., speaking for the Court, observed:

" 'A law relating to' a State monopoly cannot, in the context, include all the provisions contained in the said law whether they have direct relation with the creation of the monopoly or not. In our opinion, the said expression should be construed to mean the law relating to the monopoly in its absolutely essential features. If a law is passed creating a State monopoly, the Court should enquire what are the provisions of the said law which are basically and essentially necessary for creating the State monopoly. It is only those essential and basic provisions which are protected by the latter part of Article 19 (6). If there are other provisions made by the Act which are subsidiary, incidental or helpful to the operation of the monopoly, they do not fall under the first part of Article 19 (6)." He also observed at p. 705 (of SCR) = (at p. 1054 of AIR):

"...the amendment (First Amendment) clearly indicates that State monopoly in respect of any trade or business must be presumed to be reasonable and in the interests of general public, so far as Article 19 (1) (g) is concerned."

This was reiterated in Rasbihari Panda v. State of Orissa, Civil Appeals Nos. 1472-1474 of 1968, D/- 16-1-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 SC 1081); Vrajlal Manilal and Co. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Civil Appeal No. 2262 of 1966, D/- 25-4-1969 = (reported in AIR 1970 SC 129) and Municipal Committee, Amritsar v. State of Punjab, Writ Petn. No. 295 and other Petns. of 1968, D/- 30-1-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 SC 1100). These cases dealt with the validity of laws creating monopolies in the State. Clause (6) is however not restricted to laws creating State monopolies, and the rule enunciated in Akadasi Padhan's case, 1963 Supp (2) SCR 691 = (AIR 1963 SC 1047) applies to all laws relating to the carrying on by the State of any trade, business, industry or service by Art. 298 the State is authorized to carry on trade which is competitive, or excludes the citizens from that trade completely or partially. The "basic and essential" provisions of law which are "integrally and essentially connected" with the carrying on of a trade by the State will not be exposed to the challenge that they impair the guarantee under Article 19 (1) (g), whether the citizens are excluded completely or partially from carrying on that trade, or the trade is competitive. Imposition of restrictions which are incidental or subsidiary to the carrying on of trade by the State whether to the exclusion of the citizens or not must, however, satisfy the test of the main limb.

71. The law which prohibits after July 19, 1969, the named banks from carrying on banking business, being a necessary incident of the right assumed by the Union, is not liable to be challenged because of Article 19 (6) (ii) in so far as it affects the right to carry on business.

71-A. There is no satisfactory proof in support of the plea that the enactment of Act 22 of 1969 was not in the larger interest of the nation, but to serve political ends, i.e. not with the object to ensure better banking facilities, or to make them available to a wider public, but only to take control over the deposits of the public with the major banks, and to use them as a political lever against industrialists who had built up industries by decades of industrial planning and careful management. It is true that social control legislation enacted by the Banking Laws (Amendment) Act 58 of 1968 was in operation and the named banks were subject to rigorous control which the Reserve Bank was competent to exercise and did in fact exercise. Granting that the objectives laid down by the Reserve Bank were being carried out, it cannot be said that the Act was enacted in abuse of legislative power. Our attention was invited to a mass of evidence from the speeches of the Deputy Prime Minister, and of the Governor and the Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank, and also extracts from the Reserve Bank Bulletins issued from time to time and other statistical information collected from official sources in support of the thesis of the petitioner that the performance of the named banks exceeded the targets laid down by the Reserve Bank in its directives; that the named banks had effectively complied with the requirements of the law; that they had served the diverse interests including small-scale sector, and had been instrumental in bringing about an increasing tempo of industrial and commercial activity; that they had discouraged speculative holding of commodities; and had followed essential priorities in the economic development of the nation coupled with a vigorous programme of branch development in the rural sector, bringing about a considerable expansion in deposits, and large advances to the small-scale business and industry. Mr. Palkhivala urged that under the scheme of social control the commercial banks had achieved impressive results comparing favourably with the performance of the State Bank of India and its subsidiaries in the public sector, and that the performance of the named banks could not be belittled by referring to the banking structure and development in highly developed countries like Canada, Japan, France, United States and the United Kingdom. On the other hand, the Attorney-General said that the commercial banks followed a conservative policy because they had to look primarily to the interests of the shareholders, and on that account could not adopt bold policies or schemes for financing the needy and worthy causes; that if the resources of the banking industry are properly utilised for the weaker sections of the people economic regeneration of the nation may be speedily achieved, that 28 per cent of the towns in India were not served by commercial banks; that there had been unequal development of facilities in different parts of the country and deserving sections were deprived of the benefit of important national resources resulting in economic disparities, especially because the major banks catered to the large-scale industries.

72. This Court is not the forum in which these conflicting claims may be debated. Whether there is a genuine need for banking facility in the rural areas, whether certain classes of the community are deprived of the benefit of the resources of the banking industry, whether administration by the Government of the commercial banking sector will not prove beneficial to the community and will lead to rigidity in the administration whether the Government administration will eschew the profit-motive, and even if it be eschewed, there will accrue substantial benefits to the public, whether an undue accent on banking as a means of social regeneration, especially in the backward areas, is a doctrinaire approach to a rational order of priorities for attaining the national objectives enshrined in our Constitution, and whether the policy followed by the Government in office or the policy propounded by its opponents may reasonably attain the national objectives are matters which have little relevance in determining the legality of the measure. It is again not for this Court to consider the relative merits of the different political theories or economic policies. The Parliament has under Entry 45 List I the power to legislate in respect of banking and other commercial activities of the named banks necessarily incidental thereto: it has the power to legislate for acquiring the undertaking of the named banks under Entry 42 List III. Whether by the exercise of the power vested in the Reserve Bank under the pre-existing laws results could be achieved which it is the object of the Act to achieve, is, in our judgment, not relevant in considering whether the Act amounts to abuse of legislative power. This Court has the power to strike down a law on the ground of want of authority, but the Court will not sit in appeal over the policy of the Parliament in enacting a law. The Court cannot find fault with the Act merely on the ground that it is inadvisable to take over the undertaking of banks which, it is said by the petitioner, by thrift and efficient management had set up an impressive and efficient business organization serving large sectors of industry.

73. By Section 15 (2) (e) of the Act the Banks are entitled to engage in business other than banking. But by the provisions of the Act they are rendered practically incapable of engaging in any business. By the provisions of the Act, a named bank cannot even use its name, and the compensation which is to be given will, in the absence of agreement, be determined by the Tribunal and paid in securities which will mature not before ten years. A named bank may, if it agrees to distribute among the shareholders the compensation which it may receive, be paid in securities an amount equal to half the paid-up share capital, but obviously the fund will not be available to the Bank. It is true that under Section 15 (3) of the Act the Central Government may authorise the corresponding new banks to make advances to the named banks for any of the purposes mentioned in Section 15 (2). But that is a matter which rests only upon the will of the Central Government and no right can be founded upon it.

74. Where restrictions imposed upon the carrying on of a business are so stringent that the business cannot in practice be carried on, the Court will regard the imposition of the restrictions as unreasonable. In Mohammad Yasin v. Town Area Committee, Jalalabad, 1952 SCR 572= (AIR 1952 SC 115) this Court observed that under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution a citizen has the right to carry on any occupation, trade or business and the only restriction on this right is the authority of the State to make a law relating to the carrying on of such occupation, trade or business as mentioned in Clause (6) of that Article as amended by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951. In Mohammad Yasin's case, 1952 SCR 572= (AIR 1952 SC 115) by the bye-laws of the Municipal Committee, it was provided that no person shall sell or purchase any vegetables or fruit within the limits of the municipal area of Jalalabad, wholesale or by auction, without paying the prescribed fee. It was urged on behalf of a wholesale dealer in vegetables that although there was no prohibition against carrying on business in vegetables by anybody, in effect the bye-laws brought about a total stoppage of the wholesaler's business in a commercial sense, for he had to pay prescribed fee to the contractor, and under the bye-laws the wholesale dealer could not charge a higher rate of commission than the contractor. The wholesale dealer, therefore, could charge the growers of vegetables and fruit only the commission permissible under the bye-laws, and he had to make over the entire commission to the contractor without retaining any part thereof. The wholesale dealer was thereby converted into a mere tax-collector for the contractor or the Town Area Committee without any remuneration. The bye-laws in this situation were struck down as impairing the freedom to carry on business.

75. In Dwarkadas Shrinivas's case, 1954 SCR 674= (AIR 1954 SC 119) the Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Company (Emergency Provisions) Ordinance II of 1950 and Act 28 of 1950 passed by the Parliament to replace the Ordinance were challenged. Under the Ordinance the managing agent and the elected directors were dismissed and new directors were appointed by the State. The Company was denuded of possession of its property and all that was left to the Company was a bare legal title. In an appeal arising out of a suit challenging the validity of the Ordinance and the Act which replaced it this Court held that the Ordinance and the Act violated the fundamental rights of the Company and of the plaintiff a preference shareholder upon whom a demand was made for payment of unpaid calls. This Court held that the Ordinance and the Act in effect deprived the Company of its property within the meaning of Article 31 without compensation. It was observed by Mahajan, J., that practically all incidents of ownership were taken over by the State and nothing was left with the Company but the mere husk of title, and on that account the impugned statute had overstepped the limits of legitimate social control legislation.

76. If compensation paid is in such a form that it is not immediately available for restarting any business, declaration of the right to carry on business other than banking becomes an empty formality, when the entire undertaking of the named banks is transferred to and vests in the new banks together with the premises and the names of the banks, and the named banks are deprived of the services of its administrative and other staff.

77. The restriction imposed upon the right of the named banks to carry on "non-banking" business is, in our judgment, plainly unreasonable. No attempt is made to support the Act which while theoretically declaring the right of the named banks to carry on "non-banking" business makes it impossible in a commercial sense for the banks to carry on any business.

Protection of Article 14—

78. By Article 14 of the Constitution the State is enjoined not to deny any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India. The Article forbids class legislation, but not reasonable classification in making laws. The test of permissible classification under an Act lies in two cumulative conditions: (i) classification under the Act must be founded on an intelligible differentia distinguishing persons, transactions or things grouped together from others left out of the group; and (ii) the differentia has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act: there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act: Chiranjit Lal Chowdhuri's case, 1950 SCR 869= (AIR 1951 SC 41); State of Bombay v. F. N. Balsara, (1951) SCR 682= (AIR 1951 SC 318); State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, 1952 SCR 284= (AIR 1952 SC 75); Budhan Choudhry v. State of Bihar, (1955) 1 SCR 1045= (AIR 1955 SC 191); Ram Krishna Dalmia v. S. R. Tendolkar, 1959 SCR 279 at p. 300= (AIR 1958 SC 538 at p. 542); and State of Rajasthan v. Mukandchand, (1964) 6 SCR 903 at p. 910 = (AIR 1964 SC 1633 at p. 1635).

79. The Courts recognize in the Legislature some degree of elasticity in the matter of making a classification between persons, objects and transactions. Provided the classification is based on some intelligible ground, the Courts will not strike down that classification, because in the view of the Court it should have proceeded on some other ground or should have included the class selected for special treatment some other persons, objects or transactions which are not included by the Legislature. The Legislature is free to recognize the degree of harm and to restrict the operation of a law only to those cases where the need is the clearest. The Legislature need not extend the regulation of a law to all cases it may possibly reach, and may make a classification founded on practical grounds of convenience. Classification to be valid must, however, disclose a rational nexus with the object sought to be achieved by the law which makes the classification. Validity of a classification will be upheld only if that test is independently satisfied. The Court in examining the validity of a statute challenged as infringing the equality clause makes an assumption that there is a reasonable classification and that the classification has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute.

80. By the definition of existing bank in Section 2 (d) of the Act, fourteen named banks in the First Schedule are, out of many commercial banks engaged in the business of banking, selected for special treatment, in that the undertaking of the named banks is taken over, they are prevented from carrying on in India and abroad banking business and the Act operates in practice to prevent those banks engaging in business other than banking.

81. By reason of the transfer of the undertaking of the named banks, the interests of the banks and the shareholders are vitally affected. Investment in bank-shares is regarded in India, especially in the shares of larger banks, as a safe investment on attractive terms with a steady return and fluidity of conversion. Mr. Palkhivala has handed in a statement setting out the percentage return of dividend on market rates in 1968. The rate works out at more than 10 per cent in the case of the shares of Bank of Baroda, Central Bank of India, Dena Bank, Indian Bank, United Bank and United Commercial Bank; and at more than 9 per cent in the case of shares of Bank of India, Bank of Maharashtra, Canara Bank, Indian Bank, Indian Overseas Bank and United Bank of India. In the case of Allahabad Bank it worked out at 5 per cent, and in the case of shares of Punjab National Bank and Syndicate Bank the rates are not available. This statement is not challenged. Since the taking over of the undertaking, there has resulted a steep fall in the ruling market quotations of the shares of a majority of the named banks. The market quotations have slumped to less than 50 per cent in the case of Bank of India, Central Bank, Bank of Baroda and even at the quoted rates probably there are no transactions. Dividend may no longer be distributed, for the banks have no liquid assets and they are not engaged in any commercial activity. It may take many years before the compensation payable to the banks may even be finalized, and be available to the named banks for utilising it in any commercial venture open to the banks under the Act. Under the scheme of determination of compensation, the total amount payable to the banks will be a fraction of the value of their net assets, and that compensation will not be available to the Banks immediately.

82. The ground for selection of the 14 banks is that those banks held deposits, as shown in the return as on the last Friday of June 1969, furnished to the Reserve Bank under Section 27 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, of not less than rupees fifty crores.

83. The object of Act 22 of 1969 is according to the long title to provide for the acquisition and transfer of the undertakings of certain banking companies in order to serve better the needs of development of the economy in conformity with the national policy and objectives and matters connected therewith or incidental thereto. The national policy may reasonably be taken to be policy contained in the directive principles of State policy, especially Articles 38 and 39 of the Constitution. For achieving the needs of a developing economy in conformity with the national policy and objectives, the resources of all the banks — foreign as well as Indian — are inadequate. Of the total deposits with commercial banks 27 per cent are with the State Bank of India and its subsidiaries; the named commercial banks of which the undertaking is taken over hold approximately 56 per cent of the deposits. The remaining 17 per cent of the deposits are shared by the foreign banks and the other scheduled and non-scheduled commercial banks. 83 per cent of the total resources may obviously not meet wholly or even substantially the needs of development of the economy.

84. In support of the plea that there is a reasonable relation between the differentia — ground for making the distinction between the named banks and the other banks — Indian and foreign — and the object of the Act, it is urged that the policy of the Union is to control the concentration of private economic resources to ensure achievement of the directive principles of State policy, and for that purpose, selection has been made "with an eye, inter alia, to the magnitude and concentration of the economic resources of such enterprises for inclusion in such law as would be essential or substantially conducive to the achievement of the national objectives and policy." It is apparently claimed that the object of the Government — not of the statute — is to acquire ultimately all banking institutions, but the 14 named banks are selected for acquisition because they have "larger business and wider coverage" in comparison with other banks not selected, and had also larger organization, better managerial resources and employees better trained and equipped. These are primarily grounds for classification and not for explaining the relation between the classification and the object of the Act. But in the absence of any reliable data, we do not think it necessary to express an opinion on the question whether selection of the undertaking of some out of many banking institutions, for compulsory acquisition, is liable to be struck down as hostile discrimination, on the ground that there is no reasonable relation between the differentia and the object of the Act which cannot be substantially served even by the acquisition of the undertakings of all the banks out of which the selection is made.

85. It is claimed that the depositors with the named banks have also a grievance. Those depositors who had made long-term deposits, taking into account the confidence they had in the management of the banks and the service they rendered, are now called upon to trust the management of a statutory corporation not selected by them, without an opportunity of being placed in the same position in which they would have been if they were permitted to transfer their deposits elsewhere. The argument is based on several imponderables and does not require any detailed consideration.

86. But two other grounds in support of the plea of impairment of the guarantee of equality clause require to be noticed. The fourteen named banks are prohibited from carrying on banking business — a disability for which there is no rational explanation. Banks other than the named banks may carry on banking business in India and abroad: new banks may be floated for carrying on banking business, but the named banks are prohibited from carrying on banking business. Each named bank had, even as claimed on behalf of the Union, by its superior management established an extensive business organization, and each bank had deposits exceeding Rs. 50 crores. The undertakings of the banks are taken over and they are prohibited from doing banking business. In the affidavit filed on behalf of the Union no serious attempt is made to explain why the named banks should be specially selected for being subjected to this disability.

87. The petitioner also contended that the classification is made on a wholly irrational ground, viz., penalizing efficiency and good management, for the major fourteen banks had made a sustained effort and had exceeded the Reserve Bank target and had fully complied with the directives under the social control legislation. This, it is said, is a reversal of the policy underlying Section 36AE of the Banking Regulation Act under which inefficient and recalcitrant banks are contemplated to be taken over by the Government. We need express no opinion on this part of the argument. But the petitioner is on firm ground in contending that when after acquiring the assets, undertaking, organization, goodwill and the names of the named banks they are prohibited from carrying on banking business, whereas other banks — Indian as well as foreign — are permitted to carry on banking business, a flagrantly hostile discrimination is practised. Section 15 (2) of the Act which by the clearest implication prohibits the named banks from carrying on banking business is, therefore, liable to be struck down. It is immaterial whether the entire sub-section (2) is struck down or as suggested by the Attorney-General that only the words "other than the business of banking" in Section 15 (2) (e) be struck down. Again, in considering the validity of Section 15 (2) (e) in its relation to the guarantee of freedom to carry on business other than banking, we have already pointed out that the named banks are also, (though theoretically competent) in substance prohibited from carrying on non-banking business. For reasons set out by us for holding that the restriction is unreasonable, it must also be held that the guarantee of equality is impaired by preventing the named banks carrying on the non-banking business.

88. The guarantee under Article 31 (2) arises directly out of the restrictions imposed upon the power of the State to acquire private property, without the consent of the owner for a public purpose. Upon the exercise of the power to acquire or requisition property, by clause (2) two restrictions are placed: (a) power to acquire shall not be exercised save for a public purpose; and (b) that it shall not be exercised save by authority of a law which provides for compensation for the property acquired or requisitioned, and fixes the amount of compensation or specifies the principles on which and the manner in which the compensation is to be determined and given. Sub-clause (2A) in substance provides a definition of "compulsory acquisition or requisitioning of property". Existence of a public purpose and provision for giving compensation for compulsory acquisition of property of an individual are conditions of the exercise of the power. If either condition be absent, the guarantee under Article 31 (2) is impaired, and the law providing for acquisition will be invalid. But jurisdiction of the Court to question the law on the ground that compensation provided thereby is not adequate is, expressly excluded.

89. In the case before us we need not express any opinion on the question whether a composite undertaking of two or more distinct lines of business may be acquired where there is a public purpose for acquisition of the assets of one or more lines of business, but not in respect of all the lines of business. As we have already observed, there is no evidence that the named banks carried on non-banking business, distinct from banking business, and in respect of such non-banking business the banks owned distinct assets apart from the assets of the banking business.

90. The law providing for acquisition must again either fix the amount of compensation or specify the principles on which, and the manner in which, the compensation is to be determined and given. The owner whose property is compulsorily acquired is guaranteed the right to receive compensation and the amount of compensation must either be fixed by the law or be determined according to the principles and in the manner specified by the law. The law which does not ensure the guarantee will, except where the grievance only is that the compensation provided by the law is inadequate, be declared void.

91. The petitioner says that the expression "compensation" means a "just equivalent" in money of the property acquired and that the law providing for compulsory acquisition must "aim" at a just equivalent to the expropriated owner: if the law so aims at, it will not be deemed to impair the guarantee merely on the ground that the compensation paid to the owner is inadequate. The Attorney-General on the other hand says that "compensation" in Article 31 (2) does not mean a just equivalent, and it is not predicated of the validity of a law relating to compulsory acquisition that it must aim at awarding a just equivalent, for, if the law is not confiscatory, or the principles for determination of compensation are not irrelevant, "the Courts cannot go into the propriety of such principles or adequacy or reasonableness of the compensation".

92. Two questions immediately arise for determination. What is the true meaning of the expression "compensation" as used in Article 31 (2), and what is the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court when the validity of a law providing for compulsory acquisition of property for a public purpose is challenged?

92-A. In its dictionary meaning "compensation" means anything given to make things equal in value: anything given as an equivalent, to make amends for loss or damage. In all States where the rule of law prevails, the right to compensation is guaranteed by the Constitution or regarded as inextricably involved in the right to property.

93. By the 5th Amendment in the Constitution of the U. S. A. the right of eminent domain is expressly circumscribed by providing "Nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation". Such a provision is to be found also in every State Constitution in the United States: Lewis' Eminent Domain, 3rd Edn., (pp. 28-50). The Japanese Constitution, 1946, by Article 25 provides a similar guarantee. Under the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution, 1900, the Commonwealth Parliament is invested with the power of acquisition of property on "just terms": Section 57 (XXXI).

94. Under the Common Law of England, principles for payment of compensation for acquisition of property by the State are stated by Blackstone in his "Commentaries on the Laws of England", 4th Edn., Vol. 1, at p. 109:

"So great moreover is the regard of the law for private property, that it will not authorise the least violation of it; no, not even for the general good of the whole community. * * * Besides, the public good is in nothing more essentially interested, than in the protection of every individual's private rights, as modelled by the municipal law. In this and similar cases, the legislature alone can, and indeed frequently does interpose, and compel the individual to acquiesce. But how does it interpose and compel? Not by absolutely stripping the subject of his property in an arbitrary manner; but giving him a full indemnification and equivalent for the injury thereby sustained. The public is now considered as an individual, treating with an individual for an exchange. All that the legislature does, is to oblige the owner to alienate his possession for a reasonable price: " " " "

The British Parliament is supreme and its powers are not subject to any constitutional limitations. But the British Parliament has rarely, if at all, exercised power to take property without payment of the cash value of the property taken. In Attorney-General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel, 1920 AC 508, the House of Lords held that the Crown is not entitled as of right either by virtue of its prerogative or under any statute, to take possession of the land or building of a subject for administrative purposes in connection with the defence of the realm, without compensation for their use and occupation.

95. Under the Government of India Act, 1935, by Section 299 (2) it was enacted that:

"Neither the Federal or a Provincial Legislature shall have power to make any law authorising the compulsory acquisition for public purposes of any land, or any commercial or industrial undertaking, or any interest in, or in any company owning, any commercial or industrial undertaking, unless the law provides for the payment of compensation for the property acquired and either fixes the amount of the compensation, or specifies the principles on which, and the manner in which, it is to be determined." Article 31 (2) before it was amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955, followed substantially the same pattern.

96. Prior to the amendment of Article 31 (2) this Court interpreted the expression "compensation" as meaning "full indemnification". Patanjali Sastri, C. J., in State of West Bengal v. Mrs. Bela Banerjee, (1954) SCR 558 = (AIR 1954 SC 170) in interpreting the guarantee under Article 31 (2), speaking on behalf of the Court observed:

"While it is true that the legislature is given the discretionary powers of laying down the principles which should govern the determination of the amount to be given to the owner for the property appropriated, such principles must ensure that what is determined as payable must be compensation that is, a just equivalent of what the owner has been deprived of. Within the limits of this basic requirement of full indemnification of the expropriated owner, the Constitution allows free play to the legislative judgment as to what principles should guide the determination of the amount payable. Whether such principles take into account all the elements which make up the true value of the property appropriated and exclude matters which are to be neglected, is a justiciable issue to be adjudicated by the Court."

In the view of the learned Chief Justice the expression "just equivalent" meant "full indemnification" and the expropriated owner was on that account entitled to the market value of the property on the date of deprivation of the property. This case was decided under a statute enacted before the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act 1955. The principle of that case was approved in N. B. Jeejeebhoy v. Asst. Collector, Thana Prant, Thana, (1965) 1 SCR 636 = (AIR 1965 SC 1096) — a case under the Land Acquisition (Bombay Amendment) Act, 1948, and invoking the guarantee under Section 299 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935; in Union of India v. Kamla-bai Harjiwandas, (1968) 1 SCR 463 = (AIR 1968 SC 377) — a case under the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952; and in State of Madras v. D. Namasivaya Mudaliar, (1964) 6 SCR 936 = (AIR 1965 SC 190) — a case arising under the Madras Lignite Acquisition of Land Act, 1953.

97. Article 31 (2) was amended with effect from April 27, 1955, by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955. By sub-clause (2A) a definition of acquisition or requisitioning of properties was supplied and certain other formal changes were also made, with the important reservation that "no such law shall be called in question in any Court on the ground that the compensation provided by that law is not adequate". In cases arising under statutes enacted after April 27, 1955, this Court held that the expression "compensation" in Article 31 (2) as amended continued to mean "just equivalent" as under the unamended clause: P. Vajravelu Mudaliar v. Special Deputy Collector, Madras, (1965) 1 SCR 614 = (AIR 1965 SC 1017) — under the Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act 23 of 1961; Union of India v. Metal Corporation of India Ltd., (1967) 1 SCR 255 = (AIR 1967 SC 637) under the Metal Corporation of India (Acquisition of Undertakings) Act 44 of 1955; Lachhman Dass v. Municipal Committee, Jalalabad, AIR 1969 SC 1125 under Sec. 20B of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act 1954, as amended by Act

2 of 1960. In Ranojirao Shinde's case, (1968) 3 SCR 489= (AIR 1968 SC 1053) dealing with a case under the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Cash Grants Act 16 of 1963 it was observed that the compensation referred to in Article 31 (2) is a just equivalent of the value of the property taken. But this Court in State of Gujarat v. Shantilal Mangaldas, AIR 1969 SC 634 observed that compensation payable for compulsory acquisition of property is not, by the application of any principles, determinable as a precise sum, and by calling it a "just" or "fair" equivalent, no definiteness could be attached thereto; that valuation of lands, buildings and incorporeal rights has to be made on the application of different principles, e.g., capitalization of net income at appropriate rates, reinstatement, determination of original value reduced by depreciation, break-up value of properties which had outgrown their utility; that the rules relating to determination of value of lands, buildings, machinery and other classes of property differ, and the application of several methods or principles lead to widely divergent amounts, and since compensation is not capable of precise determination by the application of recognized rules, by qualifying the expression "compensation" by the adjective "just", the determination was made more controversial. It was observed that the Parliament amended the Constitution by the Fourth Amendment Act declaring that adequacy of compensation fixed by the Legislature as amended according to the principles specified by the Legislature for determination will not be justiciable. It was then observed that:

"The right declared by the Constitution guarantees that compensation shall be given before a person is compulsorily expropriated of his property for a public purpose. What is fixed as compensation by statute; or by the application of principles specified for determination of compensation is guaranteed; it does not mean, however, that something fixed or determined by the application of specified principles which is illusory or can in no sense be regarded as compensation must be upheld by the Courts for, to do so, would be to grant charter of arbitrariness and permit a device to defeat the constitutional guarantee. But compensation fixed or determined on principles specified by the Legislature cannot be permitted to be challenged on the somewhat indefinite plea that it is not a just or fair equivalent. Principles may be challenged on the ground that they are irrelevant to the determination of compensation, but not on the plea that what is awarded as a result of the application of those principles is not just or fair compensation. A challenge to a statute that the principles specified by it do not award a just equivalent will be in clear violation of the constitutional declaration that inadequacy of compensation provided is not justiciable.

98. This Court held in Mrs. Bela Banerjee's case, 1954 SCR 558= (AIR 1954 SC 170) that by the guarantee of the right to compensation for compulsory acquisition under Article 31 (2), before it was amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, the owner was entitled to receive a "just equivalent" or "full indemnification". In P. Vajravelu Mudaliar's case, (1965) 1 SCR 614= (AIR 1965 SC 1017) this Court held that notwithstanding the amendment of Article 31 (2) by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, and even after the addition of the words "and no such law shall be called in question in any Court on the ground that the compensation provided by that law is not adequate", the expression "compensation" occurring in Article 31 (2) after the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act continued to have the same meaning as it had in Section 299 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935, and Article 31 (2) before it was amended, viz., "just equivalent" or "full indemnification".

99. There was apparently no dispute that Article 31 (2) before and after it was amended guaranteed a right to compensation for compulsory acquisition of property and that by giving to the owner, for compulsory acquisition of his property, compensation which was illusory, or determined by the application of principles which were irrelevant, the constitutional guarantee of compensation was not complied with. There was difference of opinion on one matter between the decisions in P. Vajravelu Mudaliar's case, (1965) 1 SCR 614= (AIR 1965 SC 1017) and Shantilal Mangaldas's case, AIR 1969 SC 634. In the former case it was observed that the constitutional guarantee was satisfied only if a just equivalent of the property was given to the owner: in the latter case it was held that "compensation" being itself incapable of any precise determination, no definite connotation could be attached thereto by calling it "just equivalent" or "full indemnification", and under Acts enacted after the amendment of Article 31 (2) it is not open to the Court to call in question the law providing for compensation on the ground that it is inadequate, whether the amount of compensation is fixed by the law or is to be determined according to principles specified therein. It was observed in the judgment in Shantilal Mangaldas case, AIR 1969 SC 634 at p. 651:

"Whatever may have been the meaning of the expression 'compensation' under the unamended Article 31 (2), when the Parliament has expressly enacted under the amended clause that 'no such law shall be called in question in any Court on the ground that the compensation provided by that law is not adequate', it was intended clearly to exclude from the jurisdiction of the Court an enquiry that what is fixed or determined by the application of the principles specified as compensation does not award to the owner a just equivalent of what he is deprived."

In P. Vajravelu Mudaliar's case, (1965) 1 SCR 614= (AIR 1965 SC 1017) again the Court in dealing with the effect of the amendment observed (at p. 627) (of SCR)= (at p. 1024 of AIR):

"Therefore, a more reasonable interpretation is that neither the principles prescribing the 'just equivalent' nor the 'just equivalent' can be questioned by the Court on the ground of the inadequacy of the compensation fixed or arrived at by the working of the principles. To illustrate a law is made to acquire a house; its value at the time of acquisition has to be fixed; there are many modes of valuation, namely, estimate by an engineer, value reflected by comparable sales, capitalisation of rent and similar others. The application of different principles may lead to different results. The adoption of one principle may give a higher value and the adoption of another principle may give a lesser value. But nonetheless they are principles on which and the manner in which compensation is determined. The Court cannot obviously say that the law should have adopted one principle and not the other, for it relates only to the question of adequacy. On the other hand, if a law lays down principles which are not relevant to the property acquired, or to the value of the property at or about the time it is acquired, it may be said that they are not principles contemplated by Article 31 (2) of the Constitution."

The Court then applied that principle to the facts of the case and held that the Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act, 1961, which provided that — (i) the owner of land acquired for housing shall get only the value of the land at the date of the notification under Section 4 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, or an amount equivalent to the average market value of the land during the last five years immediately preceding such date, whichever was less; (ii) the owner shall get a solatium of only 5 per cent, and not 15 per cent, and (iii) in valuing the land acquired any increase in its suitability or adaptability for any use other than the use to which the land was put at the date of the notification under Section 4 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, shall not be taken into consideration did not impair the right to receive compensation. The Court observed at p. 631 (of SCR)= (at p. 1026 of AIR):

"In awarding compensation if the potential value of the land is excluded, it cannot be said that the compensation awarded is the just equivalent of what the owner has been deprived of. But such an exclusion only pertains to the method of ascertaining the compensation. One of the elements that should properly be taken into account in fixing the compensation is omitted: it results in the adequacy of the compensation. * * *. We, therefore, hold that the Amending Act does not offend Article 31 (2) of the Constitution."

The compensation provided by the Madras Act, according to the principles specified, was not the full market value at the date of acquisition. It did not amount to "full indemnification" of the owner: the Court still held that the law did not offend the guarantee under Article 31 (2) as amended, because the objection was only as to the adequacy of compensation. In Shantilal Mangaldas case, AIR 1969 SC 634, the Court held that the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, Article 31 (2) guarantees a right to receive compensation for loss of property compulsorily acquired, but compensation does not mean a just equivalent of the property. If compensation is provided by law to be paid and the compensation is not illusory or is not determinable by the application of irrelevant principles, the law is not open to challenge on the ground that compensation fixed or determined to be paid is inadequate.

100. Both the lines of thought which converge in the ultimate result, support ing of the word 'chemical'. It is also defined as 'pertaining to chemistry' (2). This is indeed the popular meaning of the word. And by this definition, sodium silicate will be classed as a chemical.

14. In sum, having regard to the differing purposes and differing environments of science and Sales Tax Act and two meanings of the term 'chemical' in science itself I cannot persuade myself to agree that the term should be given the stricter meaning. On the other hand, having regard to the principles of interpretation concerning Sales Tax Acts, the word should be construed in the commercial sense. And so construed, it will certainly comprehend sodium silicate. Sodium silicate is described under the heading of inorganic compounds in the Handbook of Chemistry and Physics. (3) It is mentioned under the heading of 'Fine and Pharmaceutical Chemicals' in the General Catalogue issued by E. Merck (4) under the heading of 'Organic and Inorganic Chemicals for Laboratory Use' in the Laboratory Chemicals Catalogue issued by the British Drug Houses Ltd., (5) and under the heading of 'Organic and Inorganic Chemicals' in the Catalogue issued by Vora Brothers. (6).

15. It is manifest from these catalogues that sodium silicate is regarded as a chemical by dealers in chemicals in the U. S. A., Germany, England and India. Their opinion is in accord with the dictionary meaning of the word 'chemical'. According to Shorter Oxford Dictionary 'chemical' means anything obtained or used in chemistry. The word has been judicially construed in the U. S. A. There it means a substance used for producing a chemical effect or produced by a chemical process. (*) Judged by these meanings sodium silicate is a chemical for it is produced by fusing together sodium carbonate and silicate.

16. The passage which I have extracted from the decision of the Judge (Revisions) shows two errors in his reasoning. Firstly, the use of a substance in a chemical process or chemical industry is not the sole test of it being a chemical. I do not know if lithnem bicarbonate is used in any chemical process or chemical industry but it is undisputedly a chemical. Secondly, he is also wrong in thinking that sodium silicate is not used as a detergent in soap industry. These errors are adequately exposed in the Banaras Chemical's case, 1967-20 STC 246 (All) and it is not necessary to repeat what has already been said there.

17. I have already pointed out the flaw in the question referred to us. I shall accordingly reframe the question as follows:—

"Whether sodium silicate is included in 'chemicals of all kinds' in Item No. 7 of Notification No. ST-905/X, dated March 31, 1956?"

18. My answer to the question, so re-framed, is in the affirmative.

19. PATHAK J. :— The assessee manufactures and deals in sodium silicate and washing soap. He was assessed to sales tax for the assessment year 1958-59 on a turnover of sodium silicate amounting to Rs. 98,028.00. The turnover was taxed at the rate of one anna per rupee on the footing that sodium silicate fell under the head 'chemicals of all kinds' appearing at Item No. 7 of Notification No. ST-905/X, dated March 31, 1956. The Assistant Commissioner (Judicial) Sales Tax, on appeal by the assessee took the same view. But the Additional Revising Authority, Sales Tax, exercising his revisional jurisdiction, held that sodium silicate is not a chemical when used in the soap industry. At the instance of the Commissioner of Sales Tax this reference has been made on the following question:

"Whether sodium silicate as used in the manufacture of soap is included in 'chemicals of all kinds' appearing at Item 7 of the notification No. ST-905/X dated March 31, 1956?"

20. A similar question was raised in 1967-20 STC 246 (All) where a Division Bench of this Court expressed the view that sodium silicate was a chemical within the meaning of the entry in the aforesaid Notification. When the present reference came before a Bench consisting of two of us (Pathak and Gulati, JJ.) it was urged that as the question framed is limited to the use of sodium silicate in the manufacture of soap, then having regard to that use it must be held that sodium silicate is not a chemical. As it appeared, on the submissions then made, that the point decided in Banaras Chemicals, 1967-20 STC 246 (All) (Supra) called for further consideration the case was referred to a larger Bench.

21. Section 3 of the U. P. Sales Tax Act charges tax for each assessment year on the turnover of every dealer at the rate specified therein. Section 3 is open to a construction under which every sale of an article in a series of sales by successive dealers attracts the tax. Section 3-A was then enacted. It empowers the State Government to specify that the tax will be levied only at such single point in the series of sales by successive dealers as the State Government may specify. It confers the further power upon the State Government to declare the rate of tax in respect of such turnover. Under Sec. 3-A the State Government made Notification No. ST-905/X, dated March 31, 1956, declaring the single point at which the turnover of certain goods would be liable to sales tax and further declaring that the rate of tax would be one anna per rupee. The goods were specified in a List made part of the Notification. As examination of the List shows that some entries refer to specific commodities, such as "cigars, cigarettes and pipe tobacco", while other entries mention a general head or class of goods capable of including a number of commodities falling within it, as for example 'electrical goods' and 'jute goods'.

22. Not infrequently, the question arises whether a commodity sold by a dealer can be said to be covered within an entry in the Notification. The principles on which the question must be resolved are, I think, now well settled. The U. P. Sales Tax Act provides for the levy of a tax on the sale or purchase of goods. The tax is levied on a dealer, and a 'dealer' has been defined by Section 2 (c) of the Act as a person buying or selling goods. I think it to be beyond dispute that as the U. P. Sales Tax Act is a fiscal statute providing for the levy of a tax on the dealer, reference to the goods or class of goods mentioned in the sections of the Act or the Notification made under it must be understood in the sense in which a dealer carrying on the business of buying or selling those goods would understand it. What is relevant is how such reference should be understood in the commercial sense.

23. In Ramavatar Budhaiprasad v. Assistant Sales Tax Officer, AIR 1961 SC 1325 = 1962-1 SCR 279 the Supreme Court, considering whether betel leaves were 'vegetables' within the meaning of that expression in the Schedule to the C. P. and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947, held that the expression 'vegetables'.

".....must be construed not in any technical sense nor from the botanical point of view but as understood in common parlance. It has not been defined in the Act and being a word of every day use it must be construed in its popular sense meaning 'that sense which people conversant with the subject-matter with which the statute is dealing would attribute to it.' It is to be understood as used in common language."

The Court held the expression 'vegetables' to refer to the class of vegetables which are grown in a kitchen garden or in a farm and are used for the table. Reference was made by the Supreme Court to 1951 CLR (Ex) 122 where Cameron, J. of the Exchequer Court of Canada observed:

"..... the rule is that the particular words used by the Legislature in the denomination of articles are to be understood according to the common commercial understanding of the terms used, and not in their scientific or technical sense, 'for the Legislature does not suppose our merchants to be naturalists, or geologists, or botanists.' A perusal of the consumption or sales tax sections of the Act (Part XIII) and of the list of exemptions set out in Schedule III is sufficient to indicate that Parliament, in enacting the sections and the schedule, was not using words which were applied to any particular science or art, and that, therefore, the words used are to be construed as they are understood in common language. To the words 'fruit' and 'vegetables', therefore, there must be given the meaning which they would have when used in the popular sense — that sense which people conversant with the subject-matter with which the statute is dealing would attribute to it. Now the statute affects nearly everyone, the producer or manufacturer, the importer, wholesaler and retailer, and finally, the consumer who, in the last analysis, pays the tax. Parliament would not suppose it as Act of this character that manufacturers, producers, importers, consumers and others who would be affected by the Act, would be botanists. The object of the Excise Tax Act is to raise revenue, and for this purpose to class substances according to the general usage and known denominations of trade. In my view, therefore, it is not the botanist's conception as to what constitutes a 'fruit' or 'vegetables' which must govern the interpretation to be placed on the words, but rather what would ordinarily in matters of commerce in Canada be included therein. Botanically, oranges and lemons are berries, but otherwise no one would consider them as such."

24. The point was considered recently by the Supreme Court in AIR 1967 SC 1454 and the Supreme Court reiterated that while interpreting items in statutes like the Sales Tax Acts resort must be had not to the scientific or the technical meaning of such terms but to their popular meaning or the meaning attached to them by those dealing in them, that is to say, to their commercial sense.

25. So, how is the entry "chemicals of all kinds" in the Notification of March 31, 1956 to be construed? It is to be construed in its commercial sense, that is, according to the general usage and known denominations of trade. It is the sense in which a dealer carrying on the business of selling chemicals and a purchaser buying them would understand the expression "chemicals of all kinds". A dealer selling chemicals offers them for sale because he considers them saleable. They are saleable because they can be the subject of use of consumption or profit to a prospective buyer, and that depends upon their properties. A commodity is offered for sale as a chemical because of its chemical properties. Therefore, the entry "chemicals of all kinds" refers to those commodities which because of their chemical properties prompt a dealer to offer them for sale and induce a purchaser to buy them.

26. It has been contended that a commodity is a chemical if it is the product or result of a chemical process or a chemical reaction. It seems to me that while that test may afford a basis to the chemist or scientist for the purpose of classifying a substance it would hardly be relevant in an activity where the primary actors, a dealer selling and a purchaser buying, are principally interested in its properties.

27. In Thorpe's Dictionary of Applied Chemistry (7) the varied uses of which sodium silicate is capable have been outlined. It is pointed out that the adhesive properties of sodium silicate solutions are similar to those of many organic colloids and have the advantages of being odourless, heatproof and of becoming eventually insoluble. The cardboard and paper industries use sodium silicate for production of corrugated and high finished printing papers. The textile industry also makes extensive use of sodium silicate. When used for silk-wetting, the silicate strengthens the fibre of the article. Mercerising of cotton is found to be improved by substituting sodium silicate for sodium hydroxide. Many articles of clothing are treated with silicates to reduce fire hazard. Its adhesive and wetting properties allow the use of sodium silicate as a binding material for numerous materials. It is used as a mordant and fixing agent in the dyeing and printing industry, and as a constituent of lead-free enamels for glazing pans. Small water systems can be protected from corrosion by sodium silicate. It is now finding application in the welding and degreasing industries. Plastics from sodium silicate and phenol, suitable for coating paper and cloth, have been made. As an anti-pyrogenic in coal mines, sodium silicate is used in conjunction with calcium chloride and sodium bicarbonate in decreasing the oxygen absorbed by coal dust. A familiar domestic application of sodium silicate is its use as an egg preservative. Sodium silicate may be used in medicine as a therapeutic against tuberculosis. The use of sodium silicate in the soap industry is well established. During the Second World War its use for this purpose was greatly increased owing to the shortage of fats. It not only replaces the fat, but in some respect improves the quality of the soap. It is nearly always used whenever an inorganic detergent is required.

28. It may be possible to say that the detergent action of sodium silicate may be attributed to its physical properties rather than to its chemical properties and, therefore, in that sense, when used in the manufacture of soap it may not be regarded as a chemical. But that is not the only use to which sodium silicate is employed commercially. It is capable of a large number of uses, some of which have been mentioned above, and it is apparent from what has been said above that it has many chemical qualities which make it a valuable commodity for sale in the market. The Additional Revising Authority limited the enquiry to the application of sodium silicate in the manufacture of soap. In my opinion, he was not justified in doing so. Whether a commodity can be described as a 'chemical' for the purpose of the entry in the Notification must be determined not by the use for which a particular purchaser buys it but with reference to the general properties which make it saleable to the entire range of prospective buyers. Upon that view of the matter, sodium silicate, in my opinion, is a chemical within the meaning of the expression 'chemicals of all kinds' mentioned at item No. 7 in the Notification No. ST-905/X, dated March 31, 1956.

29. I reframe the question as follows: "Whether sodium silicate is included in 'chemicals of all kinds' appearing at Item No. 7 of Notification No. ST-905/X, dated 31-3-1956?"

and answer the question so reframed in the affirmative.

30. The Commissioner of Sales Tax is entitled to his costs, which I assess at Rs. 100. Counsel's fee is assessed in the same figure.

31. GULATI J.:— I have had the advantage of reading the judgment prepared by brother Dwivedi, J. While I agree with the final answer to the question proposed by brother Dwivedi, I feel it necessary to add a few words by way of elucidation.

32. The question which has been referred to us for our opinion reads thus:

"Whether Sodium Silicate as used in the manufacture of soap is included in "chemicals of all kinds" appearing at item 7 of the notification dated 31-3-1956."

33. The question as framed is not as to whether sodium silicate is a chemical, but whether sodium silicate would be a chemical when used in the manufacture of soap. The answer to this question would depend upon as to whether sodium silicate when used in the manufacture of soap undergoes or brings about a chemical process. This is purely a technical question. A chemical process must necessarily involve a chemical change or a chemical reaction represented by a chemical equation resulting in the production of a chemical compound. All these are technical terms. In the Concised Dictionary of Sciences by F. Gaynor some of these technical words have been defined as under:

"Chemical Change:

"A rearrangement of atoms or molecules into chemically different structures, the substances undergoing such a change as to lose their original identity."

Chemical re-action:

"Any chemical change or transformation of molecules of one kind into molecules of another kind brought about by the rearrangement of atoms when two or more elements or compounds are brought into contact under given conditions."

Chemical equation:

"A symbolic representation of a chemical reaction showing the relation between the substances and their products, e.g. $\text{Zn} + 2\text{HCl} = \text{Zinc Chloride} + \text{Hydrogen}$."

Chemical Exchange Reaction:

"A process in which an atom of a certain chemical substance exchanges place with a similar atom in a different substance."

Chemical compound:

"A substance composed of two or more elements combined in definite proportions by weight, the individual properties of the constituents having disappeared and the later being inseparable by physical means."

34. Sodium silicate, in the manufacture of soap, is used either as a filler or as a detergent or both. It undergoes no chemical process, brings about no chemical change nor does it produce any chemical compound. The part that it plays in the manufacture of soap is purely mechanical.

35. In Thorpe's dictionary of Applied Chemistry' it is mentioned:

"The detergent action is a mechanical process by which dirt is removed by detergent solution which becomes attached to the oil globules and helps them float off the fibre."

Obviously, therefore, the question as framed is capable of only one answer, namely, that sodium silicate is not a chemical when used in the manufacture of soap.

36. In (1967) 20 STC 246 (All) the question was identically worded and the answer to that question could not have been in the affirmative. That is why I and brother Pathak felt that the case of the Benaras Chemicals, 1967-20 STC 246 (All) (Supra) requires reconsideration.

37. But, sodium silicate has variety of uses and its use in the manufacture of soap as a filler or detergent is only one of its uses. Item No. 7 of notification No. S. T. 905/X dated 31st March, 1956 contains no reference to the use of a particular chemical. The real question, therefore, was as to whether sodium silicate would fall within the expression 'chemicals of all kinds' as occurring in the notification of March 31, 1956. A question like that could not be circumscribed as has been done in the instant case. The meaning given to sodium silicate should be such as would be applicable in all circumstances, otherwise the result would be that sodium silicate would be a chemical in one case, but it would not be a chemical in another case. That would not be the correct way of answering a question of this nature. I therefore, agree with brother Dwivedi that the question should be reframed so as to exclude therefrom the reference to the use of sodium silicate in the manufacture of soap.

38. Now, the U. P. Sales Tax Act is concerned primarily with the (business community because) it seeks to levy tax on the total sales during a year of a dealer which, according to the definition given in the Act, means a person who carries on the business of buying and selling goods. Any entry in a notification issued under the U. P. Sales Tax Act, therefore, has to be interpreted in a sense in which it would be understood in the commercial world. I am, therefore, of opinion that the expression "chemicals of all kinds" has to be given not any technical or scientific meaning but a meaning which this term has in the commercial world. The term 'chemical' according to the books of chemistry has a very wide connotation inasmuch as anything that pertains to chemistry is regarded as a chemical. But that obviously is not the sense in which this term has been used in the notification in question because otherwise articles like gold, silver, iron and even plain water would be chemicals which admittedly are not regarded as chemicals in the popular sense.

39. The assessee M/s. Prayag Chemical Works, as its name suggests, is a dealer in chemicals. It deals in imported sodium silicate and also manufactures in its own factory sodium silicate which is popularly known as "soda silicate". Sodium silicate is manufactured by fusing together sand and soda-ash under high temperature. This process is definitely chemical, even though the chemical composition of the resultant product viz., sodium silicate is not always uniform; but that is immaterial because having a fixed chemical composition is not the only attribute of a chemical. From the order of the Judge (Appeals) dated 10-4-1961 it appears that the assessee admitted before him that it manufactures sodium silicate by chemical process. According to one of the definitions of the word "chemical" any substance which is produced by a chemical process is regarded as a chemical. As already stated above, the assessee manufactures sodium silicate by chemical process and sells it as a chemical. The mere fact that sodium silicate does not take part in a chemical reaction in the manufacture of soap does not make it anyhowless chemical. I would, therefore, reframe the question to read:

"Whether sodium silicate is included in "chemicals of all kinds" appearing at item No. 7 of notification No. S. T. 905/X dated 31st March, 1956."

40. BY THE COURT:— Our answer to the question, as reframed by us, is in the affirmative.

41. The Commissioner, Sales Tax, shall get costs which we assess at Rs. 100. Counsel's fee is assessed in the same figure.

Order accordingly.

JAGDISH SAHAI J.:— On a reference made by our brothers Broome and G. S. Lal, JJ. this appeal under Section 6-A of the Court-fees Act (U. P. Amendment) has been laid before us.

2. The respondent firm Thakur Prasad Kishori Lal brought the suit giving rise to this appeal for accounting and for the recovery of the sum found due after accounting to the plaintiff respondent from the defendant appellant Asharfi Lal. In the plaint the suit was valued at Rs. 300. Paragraph 10 of the plaint, which deals with the valuation of the suit reads:

"Yeh ki tayun maliyat dawa bagarz akhtiyar samayat wa adaya court-fees mublig 300 rupaiye kayam kiya jata hai, Baad kitab jis kadar rakam yaftani mudaiyyan jimmgi mudalaham ayad ho us per mudaiyyan rasum sarkari ada karenge."

3. The relief claimed in the plaint reads thus:

"(a) Basadur digri infsakh sarakhat darmiyan farikain saakatdari fiks kar di jawe aur mudalaham ko hukum di jawe ki hisab kitab samjha de aur hisab kitab darmiyan farikain kara diya jawe aur jo rakam mudaiyyan jimmgi mudalaham sabit ho uski digri khilaf mudalaham sadir ki jawe.

(b) Kharcha Mudaiyyan mudalaham se mile.

(c) Yeh ki alaba ya bajay ya basamul dadrasi majkoorwale ke ham mudaiyyan aur jis digar dadrasi ke mustahak badanist adalat karar pawe uske bhi digri bahaq mudaiyyan bahaq mudalaham sadir ki jawe."

4. On accounting it was found that a sum of Rs. 11, 825/50 was due to the plaintiff respondent from the defendant appellant but before the trial Court decreed the suit and passed a formal decree or signed it made the plaintiff respondent deposit ad valorem court-fee on the sum of Rs. 11,825/50.

5. Dissatisfied with the decree passed by the trial Court the defendant appellant appealed before the District Judge. In the memorandum of appeal the valuation was shown at Rs. 300 and Court fee was paid on that amount. The Munsarim of the District Judge's Court made an endorsement that the court-fee paid was sufficient and the appeal was registered but the plaintiff respondent made an application to the District Judge stating therein that the correct valuation of the appeal was Rs. 11,825/50 on which amount ad valorem court-fee was payable by the defendant appellant. The learned Additional District Judge agreeing with the contention made by the plaintiff respondent passed an order directing the defendant appellant to pay ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 11,825/50 and make good the deficiency to the extent to which the Court fee already paid was deficient.

6. The defendant appellant appealed to this Court under Section 6-A of the Court Fees Act (U. P. Amendment) and, as already stated earlier, the matter has come to this Full Bench on a reference made by two learned Judges of this Court.

7. We have heard Sri V. B. Khare for the defendant appellant and Sri S. N. Sahai for the plaintiff respondent. The only controversy between the parties is as to whether Section 7 (i) of the Court Fees Act (U. P. Amendment) or Sec. 7 (iv) (b) would be applicable. Sri. V. B. Khare contends that clearly the suit was one for accounts and inasmuch as there is a specific provision relating to accounts in the shape of Section 7 (iv) (b) the general provision contained in Section 7 (i) would not apply on the principle that the special would exclude the general. Sri S. N. Sahai, on the other hand, contends that inasmuch as a decree now has been passed for the recovery of a specific amount, i.e., the sum of Rs. 11,825/50 the special provision that will be applicable will be clause (1) of Section 7 of the Court Fees Act (U. P. Amendment).

8. We are not impressed by the submission of Sri V. B. Khare that a suit of accounts always remains a suit for accounts even though a money decree is passed after accounting has been done. Properly analysed a suit for accounts is nothing but a suit for recovery of money but only after the amount has been determined. Consequently we find no justification for the submission that a suit for accounts would always remain a suit for accounts even though the purpose for which accounting is held, i.e., to obtain a decree for the recovery of a specific amount of money, has been achieved and the sum recoverable specified.

9. We have seen the decree passed in this case. It is clearly one for recovery of the sum of Rs. 11,825/50. As pointed out earlier, the rendition or the taking of accounts is only incidental or ancillary and for the sole purpose of determining the exact amount due to the aggrieved party.

10. No direct authority has been brought to our notice which deals with the question raised before us. However, we find no difficulty in coming to the conclusion to which we have arrived, as stated above, on the basis of first principles. In circumstances similar to those before us it has been held by several High Courts on the basis of similar provisions that ad valorem court-fee would be payable on the amount determined after accounting. We may refer to only some of those cases e. g. Kashiram Senu v. Ranglal Motilal, AIR 1941 Bom 242; In re, Dhanukodi Nayakkar, AIR 1938 Mad 435 (FB) and Kanti Chandra v. Radha Raman, AIR 1929 Cal 815. The decision in Ghalib Rasool v. Mangu Lal, 1949 All LJ 90 = (AIR 1949 All 382) (FB) was also brought to our notice but in our opinion the facts of that case are entirely different from those before us and the decision is distinguishable.

11. From the reasons mentioned above we are of the opinion that the order passed by the learned Additional District Judge demanding from the defendant appellant ad valorem court-fee on the sum of Rupees 11,825/50 is correct. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Khurkhur, Applicant v. State through the Asst. Engineer, P. W. D., Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1492 of 1966, D/- 14-2-1969 against order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate (J.) Varanasi, D/- 25-7-1966.

(A) U. P. Roadside Land Control Act (10 of 1945), Ss. 13 (1), 3 — That area to which declaration under S. 3 (1) relates is a controlled area — Validity of, on ground of non-compliance with procedure prescribed by S. 3 (2) to (6) can be challenged by accused.

GM/HM/C980/69/YPB/B

It is open to an accused person to question the validity of the declaration under sub-section (1) of S. 3 on the ground that the procedure prescribed by sub-sections (2) to (6) has not been followed, even though sub-section (7) makes the declaration conclusive evidence of the fact that the area to which it relates is a controlled area. (Para 6)

The presumption under Section 3 (7) can only arise when the "declaration made under sub-section (1)" referred to therein is a valid declaration made in accordance with law. A declaration made without following the procedure laid down in sub-sections (2) to (6) will not be a legally or duly made declaration; and only a declaration duly made will attract the application of sub-section (7). Since Section 3 (7) does not state that the publication of the declaration under sub-s. (1) shall be conclusive evidence of the fact that the declaration has been made in accordance with the provisions of the Act, it cannot be held to shut out enquiry into the question whether the provisions of sub-sections (2) to (6) were complied with or not before making the declaration. AIR 1966 SC 693, Dist. (Paras 3, 4)

(B) U. P. Roadside Land Control Act (10 of 1945), S. 3 — Declaration under sub-section (1) — Whether procedure prescribed under sub-sections (2) to (6) was followed — Proof of.

Where the declaration under sub-section (1) of S. 3 has been made and the accused person does not raise the question that the procedure prescribed by sub-sections (2) to (6) was not followed before making the declaration, it is not necessary for the prosecution to establish that the provisions of these sub-sections have been complied with. (Para 7)

Once a Gazette notification embodying the declaration is produced before the Court, the presumption can legitimately be drawn that all the procedure required by law to be followed with regard to the said notification has in fact been followed, vide illustration (e) to Section 114 of the Evidence Act. It is only in two classes of cases that the prosecution is called upon to produce evidence to prove that sub-sections (2) to (6) have been complied with: (1) cases in which the accused challenges the validity of the declaration, specifying the alleged non-compliance; and (2) cases in which for some special reason the Court refuses to draw the presumption permitted by Section 114 of the Evidence Act. Roadside Land Control Act, 1945, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, with a further recurring fine of Rs. 20 per day in case of continuing contravention. He filed a revision in the Court of the A. D. M. (J.) Varanasi, and there for the first time raised the plea that the Gazette notification dated 29-12-1951, relied upon by the prosecution for the purpose of showing that the area in question was a "controlled area", had not been made in accordance with law, because the State Government had not published a preliminary declaration in two vernacular newspapers, as required by sub-section (2) of S. 3 of the Act. The learned A. D. M. (J.) repelled this argument on the ground that under sub-section (7) of S. 3 the notification was conclusive evidence that the area was a "controlled area" and that the prosecution was under no obligation to produce evidence to show that the procedure prescribed in sub-section (2) had been complied with before the notification was issued. Thereafter the present revision was filed in this Court and came up for hearing before S. D. Singh J., who being of opinion that it was desirable to obtain an authoritative interpretation of the scope of sub-section (7) of S. 3 of the Act, referred the following two questions to a larger Bench for decision:—

"(1) Whether it is open to an accused person to question the validity of a declaration made under sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the U. P. Roadside Land Control Act, 1945 on the ground that procedure prescribed under sub-sections (2) to (6) of Section 3 of the Act was not gone through at all or in some material respect, even though the aforesaid declaration is made conclusive evidence under sub-section (7) of the same section of the fact that the area to which it relates is a controlled area.

(2) In case this question is answered in the affirmative, will it be for the prosecution to establish in every case that the procedure prescribed under sub-sections (2) to (6) of S. 3 of the Act was gone through before a declaration was made under sub-section (1) of S. 3 of the Act or the necessary onus to establish the want of compliance will lie on the accused." The questions propounded by S. D. Singh, J. came up before a Division Bench of this Court; but that Bench, having discussed various rulings bearing on question of whether the provisions of sub-section (2) of S. 3 regarding publication in two vernacular newspapers were directory or mandatory, felt that consideration by a still larger Bench was required and that is how this revision has come before us.

2. As a matter of fact this whole controversy is totally unnecessary and pointless. On the face of it, it seemed to us highly unlikely that the State Government would have deliberately omitted to follow the procedure laid down in a section of the Act itself and accordingly we inquired from the learned Government Advocate what the factual position was; and the affidavit that was filed on 17-12-1968 in response to this query shows that in actual fact sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act has been fully complied with, inasmuch as the required notification was duly published in two vernacular newspapers, the 'Aaj' and the 'Qaumi Awaz', on 24-2-1950 and 23-2-1950 respectively. Copies of the newspapers in question, showing the publication of the notification, are appended to the affidavit.

3. However, as the questions have been referred to us for decision, we proceed to give our answers thereto. The first question relates to the scope of sub-sections (1) and (7) of S. 3 of the U. P. Roadside Land Control Act, which run as follows:—

3. Declaration of Controlled Area— (1) The State Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, declare any land within a distance of four hundred and forty yards from the centre line of any road to be a controlled area for the purposes of this Act:

(Provided that in the case of a national highway, the highway itself shall not be deemed to be a controlled area).

(7) A declaration made under sub-section (1) shall, unless and until it is withdrawn, be conclusive evidence of the fact that the area to which it relates is a controlled area.

At first sight it might seem that sub-section (7) was meant to endow the Gazette notification under sub-section (1) with special sanctity, preventing it from being challenged on any ground whatsoever. We are satisfied, however, that the presumption under sub-section (7) can only arise when the "declaration made under sub-section (1)" referred to therein is a valid declaration made in accordance with law. Sub-section (2) of S. 3 provides:

"3 (2)— Not less than three months before making a declaration under Section (1) the State Government shall cause to be published in the official Gazette and in at least two newspapers printed in a language other than English a notification stating that they propose to make such a declaration and specifying therein the boundaries of the land in respect of which the declaration is proposed to be made and copies of every such notification or of the substance thereof shall be published by the Collector in such manner as he thinks fit at his office and at such other places as he considers necessary within the said boundaries."

Sub-section (3) provides for the filing of objections by a person interested. Sub-sections (4) to (6) provide for the disposal of objections. The Act empowers the State Government to make the declaration under sub-section (1) of S. 3 only after complying with the procedure prescribed by sub-sections (2) to (6). A declaration made without following the procedure laid down in these sub-sections will not be a legally or duly made declaration; and only a declaration duly made will attract the application of sub-section (7).

4. Sub-section (7) does not make the declaration under sub-section (1) conclusive evidence of the fact that it has been made in accordance with the provisions of sub-sections (2) to (6), nor does it shut out enquiry by the Courts into the legality of the declaration. In this respect the language of sub-section (7) may be contrasted with the language used in sub-section (3) of S. 135 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, which says:—

135 (3) — A notification of the imposition of a tax under sub-section (2) shall be conclusive proof that the tax has been imposed in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

Section 135 (3) purports to shut out a challenge to the legality of the imposition on the ground that it has not been made in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Even in respect of this provision the Supreme Court has held in Municipal Board, Hapur v. Raghuvendra Kripal, AIR 1966 SC 693 that the rule of conclusive evidence in this section does not shut out all enquiries by Courts into the validity of the notification under Section 135 (2), though defects in respect of directory provisions may have its protection. However, since the language of the two provisions is different, the decisions in respect of Section 135 (3) of the U. P. Municipalities Act are not particularly helpful in interpreting Section 3 (7) of the U. P. Roadside Land Control Act. Provisions analogous to those of Section 3 (7) are to be found in Section 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act, which provides, in respect of a declaration under Section 6 (1), that

"the said declaration shall be conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose or for a company, as the case may be,"

It has never been contended, nor has it been held by any Court that S. 6 (3) bars the declaration under Section 6 (1) from being challenged on the ground that it was made without following the procedure laid down in the Land Acquisition Act for making it. The rule of conclusive evidence in such cases applies only if the declaration has been legally and duly made. Since Section 3 (7) of the U. P. Roadside Land Control Act does not state that the publication of the declaration under sub-section (1) shall be conclusive evidence of the fact that the declaration has been made in accordance with the provisions of the Act, it cannot be held to shut out enquiry into the question whether the provisions of sub-sections (2) to (6) were complied with or not before making the declaration.

5. This conclusion will clearly be a sufficient answer to the first question referred to us for decision and we see no necessity to embark on a discussion of whether any of the provisions of sub-sections (2) to (6) of Section 3 of the Act are mandatory or directory since in our opinion that would be outside the scope of the question in the form in which it has been framed.

6. Having answered the first question in the affirmative, we have now to deal with the second. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has attempted to argue that in each and every case, whether or not the accused challenges the validity of the declaration made under sub-section (1), the prosecution is bound to place all the necessary material before the Court to show that the procedural requirements of sub-sections (2) to (6) have been complied with and that the declaration has been validly made in accordance with law. But we are unable to accept this sweeping proposition. Once a Gazette notification embodying the declaration is produced before the Court, the presumption can legitimately be drawn that all the procedure required by law to be followed with regard to the said notification has in fact been followed—vide illustration (e) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act. It is only in two classes of cases that the prosecution is called upon to produce evidence to prove that sub-sections (2) to (6) have been complied with: (1) cases in which the accused challenges the validity of the declaration, specifying the alleged non-compliance; and (2) cases in which for some special reason the Court refuses to draw the presumption permitted by Section 114 of the Evidence Act.

7. Our answers to the questions propounded by the learned Single Judge therefore, are:—

1. It is open to an accused person to question the validity of the declaration under sub-section (1) to S. 3 of the U. P. Roadside Land Control Act on the ground that the procedure prescribed by sub-ss. (2) to (6) has not been followed, even though sub-section (7) makes the declaration conclusive evidence of the fact that the area to which it relates is a controlled area.
2. Where the declaration under sub-section (1) of S. 3 has been made and the accused person does not raise the question that the procedure prescribed by sub-sections (2) to (6) was not followed before making the declaration, it is not necessary for the prosecution to establish that the provisions of these sub-sections have been complied with.

Reference answered accordingly.

Behari Lal and another, Appellants v. Keshri Nandan, Respondent.

Ex. First Appeals Nos. 32 and 51 of 1969, D/- 4-4-1969 against judgment and decree of Addl. Civil J., Mirzapur, D/- 16-11-1968.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 111 & 357 (1) (a) — Passing of U. P. Civil Laws Amendment Act (35 of 1968) by President by virtue of power conferred upon him under Art. 357 (1) (a) — Fact that it is not assented by President as required under Art. 111 does not make it invalid.

(B) U. P. Civil Laws Amendment Act (35 of 1968), S. 3 — Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (12 of 1887), Section 21 (1) (a) and (1-A) — Enhancement of pecuniary jurisdiction of District Court upto Rs. 20,000 by amendment — No violation of Art. 133 of Constitution — (Constitution of India, Art. 133).

The amendment of Section 21 of the Civil Courts Act by Section 3 of the Civil Laws Amendment Act by which pecuniary jurisdiction of District Court is raised upto Rs. 20,000 does not violate Art. 133 of the Constitution.

(Para 13)

There is no indication in Art. 133 that in cases of valuation of Rs. 20,000 the High Court is required to record its independent findings on questions of fact. Whether a decision of a High Court would be on question of fact or on question of law depends upon the manner in which the matter comes before the High Court. A statutory provision prescribing that in certain matters the High Court can deal with questions of law only would not be in conflict with Art. 133 of the Constitution.

(Para 9)

Article 133 does not confer an absolute right of filing an appeal to the Supreme Court. Firstly, even if the valuation of the suit is Rs. 20,000, the condition laid down in the latter part of Cl. (1) of Article 133 has to be satisfied. Secondly, if the decision is by one Judge of a High Court, Cl. (3) of Art. 133 precludes the High Court from granting any certificate.

AIR 1964 SC 907 & AIR 1966 SC 430, Foll.

It is true that the Supreme Court would not have the benefit of any finding on question of fact by the High Court but the difficulty will arise only in a small class of cases where valuation of the suit is exactly Rs. 20,000. If the valuation of the suit is below Rs. 20,000, the case will not be covered by Art. 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution. If the valuation exceeds Rs. 20,000 Section 3 of the Act 35 of 1968 will have no effect. Secondly even in a suit of valuation of Rs. 20,000 there is no clear conflict with Art. 133 of the Constitution. A party applying for a certificate can obtain it only within the limits prescribed by Art. 133. (Para 13)

(C) Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (12 of 1887), S. 21 (1) (a) and (1-A) (as amended by S. 3 of U. P. Civil Laws Amendment Act 35 of 1968) — Nature of — Section is retrospective — Effect — High Court can transfer to District Court appeals filed even before commencement of Act 35 of 1968.

On examining the language of Cl. (a) of Sub-section (1) of Section 21 of Civil Courts Act and Sub-section (1-A) of Section 21, Civil Courts Act (as inserted by the U. P. Civil Laws Amendment Act) it becomes clear that the legislature was anxious to give retrospective effect to the amended Section 21 of the Civil Courts Act. The amendment is effective even as regards a suit instituted before the commencement of the U. P. Civil Laws Amendment Act and hence, the High Court can transfer to District Court an appeal filed in the High Court even before the commencement of the Act 35 of 1968.

It is true that litigants have got vested right of appeal the moment a suit is instituted. But it is open to the appropriate legislature to take away such vested right. AIR 1966 SC 1953 & AIR 1957 SC 540 & AIR 1970 All 15, Foll.; AIR 1964 SC 489, Disting.

(D) U. P. Civil Laws Amendment Act (35 of 1968), S. 3 — Raising of appellate jurisdiction of District Courts upto Rupees Twenty thousand — No violation of Art. 14 — Constitution of India, Articles 14, 357 (1) (a) and Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (12 of 1887), Section 21 (1-A).

Whereas the limit of appellate jurisdiction of District Courts is Rs. Five thousand or Rupees Ten Thousand in certain States, merely because the President, by enacting Act 35 of 1968 in exercise of powers, which would ordinarily be exercised by the Legislature of Uttar Pradesh, has raised the limit upto Rupees Twenty thousand in Uttar Pradesh, the Act does not become unconstitutional on ground of discrimination. It is open to a State Legislature to adopt special machinery for special needs of the State. (Para 14)

A. Banerji, for Appellants.

OAK, C. J. :— These are two execution First appeals. Initially, they came up on 11-2-1969 for admission before a Division Bench of this Court. It was noticed that in each case valuation of the appeal and valuation of the suit in which the appeal arose was below Rs. 20,000. By Act No. 35 of 1968, which came into force on 2-12-1968, appellate jurisdiction of District Judges has been raised to Rs. 20,000. The question, therefore, arose whether these appeals lie to the High Court or to the District Court. It was urged for the appellants that, in spite of the passing of Act No. 35 of 1968, these appeals lie to the High Court. In support of this contention, two reasons were advanced on behalf of the appellants. Firstly, it was argued that Act No. 35 of 1968 is unconstitutional. Secondly, even if it is assumed that the Act is constitutional, the present appeals are not governed by Act No. 35 of 1968. These questions are of great importance. The two appeals were, therefore, referred to a Full Bench.

2. Facts, which are relevant on the question of jurisdiction, are these. Execution first appeal No. 32 of 1969 arises out of original suit No. 12 of 1957. Valuation of the suit was Rs. 14,000. The suit was decreed on 7-11-1968. The decree-holder applied for execution. Certain property was sold in execution, and was purchased by Devi Prasad, decree-holder. Keshri Nandan, judgment-debtor filed an objection. The objection was allowed by the Additional Civil Judge, Mirzapur on 16-11-1968. Execution first appeal No. 32 of 1969 has been filed by the legal representatives of Devi Prasad. The appeal was filed on 23-1-1969. Valuation of the appeal is Rs. 14,000.

3. Execution first appeal No. 51 of 1969 has arisen out of original suit No. 55 of 1967. Valuation of the suit was Rupees 13,657.14. During execution proceedings an objection was filed by the judgment-debtor. The objection was allowed by the Civil Judge, Aligarh on 3-1-1969. The execution first appeal is directed against that order. This appeal was filed in this Court on 6-2-1969. Valuation of the ap-deal is Rs. 13,657.14. It will be noticed that in each case valuation of the suit was below Rs. 20,000; and valuation of the appeal is also below Rs. 20,000.

4. The question of jurisdiction has to be discussed with reference to Act No. 35 of 1968, which was enacted by the President of India (hereafter referred to as the President's Act). It will be convenient to trace the history of legislation, which culminated in the passing of the President's Act. The Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887 (hereafter referred to as the Civil Courts Act) deals with jurisdiction of Civil Courts. The Civil Courts Act has been amended from time to time. Section 21 of the Civil Courts Act deals with appellate jurisdiction of the High Court and District Judges. According to S. 21 (1) (a), Civil Courts Act, as it originally stood, the maximum limit of jurisdiction of District Judges was Rupees 5,000. By the U. P. Civil Laws (Reforms and Amendment) Act, 1954 (U. P. Act No. 24 of 1954), the limit of jurisdiction of District Courts was raised from Rupees 5,000 to Rs. 10,000.

5. Part XVIII of the Constitution of India contains emergency provisions. Under Art. 356 of the Constitution, the President may issue a Proclamation in case of failure of constitutional machinery in States. Sub-clause (b) of Cl. (1) of Art. 356 provides for a declaration that the powers of the Legislature of the State shall be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament. Art. 357 provides for exercise of legislative powers under Proclamation issued under Art. 356. Article 357 states:

"(1) Where by a Proclamation Issued under Cl. (1) of Art. 356, it has been declared that the powers of the Legislature of the State shall be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament, it shall be competent—

(a) for Parliament to confer on the President the power of the Legislature of the State to make laws....."

By virtue of power conferred on it by Art. 357 (1) (a) read with Art. 356 (1) (b), Parliament enacted the U. P. State Legislature (Delegation of Powers) Act, 1968 (Act No. 7 of 1968). Section 3 of Central Act No. 7 of 1968 ran thus:—

"(1) The power of the Legislature of the State of Uttar Pradesh to make laws, which has been declared by the Proclamation to be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament, is hereby conferred on the President....."

By virtue of the power conferred on him by Section 3 of Central Act No. 7 of 1968, the President enacted Act No. 35 of 1968.

6. The President's Act (No. 35 of 1968) made amendments in a number of statutes. Section 21 of the Civil Courts Act was amended by Section 3 of the President's

Act. Section 3 of the President's Act runs thus:—

"In Section 21 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, as amended in its application to Uttar Pradesh (hereinafter referred to as the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act), for sub-section (1), the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

'(1) Save as aforesaid, an appeal from a decree or order of a Civil Judge shall lie—

(a) to the District Judge where the value of the original suit in which, or in any proceeding arising out of which, the decree or order was made, whether instituted or commenced before or after the commencement of the Uttar Pradesh Civil Laws Amendment Act, 1968, did not exceed twenty thousand rupees, and

(b) to the High Court in any other case. (1-A) An appeal from a decree or order of a Civil Judge where the value of the original suit in which, or in any proceeding arising out of which, the decree or order was made exceeded ten thousand rupees but did not exceed twenty thousand rupees instituted in the High Court before the commencement of the Uttar Pradesh Civil Laws Amendment Act, 1968, may be transferred by the High Court for disposal to any District Judge or Additional Judge subordinate to it."

Mr. A. Banerji appearing for the appellants in execution first appeal No. 32 of 1969 challenged the validity of the President's Act on a variety of grounds. It was urged that the Bill never received assent of the President as prescribed by Art. 111 of the Constitution. Article 111 of the Constitution states:—

"When a Bill has been passed by the Houses of Parliament, it shall be presented to the President, and the President shall declare either that he assents to the Bill or that he withholds assent therefrom....."

Article 111 comes into operation, when a Bill has been passed by Houses of Parliament. On examining the circumstances under which Act No. 35 of 1968 was passed, it will be noticed that in this case no Bill was passed by Houses of Parliament. The Act was passed by the President alone by virtue of power conferred upon him by Art. 357 of the Constitution. Since this is an enactment by the President himself, there was no occasion for presenting a Bill to the President. Article 111 of the Constitution has no application in the present case.

7. The main contention of Mr. A. Banerji as regards constitutionality of the President's Act is that the Act is in conflict with Art. 133 of the Constitution. It was pointed out that in suits of valuation of Rs. 20,000 a litigant has the right to approach the Supreme Court under Article 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution. It was suggested for the appellants that this constitutional right or vested right has been taken away or abridged by the President's Act. It was pointed out that in a suit of valuation of Rs. 20,000 the first appeal lay formerly to the High Court. Under Section 3 of the President's Act first appeals would now lie to the District Court. The case can of course be taken to the High Court in second appeal. But the High Court would be bound by findings of fact recorded by the District Judge in appeal.

8. Mr. Jagdish Swarup, who appeared an amicus curiae before the Division Bench, put forward his argument thus:

".....intention of the makers of the Constitution is that the High Court should be the first Court of appeal in a case which is valued at rupees twenty thousand. But the substituted provision makes the High Court a second Court of appeal.....There is.....an incongruity. If the District Judge decides a first appeal valued at twenty thousand rupees in accordance with the substituted Section 21, Civil Courts Act, second appeal will lie to the High Court on questions of law only and not on questions of fact. Where the High Court reverses the judgment of the District Judge, an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court as of right under Art. 133 (1) (a). In that case the Supreme Court will not have the benefit of any findings on questions of fact by the High Court."

9. I am unable to accept this reasoning. There is no indication in Art. 133 of the Constitution that the founding fathers contemplated that in cases of valuation of Rs. 20,000 the High Court would be competent to record its independent findings on questions of fact. Whether a decision of a High Court would be on questions of fact or on questions of law would depend upon the manner in which the matter comes before the High Court. A statutory provision prescribing that in certain matters the High Court can deal with questions of law only would not be in conflict with Art. 133 of the Constitution.

10. In Ittyavira Mathai v. Varkey, Varkey, AIR 1964 SC 907 a suit was instituted before the repeal of Travancore High Court Act, (No. 4 of 1099). An appeal was filed after the repeal of that Act by Act No. 5 of 1125. At the time of filing the appeal Section 25 of the former Act providing that a Full Bench would hear appeals from decrees of District Courts in which the amount of the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 5,000 stood repealed. The appellants contended that their appeal could be heard only by a Bench of three Judges as provided by Section 11 (1) of Act No. 4 of 1099. It was held that the contention was untenable. In the first place, the High Court of Travancore was itself abolished, and a new High Court came into being. Secondly, an appeal lay to a High Court, and whether it is to be heard by one, two or a larger number of Judges is merely a matter of procedure. No party has a vested right to have his appeal heard by a specified number of Judges.

11. In Mohd. P. Meera v. Thirumalaya, AIR 1966 SC 430 facts were these. A suit was instituted in February, 1950 in a District Court. The suit was decreed in July, 1958. A number of appeals were filed against that decision. At the time the suit was instituted the Travancore Cochin High Court Act (No. 5 of 1125) was in force. Under Section 20 of that Act read with Section 21 all appeals to the High Court valued at an amount exceeding Rs. 1,000 had to be heard by a Division Bench consisting of two Judges of the High Court. The suit was valued at Rs. 3,000. So, according to the law as it stood on the date of institution of the suit, the appeals ought to have been heard by a Division Bench of two Judges. That Act was repealed by Kerala High Court Act, 1958. The appeals to the High Court were placed for hearing before a single Judge. It was held that the appeals were properly disposed of by a single Judge. Once it is held that no party has a vested right to have his appeal heard by more than one Judge of the Court, no right to prefer an appeal under Art. 133 can be said to vest in him, merely because under the Travancore Cochin Act the appeal could be heard by a Division Bench.

12. Somewhat similar considerations arise with reference to a suit of valuation of Rs. 20,000 instituted in Uttar Pradesh before 2-12-1968. Article 133 does not confer an absolute right of filing an appeal to the Supreme Court. Firstly, even if the valuation of the suit is Rupees 20,000, the condition laid down in the latter part of Cl. (1) of Art. 133 has to be satisfied. Secondly, if the decision is by one Judge of a High Court, Cl. (3) of Article 133 precludes the High Court from granting any certificate.

13. The appellants' contention based on Art. 133 has to be rejected for two reasons. Firstly, the difficulty mentioned by the appellants' counsel will arise only in a small class of cases where valuation of the suit is exactly Rs. 20,000. If the valuation of the suit is below Rs. 20,000, the case will not be covered by Art. 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution. If the valuation exceeds Rs. 20,000, Section 3 of Act No. 35 of 1968 will have no effect. Secondly, even in a suit of valuation of Rs. 20,000 there is no clear conflict with Art. 133 of the Constitution. A party applying for a certificate can obtain a certificate only within the limits prescribed by Art. 133 of the Constitution.

14. It was faintly suggested that the President's Act is discriminatory. It was urged that in certain States the limit of appellate jurisdiction of District Courts is Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 10,000, whereas the limit in Uttar Pradesh is now Rs. 20,000. Now, Act No. 35 of 1968 is applicable to Uttar Pradesh only. The President has exercised powers, which would ordinarily be exercised by the Legislature of Uttar Pradesh. It is open to a State Legislature to adopt special machinery for special needs of the State. There is no force in the contention based on Art. 14 of the Constitution. The President's Act is constitutional.

15. The next question for consideration is whether the President's Act is applicable to the present appeals. It has been pointed out for the appellants that in both the cases the suits were instituted before the President's Act came into force. It was contended that parties had a vested right of filing appeals to the High Court under Section 21 of the Civil Courts Act; and this right has remained intact in spite of the passing of the President's Act.

16. In Garikapati Veeraya v. Subbiah Chowdhary, AIR 1957 SC 540 it was held that the right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure, but is a substantive right. The institution of a suit carries with it the implication that all rights of appeal then in force are preserved to the parties thereto till the rest of the career of the suit. The right of appeal is a vested right, and such a right to enter the superior Court accrues to the litigant and exists as on and from the date of its commencement, and although it may be actually exercised when the adverse judgment is pronounced such right is to be governed by the law prevailing at the date of the suit or proceeding and not by the law that prevails at the date of its decision or at the date of the filing of the appeal. This vested right of appeal can be taken away only by a subsequent enactment, if it so provides expressly or by necessary intendment and not otherwise.

17. In Sree Bank Ltd. v. S. D. Roy & Co., AIR 1966 SC 1953 their Lordships of the Supreme Court quoted with approval on page 1955 the following passage from an English decision:

"Perhaps no rule of construction is more firmly established than this—that a retrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so as to impair an existing right or obligation, otherwise than as regards matter of procedure, unless that effect cannot be avoided, without doing violence to the language of the enactment. If the enactment is expressed in language which is fairly capable of either interpretation, it ought to be construed as prospective only."

18. The learned Chief Standing Counsel did not seriously dispute the position that the appellants had a vested right of appeal, when the two suits were filed.

The question remains whether that vested right has been taken away by the President's Act.

19. In Lakshmi Narain v. First Addl. Dist. Judge, Allahabad, AIR 1964 SC 489 the Supreme Court had to decide whether certain appeals pending before Allahabad High Court could be transferred to the District Court. It was held that in the face of Section 3 (1) of the U. P. Civil Laws (Reforms and Amendment) Act (U. P. Act No. 24 of 1954), it is impossible to hold that the District Courts were competent to hear appeals of the valuation of Rs. 10,000 or less in suits decided before the Act came into force, and appeals from which were pending before the High Court.

20. Lakshmi Narain's case, AIR 1964 SC 489 was decided by the Supreme Court with reference to U. P. Act No. 24 of 1954. That Act contained a saving clause. The saving clause ran thus:—

".....any proceeding instituted or commenced in any Court prior to the commencement of this Act shall, notwithstanding any amendment herein made, continue to be heard and decided by such Court."

There is no corresponding saving clause in the President's Act. Lakshmi Narain's case, AIR 1964 SC 489 is, therefore, of little assistance for interpretation of Section 3 of the President's Act.

21. In Pratap Narain Agarwal v. Raghu Prasad, 1969 All LJ 244 = (AIR 1970 All 15) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that where an execution proceeding is commenced after the enforcement of the U. P. Civil Laws (Reforms and Amendment) Act, 1954, for executing a decree passed after the commencement of the said Act in a suit instituted in 1934 and valued at less than Rs. 10,000 but more than Rs. 5,000, an appeal from an order passed in such an execution proceeding lies in the Court of the District Judge and not in the High Court.

22. Reasons for the enactment (Act No. 35 of 1968) were published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary dated 2-12-1968. Clause 2 of the reasons ran thus:

"It is further proposed to amend the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, for increasing the pecuniary appellate jurisdiction of the District Judges from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 20,000 with a view to reducing arrears in the High Court. The fall in the value of the rupee since 1887 (when the limit of Rs. 5,000 was fixed) also justifies further increase in the appellate jurisdiction of District Judges."

23. We have seen that by Section 3 of the President's Act limit of jurisdiction of District Judges has been raised to Rupees 20,000. Clause (a) of sub-section (1) of S. 21 of Civil Courts Act (as now amended) reads thus:—

"to the District Judge where the value of the original suit in which, or in any proceeding arising out of which, the decree or order was made, whether instituted or commenced before or after the commencement of the Uttar Pradesh Civil Laws Amendment Act, 1968, did not exceed twenty thousand rupees....."

It is common ground that the words "whether instituted or commenced before or after the commencement of the Uttar Pradesh Civil Laws Amendment Act, 1968", refer to the original suit. The words "before or after" indicate that the Legislature was anxious that the amendment should be effective even in a case where the suit was instituted before the President's Act came into force.

24. Again, sub-section (1-A) of S. 21, Civil Courts Act (inserted by the President's Act) empowers the High Court to transfer to a District Judge an appeal filed in the High Court before the commencement of the President's Act where the valuation of the suit exceeded Rs. 10,000. It would be anomalous if appeals filed in the High Court several years before the commencement of the President's Act can be transferred to District Judges, but District Judges are held incompetent to deal with similar appeals filed after the commencement of the President's Act.

25. It is true that litigants have got vested right of appeal the moment a suit is instituted. But it is open to the appropriate Legislature to take away such vested right. On examining the language of Cl. (a) of sub-section (1) of S. 21, Civil Courts Act and sub-section (1-A) of S. 21, Civil Courts Act (as inserted by the President's Act), it becomes clear that the Legislature was anxious to give retrospective effect to amended Section 21 of the Civil Courts Act. In other words, the amendment will be effective even as regards a suit instituted before 2-12-1968.

26. Mr. A. Banerji pointed out that the period of limitation for filing an appeal to the District Court is shorter than the period of limitation for filing an appeal to the High Court. Under Art. 116 of the Limitation Act, 1963, the period of limitation for filing an appeal to the District Court is only 30 days as against the period of limitation of 90 days for filing an appeal to a High Court. In some cases a difficulty might have arisen where a party was expecting to file an appeal to the High Court, but was unable to file any appeal within time as a result of the passing of the President's Act. But no such difficulty arises in the instant case. In execution first appeal No. 32 of 1968 the impugned order was passed on 16-11-1968. The President's Act came into force on 2-12-1968. There was nothing to prevent the appellants from lodging an appeal before the District Court at any time between 2-12-1968 and 16-12-1968. In execution first appeal No. 51 of 1969 the impugned order was passed on 3-1-1969—after the commencement of the President's Act. It will be seen that in neither case was the appellant likely to be prejudiced by the mere fact that the period of limitation for filing an appeal has been reduced as a result of the passing of the President's Act.

27. The President's Act (No. 35 of 1968) is constitutional and valid. It will have retrospective effect as regards appeals arising out of suits instituted before 2-12-1968. These appeals, therefore, lie to the District Court, and not to the High Court. In my opinion, in each of the two cases the memorandum of appeal should be returned to the appellant for presentation to proper Court.

28. SATISH CHANDRA J.:— I entirely agree with my Lord the Chief Justice.

29. A. K. KIRTY J.:— I agree and have nothing to add.

Order accordingly.

(A) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 120 — Applicability — Article is residuary in nature — Applies when no other Article is applicable. AIR 1965 All 590 (FB), Foll. (Para 5)

(B) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 115, 113 — Plaintiff obtaining theka of Fishery rights in certain tank for complete year — Defendants agreeing to pay half of theka money to plaintiff in return of half of fishery rights in tank — Suit by plaintiff for recovery of amount after defendants working out their theka in respect of their share — Held, suit was for recovery of amount and not for specific performance of contract — Suit was governed by Art. 115 and not Art. 113. (Paras 8, 10)

(C) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 115, 120 — Word "compensation" in Art. 115 — Includes money due under contract — Suit to recover such amount is governed by Art. 115 and not Art. 120. AIR 1962 All 438, Overruled.— (Contract Act (1872), S. 73) — (Words and Phrases — Word "Compensation").

The word 'compensation' used in Article 115 has the same meaning as it has under Section 73 of Contract Act and it denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of the loss or damage caused to him by the breach of contract.

(Para 18)

Where the sum sought to be recovered was due to the plaintiff under a contract by which the defendant had bound himself to pay certain amount within the specified time and the suit was brought by the plaintiff for recovery of the amount because there had been a breach of the contract on the part of the defendant the Article applicable to the suit would be Art. 115 and not Art. 120. S. D. KHARE, J.:— The question which has been referred for the consideration of this Full Bench is as follows:—

"On the facts of the present case which Article of the Limitation Act applies."

2. The facts of this case are very simple. The suit was for the recovery of Rs. 850 from the defendants. On 12th January, 1959, the plaintiff had taken the theka of fishery rights in a certain tank for the year 1959, and had paid the full theka money of Rs. 1,700. He did not find it possible to work the entire theka, and, therefore, he took the defendants as his partners. The shares of all the defendants separately defined, aggregated to one-half of the theka and therefore, they were required to pay half the theka money to the plaintiff. According to the allegations made in the plaint the time fixed for payment was upto 31st July, 1959. However, the finding of the learned Munsif was that the defendants had agreed to pay their share of the theka money by 31st January, 1959. The learned Munsif, applying Article 115 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act held that the suit, which was instituted on 26th July, 1962, was barred by time.

3. The plaintiff preferred an appeal, and the learned Civil Judge, who heard the appeal, allowed it on the finding that Art. 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act applied, and under that Article the limitation was six years. The learned Civil Judge neither confirmed nor disturbed the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Munsif regarding the date on which the money became payable.

4. The revision filed against the appellate Court judgment was heard by a learned single Judge of this Court. It was contended before him that the case of Town Area Committee, Rava v. Budh Sen, AIR 1962 All 438 relied upon by the learned Civil Judge, had not been correctly decided, because neither Art. 115 nor Art. 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act could apply to the facts of the case and the suit should have been governed by Art. 113.

5. Article 120 is a residuary Article, and in case Art. 113 or Art. 115 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act could apply it is obvious that Art. 120 will not apply (vide Full Bench case of Zila Parishad v. Sm. Shanti Devi, AIR 1965 All 590).

6. Articles 113, 115 and 120 read as follows:

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
113. For specific performance of contract.	Three years	The date fixed for the performance or, if no such date is fixed, when the plaintiff has notice that performance is refused.
115. For compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and not herein specially provided.	Three years	When the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases.
120. Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this Schedule.	Six years.	When the right to sue accrues.

7. It has been contended by the learned counsel for the applicant that Art. 113 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act should apply, as the claim is nothing but for specific performance of a contract.

8. In our opinion there is no force in this argument. It is true that there was a contract between the parties inasmuch as the plaintiff gave to the defendants one-half of the fishery rights in the tank on the condition that they would pay him half the theka money. The allegations made in the plaint show that the defendants had already worked out the theka in respect of their share of it. All that remained to be done was to pay the proportionate theka money to the plaintiff. In such circumstances no suit for specific performance of contract could be filed; only a suit to enforce the agreement so far as it related to the payment of the proportionate theka money could be, and has been filed.

9. The relevant portion of Section 12 of the Specific Relief Act (Act 1 of 1877) reads as follows:

".....the specific performance of any contract may in the discretion of the Court be enforced—

(a) When the act agreed to be done is in the performance, wholly or partially, of a trust;

(b) When there exists no standard for ascertaining the actual damages caused by the non-performance of the act agreed to be done;

(c) When the act agreed to be done is such that pecuniary compensation for its non-performance would not afford adequate relief, or

(d) When it is probable that pecuniary compensation cannot be got for the non-performance of the act agreed to be done....."

10. A suit for the recovery of a specified sum under a contract cannot be said to be a suit of the nature where pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the suit out of which this civil revision arises cannot be said to be a suit for the specific performance of a contract and will not be governed by Art. 113 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

11. The learned counsel for the applicant has further contended that in case it is held that Art. 113 cannot apply, the Article of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act which should have been applied was Art. 53, which reads as follows:—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
53. For the price of goods sold and delivered to be paid for after the expiry of a fixed period of credit.	Three years	When the period of credit expires.

12. Again, looking to the facts of the case we find that the suit is not for the price of goods sold and delivered, but for the recovery of money which was agreed to be paid as proportionate share of the theka money. The plaintiff, by this suit, sought to enforce the agreement. He did not sell or deliver any goods, and, therefore, Art. 53 could not apply.

13. We now proceed to consider why Art. 115 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act should apply to the facts of the present case. Article 115 applies when there is a breach of contract and the suit is for compensation for the loss suffered by the innocent party. A breach of contract "occurs where a party repudiates or fails to perform one or more of the obligations imposed upon him by the contract": (vide Cheshire and Fifoot, p. 484). "If one of two parties to a contract breaks the obligation which the contract imposes, a new obligation will in every case arise—a right of action conferred upon the party injured by the breach": (vide Anson's Law of Contract, p. 412). Admittedly in the present case there was a contract and according to the plaintiff and the findings of the Court a breach of contract had occurred inasmuch as the defendants failed to pay the stipulated amount upon the date fixed under the contract.

14. Difficulty can, however, be caused by the word "compensation" used in Article 115. It can be argued that the words "compensation for breach of contract" point rather to a claim for unliquidated damages than to the payment of a certain sum, and, therefore, where the suit is for the recovery of a specified sum, and not for the determination of unliquidated damages, this Article should not apply. In our opinion this contention would be wholly untenable because it was not accepted by this Court in the Full Bench case of Husain Ali Khan v. Hafiz Ali Khan, (1881) ILR 3 All 600 (FB) and by the Privy Council in the case of Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Sri Gopinath Jiu, AIR 1916 PC 182. In the case of Husain Ali Khan, (1881) ILR 3 All 600 (FB), Art. 116 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (Act 15 of 1877) was the subject of interpretation. Articles 115 and 116 of Sch. II of Act 15 of 1877 have been reproduced verbatim in the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Article 115 deals with the breach of contracts not in writing and registered while Art. 116 provided for breach of contracts in writing and registered. It is, therefore, obvious that the meaning which has to be given to the words "compensation for breach of contract" occurring in both the Articles will have to be the same.

15. The question for consideration in the case of Husain Ali Khan, (1881) ILR 3 All 600 (FB) (Supra) was whether in a case for the recovery of money on the basis of a bond Art. 59 (providing for three years' limitation) or Art. 116 (providing for six years' limitation) should apply. There is nothing in Art. 59 to indicate that it could not apply to the case of a registered bond. However, if Article 116 could also apply to the case of a registered bond the Courts could say that because the latter Article speaks about registration it should be the appropriate Article to be applied in the case of the breach of the contract contained in a registered money bond. The question whether a registered money bond comes under Art. 116 of Sch. II of Act 15 of 1877 was answered by the Full Bench of this Court in the affirmative.

16. In the case of Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja, AIR 1916 PC 182 (Supra) the argument that the words "compensation for breach of a contract" point rather to a claim of unliquidated damages than to the claim of payment of certain sum was not accepted because the word "compensation" has been used in the Indian Contract Act in a very wide sense.

"73. When a contract has been broken, the party who suffers by such breach is entitled to receive, from the party who has broken the contract, compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby, which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach, or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result from the breach of it.

Such compensation is not to be given for any remote and indirect loss or damage sustained by reason of the breach.....

(n) A contracts to pay a sum of money to B on a day specified. A does not pay the money on that day; B, in consequence of not receiving the money on that day is unable to pay his debts, and is totally ruined. A is not liable to make good to B anything except the principal sum he contracted to pay, together with interest upto the day of payment."

It is, therefore, clear that the word "compensation" has been used in Section 73 of the Indian Contract Act in a very wide sense and the present case would be covered by it.

17. We see no reason why the words "compensation for breach of contract" as used in Art. 115 should be given a meaning different from the same words as used in Art. 116. Article 115 being a residuary article for suits based on breach of contract, it is obvious that the suit out of which this revision arises would be governed by the said Article.

18. Other High Courts in India have also interpreted the words "compensation for breach of contract" occurring in these Articles in the wider sense of the term "compensation." The Lahore High Court in the Full Bench case of Mahomed Ghasita v. Siraj-ud-din, AIR 1922 Lah 198 (FB) held that the word "compensation" in Art. 115 as well as in Art. 116 has the same meaning as it has in Section 73 of the Indian Contract Act and denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of the loss or damage caused to him by the breach of a contract.

19. The Patna High Court in the Division Bench case of Chairman and Commissioners of Chaibassa Municipality v. Govind Sao, AIR 1937 Pat 360 held that Art. 115 and not Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applied to the suit brought by the Municipality for the recovery of the balance of money due under a contract by which the right to collect the tolls in the market was settled.

20. The view of the Patna High Court was followed by the High Court of Jammu and Kashmir in the case of Municipal Council v. Mohd. Shaban, AIR 1962 J & K 12. Article 86 of the Jammu and Kashmir Limitation Act corresponded exact to Article 115 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. It was held by the Jammu and Kashmir High Court in that case that the word "compensation" used in Article 86 of the Jammu and Kashmir Act has wide meaning and it includes a claim for money which has become due to a party after the contract has been breached.

21. The Orissa High Court held in the case of Govinda Sabat v. State of Orissa, AIR 1964 Ori 189 that where the District Board had leased out the right to collect tolls in the market of a village to the defendant and the defendant had failed to pay three-fourths of the money due; which was to be paid in three equal instalments on due dates, the suit by the Government against the contractor for the recovery of the balance due was a suit for compensation for breach of contract, governed by Art. 115.

22. With great respect we are, therefore, of the opinion that the case of AIR 1962 All 438 (Supra) which was for the enforcement of the agreement to pay theka money payable in instalments and to which Art. 120 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act was applied was not decided correctly.

23. Our answer to the question framed by the Division Bench, therefore, is—

“On the facts of the present case Article 115 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, would apply.”

24. The record of the revision case will now be sent back to the learned single Judge with the above answer to the question referred.

New Victoria Mills Co. Ltd., Petitioner v. Presiding Officer, Labour Court and others, Opposite Parties.

Civil Misc. Writ No. 1492 of 1966, D/- 12-7-1968.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 242, 251-A, 254, 537 and 246 — Scope — Slight mistake in stating charge e.g. quoting wrong section — Mistake cannot vitiate trial — Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (1946), Sch., Item 9.

In criminal trials to which the warrant case procedure is applicable under the Code of Criminal Procedure, a slight mistake or defect in a charge could not possibly vitiate the trial. The principle contained in Section 537 of Criminal P. C. would cure such a defect even in the proceedings of a regular criminal Court. In the trial of summons cases by Magistrates all that is required is that facts which constitute an offence should be put to the accused and either admitted or proved. Even if the allegation put to an accused at a summons case trial is that the facts put to the accused constitute an offence under a section which does not apply, the offender can still be punished under the provision properly applicable on facts proved as provided by Section 246.

If the particular facts alleged against an employee constituted misconduct, the mere insertion of a wrong provision while stating the provision of the Standing Order applicable could not possibly vitiate the charge or the trial itself: (1960) 2 Lab LJ 56 (SC) Ref.

Where a wrong provision was introduced by merely inserting an additional letter indicating the particular head of the Standing Order sought to be applied, the error could not be said to be basic.

(Paras 6, 8, 9)

(B) Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (1946), Sch., Item 9 — Misconduct — Meaning of — It is enough if

alleged misconduct affects competence of employee for particular kind of work given to him — Misconduct by theft of property — Mere absence of evidence as to ownership of property could not make decision of domestic tribunal perverse.

The offence of theft, wherever theft is committed by an employee, shows that the employee is dishonest and his reliability as a worker may be affected for that reason. Such a defect in a sweeper who necessarily has access to residential premises of the employer and opportunities of committing theft is particularly dangerous. Therefore, a workman employed as a sweeper who has either been proved to have committed a theft or to have so acted as to facilitate or aid theft may very well be guilty of such misconduct as to merit dismissal. All that has to be shown is that the alleged misconduct affects the competence of the employee for the particular kind of work he does. The misconduct for which an employee can be dismissed need not necessarily have been committed in the course of his employment. It is enough if it is of such a nature as to affect his suitability for a particular employment. It is then reasonably connected with the question whether the workman can be retained in that employment. AIR 1965 SC 155 & AIR 1960 SC 806, Rel. on.

Held, that the absence of any evidence about the ownership of the property alleged to have been stolen could not make the decision of the domestic tribunal perverse. (Paras 11, 9)

(C) Constitution of India, Arts. 20 (2) and 310-311 — Double jeopardy — Scope of ‘Misconduct’ is wider than that of criminal offence e.g. theft — Mere fact that case was sent to criminal Court could not bar domestic enquiry.

The charge in disciplinary proceedings is not identical with that at the criminal trial. The scope of ‘misconduct’ is wider than that of a criminal offence such as theft. Disciplinary proceedings cannot be equated with a criminal trial. It is doubtful whether the principle of propriety viz., that the disciplinary authority should not enquire into a charge of which the employee is already acquitted by a criminal Court, laid down for disciplinary proceedings against civil servants, would be applicable with equal force to proceedings before a domestic tribunal by an employer against an employee. Where the dismissal on the charge of misconduct took place before the workmen were given the benefit of doubt and acquitted at the criminal trial under the Cri. P. C. the fact that the case was sent to a criminal Court could not bar a domestic inquiry: AIR 1962 Mys 84, Disting. (Para 12)

(D) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Object — Ground might and ought to have been taken, but not taken in Labour Court or earlier in High Court — Held, on applying principles of constructive res judicata, that ground could not be taken in High Court.

The principles of res judicata are quite wide and general in application. They are designed to prevent unending litigation and piecemeal re-agitation of the same dispute on different grounds before different or same Courts. Where the ground in question was open to the opposite parties in the Labour Court and on the earlier occasion in the High Court but they did not take it:

Held, that the ground might and ought to have been taken earlier and on applying the principles of res judicata, the party was precluded from raising the ground at that stage. (Paras 12, 13)

(E) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 15 — Powers of Labour Court — It is only when Labour Court comes to conclusion that fair enquiry was not held, that it can enter into merits of case: AIR 1965 SC 155, Rel. on. (Para 15)

T. N. Sapru, for Petitioner; J. N.
Tewari, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— The petitioner, the New Victoria Mills Ltd., Kanpur, prays for a writ of certiorari to quash the award of a labour Court dated 16-9-1966 (Annexure 27 to the writ petition) and consequential directions. The impugned award was given after this Court had caused, on 6-8-1963, in Civil Miscellaneous writ petition No. 2720 of 1959 connected with civil miscellaneous writ petition No. 2014/58, a previous award dated 26-6-1958 given by the same Labour Court adjudicating the same question between the same parties. Mr. Justice Dwivedi had ordered in that case:—

"I direct the Labour Court to re-hear the dispute and decide the question of fair hearing in the light of my judgment."

The question for adjudication before the Labour Court was framed as follows:—

"Whether the employers have wrongfully and/or unjustifiably dismissed Sri Jagannath, son of Sri Kunji, T. N. 9, and Sri Chhotey, son of Sri Chhedhi, T. N. 3, sweepers, with effect from February 7, 1967, if so, to what relief are the workmen concerned entitled?"

The employers had tried and found Jagannath and Chhotey, opposite parties 2 and 3, guilty on a charge framed as follows:

"Aap 6-11-1954 ki rat me ek baje sagar peshi me cement ki bori chorate hue pakade gaye aur usi samay aap police me bhi dediyee gaye. Aap jawab deejiiye ke chori ki case men aap ke khilaf kiyon na karwai kiya jai and thereby committed an act of misconduct under Standing Order 23 (D) (Theft)."

This charge framed in language which was a mixture of Hindi and English, as indicated above, certainly put the matter with which the accused were charged fairly and squarely to them in language which was quite intelligible to them. The questions which were argued before this Court on the previous occasion were whether the charge had been properly framed and whether the accused had been given a fair hearing. Dwivedi, J., who quashed the previous award, had observed in the course of his judgment: "I have already stated that the award is founded on the only ground that the domestic enquiry did not give fair hearing to the employees." After coming to this conclusion, Dwivedi, J. held that the charge contained full details of the misconduct alleged against the workmen. It was also held there that the Labour Court had proceeded on a number of irrelevant considerations in coming to the conclusion that the accused had not got a fair hearing.

2. In the award now assailed by the petitioner, the Labour Court has observed that the case had been sent back by this Court in order to determine whether there was a fair hearing before the domestic tribunal. After making this observation, the Labour Court, for some reason, made no effort whatsoever to decide the question of fair hearing and seems to have forgotten all about it. Perhaps the Labour Court was of opinion that the direction to rehear the dispute meant that the whole case was re-opened and could be decided entirely afresh on whatever grounds the Labour Court thought fit to take. I may observe that even if the Labour Court's assumption that every question was open to it for adjudication afresh could be justified, it should have given a decision on the question this Court had expressly directed it to decide. The order of this Court, as I understand it, was that, although the dispute is to be reheard, a fresh decision must be given, in any case, on the only question which was apparently raised before the Labour Court and before this Court on the previous occasion, that is to say, the question whether a fair hearing was given to the workmen by the domestic tribunal. Unfortunately, the labour Court has not given any reason for treating the whole case as open to it for re-adjudication without finding that the workmen did not get a fair hearing.

3. The labour Court held that a charge for misconduct brought by an employer against a workman need not be restricted to theft committed on the company's premises or during working hours of the operative. It relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in Central India Coal Fields v. R. B. Sobnath, AIR 1961 SC 1189 in order to decide issue No. 2 in favour of the employers. It was held in that case that improper conduct of an employee committed even outside the Company's premises and also outside the working hours could be misconduct under the standing orders. The Labour Court framed and decided an additional issue No. 2 against the workmen: Whether the Standing Orders of the concern were applicable to the workmen who are employed at the bungalows of the officers of the mills? Apparently, the workmen had raised the question whether a theft alleged to have been committed at the bungalows of the officers by employees could constitute misconduct within the meaning of that term as given in the Standing Orders. Although the Labour Court held that the Standing Orders would cover theft by a workman outside the Company's premises, it took the view that, there being no evidence that the cement stolen belonged to the Company, no charge for misconduct could be made out.

4. I have been taken through the written statements filed on behalf of the employers and the workmen before the Labour Court. The fresh question on which the Labour Court seems to have decided the whole case on this occasion, whether the cement alleged to have been stolen was the property of the Company or not, was not raised anywhere by the parties. The Labour Court, however, observed that the Managing Officer's bungalow on which the theft was committed was two and a half miles from the factory and did not belong to the factory. It practically negated the effect of its own finding that the Standing Orders applied to a case of theft outside the premises of the Company by introducing the condition that the theft had to be shown to be of the Company's property. It held that, as no evidence was produced at the domestic inquiry that the cement alleged to have been stolen was the property of the Company or that the theft was in connection with the Company's business, there was no evidence whatsoever to support the charge of misconduct. In other words, the Labour Court construed the charge as confined to theft of the property of the Company or one committed in connection with the Company's business and misconduct as confined to such theft. It held the finding of the domestic tribunal to be "perverse" on the ground that there was no evidence at all about the ownership of the cement said to have been stolen.

5. It seems very doubtful whether the Labour Court could proceed at a tangent in this fashion at all at any stage to decide a question of fact which was not raised by the workmen either at their trial or before the Labour Court in their written statement. If the ownership of the property by the Company or its connection with the business of the Company was an essential ingredient of the charge of misconduct it might have been possible to say that the evidence in support of the charge could not constitute misconduct at all and that the finding of the domestic tribunal was perverse for that reason. In the case before me, the facts stated in the Hindi language and put to the employees could, if proved, constitute misconduct quite apart from the question whether the property stolen was that of the company or of an officer or director of the Company.

6. It is true that the charge mentions a provision of the Standing Order which only applied to a case of theft of the property of the Company or of property stolen in connection with the business of the Company. But, this provision was mentioned only in the part of the charge relating to the particular provision under which the alleged misconduct was supposed to be an offence. The factual ingredients of the charge of alleged misconduct were already put to the employees in Hindi. The only mistake in the charge was that the letter 'D' had been put within brackets after the words "Standing Order 23."

Even in criminal trials to which the warrant case procedure is applicable under the Code of Criminal Procedure, such a slight mistake or defect in a charge could not possibly vitiate the trial. In the trial of summons cases by Magistrates all that is required is that facts which constitute an offence should be put to the accused and either admitted or proved. Even if the allegation put to an accused at a summons case trial is that the facts put to the accused constitute an offence under a section which does not apply, the offender can still be punished under the provision properly applicable on facts proved as provided by S. 246 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

7. The Labour Court appeared to have misdirected itself with regard to the meaning of the term "perverse" with reference to a decision. The Labour Court relied on Doom Dooma Tea Co. Ltd. v. Assam Chah Karamchhari Sangha, 1960-2 Lab LJ 56 (SC) where the following grounds upon which the result of a trial by a domestic Tribunal could be set aside were given: "(1) when there has been want of good faith; (2) when there is victimisation or unfair labour practice; (3) when the management has been guilty of a basic error or violation of a principle of natural justice; and (4) when on the materials the finding is completely baseless or perverse." Mr. J. N. Tewari appearing on behalf of the opposite parties tried to justify the view taken by the Labour Court on the ground that the trial of the opposite parties by the domestic Tribunal was vitiated by a "basic error" and also on the ground that, on the materials on the record, the finding was completely baseless or perverse.

8. It has been conceded by Mr. Tewari that Standing Order 23 does not give a definition of misconduct at all but only gives instances of it. The Standing Order 23 begins as follows: "The following acts or omissions will be treated as misconduct." The Standing Order ends after mentioning various kinds of misconduct, with the words: "and any other misconduct." Thus, the language of the Standing Order itself shows that it does not define misconduct or illustrate it exhaustively. If the particular facts alleged, which were put to the employees in the Hindi language, constituted misconduct, the mere insertion of a wrong provision while stating the provision of the Standing Order applicable could not possibly vitiate the charge or the trial itself.

9. In this case, the wrong provision was introduced by merely inserting an additional letter indicating the particular head of the standing order sought to be applied. The principle contained in Section 537 of the Criminal P. C. would cure such a defect even in the proceedings of a regular criminal Court in a warrant case trial where charges have to be formally framed. The error could neither be basic nor could the absence of any evidence about the ownership of the property alleged to have been stolen make the decision of the domestic tribunal perverse. As already indicated, the view of the Labour Court is itself vitiated by basically and patently erroneous views about what constitutes a misconduct and the meaning of a "perverse" decision.

10. I may also mention that the award contains no discussion of any specific findings given by the domestic tribunal whose verdict was characterised as "perverse". On this occasion, the only ground upon which the award is really based is that the absence of evidence relating to the ownership of the cement alleged to have been stolen vitiated the whole trial and made a finding of guilt for the charge of misconduct perverse. This raises the question of the meaning of "misconduct."

11. In Tata Oil Mills Co. Ltd. v. The Workmen, AIR 1965 SC 155 it was held that although misconduct to be covered by the particular Standing Order placed before their Lordships had to be shown to be rationally connected with the employment of the offender the mere fact that alleged disorderly behaviour took place at a distance from the factory where the employees worked could not take the disorderly behaviour outside the purview of misconduct. In Delhi Cloth and General Mills Ltd. v. Kushal Bhan, AIR 1960 SC 806, an employee of the Company manufacturing textiles was dismissed by his employers for misconduct on the ground that he had stolen the bicycle of a clerk of the Company. It could be urged there also that the offence was committed outside the course of employment of the Company. The dismissal for misconduct was, however, not considered improper by their Lordships of the Supreme Court. In that case, the dismissal had taken place pending a criminal trial for theft in which the employee was finally acquitted. It was held that the Labour Tribunal could not assail the proceedings on questions of fact even though it is better for an employer to await the decision of a criminal Court in a grave case so that the defence of the employee in the criminal trial may not be prejudiced. But, theft of another employees' property was held to constitute misconduct justifying the dismissal. Presumably the offence of theft, wherever theft is committed by an employee, shows that the employee is dishonest and his reliability as a worker may be affected for that reason. Such a defect in a sweeper, who necessarily has access to residential premises of the employer and opportunities of committing theft, is particularly dangerous. Therefore, a workman employed as a sweeper who has either been proved to have committed a theft or to have so acted as to facilitate or aid theft may very well be guilty of such misconduct as to merit dismissal. All that has to be shown is that the alleged misconduct affects the competence of the employee for the particular kind of work he does. The misconduct for which an employee can be dismissed need not necessarily have been committed in the course of his employment. It is enough if it is of such a nature as to affect his suitability for a particular employment. It is then reasonably connected with the question whether the workmen can be retained in that employment.

12. Another question raised by Mr. J. N. Tewari was that the workmen, opposite parties 2 and 3, having been acquitted by a criminal Court on the charge of theft of cement, could not be tried by the domestic tribunal and dismissed for the same offence. Learned counsel cited P. E. Ponnurangam v. Mysore Government Road Transport, AIR 1962 Mys 84 where it was held that, if an offence punishable by a criminal Court is alleged against a civil servant and is actually sent to a criminal Court which acquits the civil servant, "it would be extremely improper for any disciplinary authority to inquire again into that charge and hold him guilty on the very evidence which was produced before the criminal Court and which it disbelieved." It was also held there: "To permit that would be to countenance an improper circumvention of the order of acquittal made by a competent criminal Court." This was a case of disciplinary proceeding against a civil servant. An inquiry into the same charge was held to be improper although it could not be held to be illegal for contravening the principle contained in Art. 20 of the Constitution. The charge in disciplinary proceedings is not identical with that at the criminal trial. The scope of "misconduct" is wider than that of a criminal offence such as theft. Disciplinary proceedings cannot be equated with a criminal trial. I also doubt whether this principle of propriety, laid down for disciplinary proceedings against civil servants, would be applicable with equal force to proceedings before a domestic tribunal by an employer against an employee. In the present case, the dismissal on the charge of misconduct took place before the workmen were given the benefit of doubt and acquitted at the criminal trial under the Criminal Procedure Code. The mere fact that the case was sent to a criminal Court could not bar a domestic inquiry. The Labour Court was only concerned with the correctness of the proceedings before the domestic tribunal. The main ground, however, on which I overruled this objection raised for the first time before me in this Court is that it was not raised at all either before the Labour Court or before this Court on the earlier occasion as it could have been done.

13. This brings me to the principle which should, in my opinion, be applied in such cases, quite apart from the opportunity which the opposite parties Jagannath and Chhotey had of raising such a plea before the Labour Court, this is the second occasion which the opposite parties have had of raising this question in this Court as an alleged bar to proceedings for dismissal by the employer. On the earlier occasion when this matter was considered by my learned brother Dwivedi, J. in this Court no such objection was taken at all. Even if it is an objection which was open at that stage, so that it might and ought to have been taken then, I would apply the principle of constructive res judicata and hold that the opposite parties cannot invoke this ground in this Court now. The principles of res judicata are quite wide and general in application. They are designed to prevent unending litigation and piecemeal re-agitation of the same dispute on different grounds before different or same Courts. If the ground was open to the opposite parties on the earlier occasion in this Court and they did not take it, I think they are precluded now from raising it on this occasion before this Court.

14. As already observed, this Court had sent back the dispute for re-hearing and for decision of the question whether Jagannath and Chhotey, opposite parties 2 and 3, had a fair hearing before the domestic tribunal. That question ought to have been decided by the Labour Court in compliance with the orders of this Court, but it did not do so. Taking a charitable view of its error, it may be said that the Labour Court did not deliberately flout the orders of this Court but was under a misapprehension about the duty it was directed to perform.

15. It was only if the trial of Jagannath and Chhotey, opposite parties 2 and 3, was actually vitiated by a violation of principles of natural justice, so that it could be held that they did not get a fair hearing, that the Labour Court could enter into questions of fact itself and then decide them. As their Lordships of the Supreme Court have pointed out, in AIR 1965 SC 155 (Supra), the Industrial Tribunal can discard the findings of the domestic tribunal and give its own findings on questions of fact provided the proceedings before the domestic tribunal are vitiated by a basic error such as violation of principles of natural justice. In the present case, the only alleged basic error which was open for the Labour Court to adjudicate upon was whether the workmen had obtained a fair hearing before the domestic tribunal. It was only after it had arrived at the conclusion that they did not have a fair hearing that the Labour Court could have entered into merits of the case at all. The award of the Labour Court, however, contains no finding which could, so to say, open the door for entering upon a consideration of question of fact.

16. For the reasons given above, I quash the award of the Labour Court dated 16-9-1965 and issue fresh directions as follows: The Labour Court shall decide the specific question whether the opposite parties Jagannath and Chhotey had a fair hearing before the domestic tribunal. Only if it arrives at the conclusion that they did not have a fair hearing will it proceed to re-examine the facts relating to the alleged misconduct for itself. If it is able to and does re-examine the facts, it will bear in mind the meaning of "misconduct" as explained above. If the workmen had a fair hearing, it will not be open for it to consider any other question.

17. There should be no room now for the Labour Court to misapprehend the orders of this Court. The parties will bear their own costs.

Petition allowed.

(LUCKNOW BENCH)

LAKSHMI PRASAD J.

B. D. Tandon, Petitioner v. State of U. P. and another, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 65 of 1968, D/-3-4-1969.

(A) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 47 (3) and 64-A First Proviso — Re-determination of strength of permits — Notice to existing operators not necessary as no rights are affected — Nor does provision for limitation in First Proviso to S. 64-A confer on him right of hearing — (Constitution of India, Art. 226).

There is no provision in the Act requiring a notice to an existing operator at the stage of Section 47 (3). An existing operator, therefore, cannot claim notice or right of hearing at the said stage unless it be possible for him to establish that by a re-determination of strength under Section 47 (3) any of his rights is affected. A person may be aggrieved by an order even without his right being affected. If a permit is granted to a particular person to ply his vehicle on a particular route, it does not confer on him any right to exclude any person who is likewise granted a permit in accordance with the provisions of the Act, though he may feel aggrieved in so far as such other person is likely to divide the income derived so far by him alone. That way he may be said to be aggrieved. But it cannot by any means be said that by such introduction of another person any of his rights has been affected. It does not follow therefrom that any of his rights is affected by such an order so as to entitle him to claim a hearing from the authority concerned before it passes an order under Section 47(3) even if he may invoke revisional jurisdiction under Section 64-A on feeling aggrieved by a re-determination of strength under Section 47(3).

The provision for limitation in the first proviso to Section 64-A for an application in revision to be moved thereunder cannot be construed to confer a right of hearing before the Regional Transport Authority upon the person who may invoke revisional jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority under Section 64-A. AIR 1967 All 573 & AIR 1968 SC 410, Rel. on; AIR 1969 All 269 (FB), Expl.; AIR 1965 SC 458 & AIR 1961 SC 1500, Considered. (Paras 4, 5)

(B) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 47 (3) and 43 (1) — Re-determination of strength of permits — Relevant considerations indictated — Authority acting mechanically rather by applying its mind — Resolution held bad.

Considerations indicated in Cls. (a) to (d) to sub-section (1) of S. 43 are relevant for determination of strength on a particular route at a given time. Although these are not the only matters for consideration while determining strength under Section 47 (3), those are certainly some of the relevant considerations which should weigh with the authority while determining strength under Section 47 (3). Where none of these were taken into account while passing the resolution, and on the other hand matters, for the factual existence of which there was presumably no evidence whatsoever and which had hardly anything to do with the determination of strength on a route, were made a basis for the revocation of strength on all the routes in a particular region irrespective of varying factors obtaining on different routes:

Held, that the Regional Transport Authority acted in the matter mechanically rather by applying its mind to relevant factors. Such a resolution was bad in the eye of law and could not be permitted to stand. AIR 1963 All 383 and AIR 1969 SC 493, Rel. on. (Para 6)

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of statutes — Mandatory or directory provisions — Use of expression "may" or "shall", not conclusive — Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 47 (3) is mandatory — Civ. Misc. Writ Nos. 4286 and 4320 of 1967, D/- 23-2-1968 (All), Not foll.

In determining whether the provision is mandatory or directory the use of the expression "may" or "shall" is not conclusive. It depends on the intent of the Legislature and the same is to be gathered not only from the language of the particular provision but also from various other relevant factors.

Motor Vehicles Act is a regulatory Act, its main purpose being to regulate vehicular traffic with due regard to relevant factors such as among others those indicated in Section 43 of the Act. Section 47 (3) enjoins a duty on the authority to limit the number of stage carriages for which stage carriage permits may be granted. So long as that has not been done, there arises no occasion for the authority to dispose of applications pending before it for the grant of permits. It thus follows that the direction conferred on the authority under Section 47 (3) is in fact coupled with an obligation. That being so, the provision in Section 47 (3) cannot but be held to be mandatory. 1969 All LJ 453 & 1969-1 SCWR 569 & AIR 1963 SC 1618, Rel. on; Civ. Misc. Writ Nos. 4286 and 4320 of 1967, D/- 23-2-1968 (All), Not followed. (Para 7)

R. N. Trivedi, for Petitioner; Chief Standing Counsel, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— All these petitions under Art. 226 of the Constitution can conveniently be disposed of by a single judgment in so far as all of them are directed against the resolution dated 15th December, 1967 passed by the Regional Transport Authority, Lucknow Region, revoking strength on all the routes in Lucknow region with effect from the date of the resolution.

2. All the petitions except that of Writ Petition No. 314 of 1968 are operators on some or the other route in the Lucknow Region. The petitioner of Writ Petition No. 314 of 1968 is an association of operators providing motor passenger transport on the routes in this State. These petitioners challenge the validity of the aforesaid resolution for a number of reasons to appear from discussion to follow hereafter. The main relief in each case is that the impugned resolution dated 15th December, 1967 passed by the Regional Transport Authority, Lucknow Region, Lucknow be quashed though in some petitions some other reliefs have also been claimed, such as in Petition No. 65 it is further prayed that the Regional Transport Authority impleaded as opposite party No. 2 in it be restrained from issuing permits more than one on Unnao Sandila route to which it relates since applications had been invited for the grant of only one permit on that route and further that the Regional Transport Authority be restrained from issuing any temporary permit on that route during the pendency of the applications for the grant of permanent permit.

3. Regional Transport Authority has contested each of these petitions. A counter affidavit has been filed in Writ Petition No. 195 of 1968 and another in Writ Petition No. 233 of 1968. No counter-affidavit appears to have been filed in any other petition.

4. I have heard learned counsel appearing for these petitioners and learned Standing Counsel appearing for the opposite party at some length. Three points have been urged in support of the petition. The first contention raised on behalf of the petitioners is that it is incumbent on the authority to give notice to the existing operators whenever it chooses to revise under Section 47 (3) of the Motor Vehicles Act strength on any route. A similar contention was raised before a Division Bench of this Court of which I happened to be a member in the case of Lakshmi Narain Agarwala v. State Transport Authority U. P. Lucknow, 1967 All LJ 657 = (AIR 1967 All 573). In that case the contention was rejected. Material observations which occur on page 660 (of All LJ) = (at p. 576 of AIR) may be reproduced below:—

".....We are unable to see as to how a person placed in the position of the petitioner can claim as a matter of right to be heard by a Regional Transport Authority whenever it decides to undertake redetermination of the strength on a route under sub-section (3). Obviously, if no such right has been conferred on him by the statute, he can have none unless it be possible to say that by such determination any of his rights is affected. It may be that if a larger number of operators is put on the route with the result that the profits so far earned by the existing operators become divisible among a larger number of persons and as such, an increase in the strength of the route may, in ultimate analysis, mean some diminution in the income of existing operators.

But that fact by itself does not furnish the existing operators with any cause of action in so far as by getting permits they get no monopoly and, as such, whatever be the ultimate effect of an increase in the strength on the route it does not entitle them to claim notice. It thus follows that neither there is any provision in the Act or in the rules requiring a notice being given to an existing operator in regard to a proposal to increase the number of operators on a route, nor the determination of such a matter affects prejudicially an existing operator so as to entitle him to be heard before the proposed action is taken. In that view of the matter we are unable to countenance the contention of the learned counsel that an existing operator must have his say in the matter of determination of the strength on a route under sub-section (3) of S. 47 before a final decision is taken thereunder."

Learned counsel urges that in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Shiv Charan Dass Sharma v. Regional Transport Authority, 1968 All LJ 279 = (AIR 1969 All 269) (FB) and the decision of the Supreme Court in the appeal from the aforesaid case from which I have reproduced above certain material observations, AIR 1968 SC 410, Lakshmi Narain Agarwal v. State Transport Authority, U. P., the view expressed by the Division Bench must be taken to have been impliedly overruled. I am unable to agree with this contention. My attention has been drawn to the following observations in the Full Bench case occurring on page 286 (of All LJ) = (at p. 276 of AIR):

"Once a valid permit is granted to an operator he has a right to carry on his business of plying his vehicle on the route concerned and the right thus given to him is a proprietary right."

I fail to see as to how these observations affect the decision in Lakshmi Narain's case, 1967 All LJ 657 = (AIR 1967 All 573) (Supra). These observations at the most mean that a permit holder has a right to ply his vehicle thereunder in accordance with the terms thereof and has also a right to see that none is inducted on the particular route otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act. These observations do not in my opinion go any further. They cannot be construed to confer any right on an existing operator to resist revision of strength by the authority concerned under Section 47 (3) of the Act. With regard to the contention that an existing operator has no right to prefer a revision under Section 64-A of the Motor Vehicles Act from an order revising strength on a route the Supreme Court in Lakshmi Narain's case, AIR 1968 SC 410 observes in paragraph 7 on page 413:—

"We are unable to say that no existing operator can be aggrieved by an order made under Section 47 (3), increasing or decreasing the number of stage carriages; it would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case."

From these observations it is sought to argue that according to the decision of the Supreme Court an existing operator has a right of revision under Section 64-A from an order determining strength on a route and as such it must be inferred that he is entitled to have his say in the matter even before Regional Transport Authority while a strength on a route is being re-determined. I fail to see as to how that can be inferred from the abovesaid observations of the Supreme Court. In my view these observations are based on the language of Section 64-A pure and simple. In fact Section 64-A is not designed to confer any right on any one but only to define revisional powers of the State Transport Authority though no doubt in its first proviso it says that the State Transport Authority shall not entertain any application from a person aggrieved by an order of Regional Transport Authority unless the same is made within 30 days from the date of the order. It is because of this provision in the proviso that it is possible to infer that a person aggrieved by an order of a Regional Transport Authority can invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority provided he conforms to the rule of limitation laid down therein. It cannot in my opinion be construed to confer a right of revision on a person who feels aggrieved by an order of a Regional Transport Authority. Moreover, having regard to the language of the first proviso to Section 64-A, at the most it can be said that a person aggrieved by an order of Regional Transport Authority can invoke revisional jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority. That would be so by virtue of a specific provision in the Act. That there is no specific provision requiring notice to an existing operator at the stage of Section 47 (3) is not in controversy. The argument that in view of what is provided in subsequent Cl. (f) to sub-s. (1) of S. 47 (it be taken that an existing operator has a right to make representations at the stage of Section 47 (3)) was repelled by a Division Bench of this Court in Lakshmi Narain's case, 1967 All LJ 657 = (AIR 1967 All 573) and that view has been upheld by the Supreme Court in AIR 1968 SC 410. Material observations occur in paragraph 5 on page 412. These are:—

"The learned counsel contends that the expression "matters mentioned in sub-section (1)" occurring in sub-section (3) refers back not only to matters mentioned in sub-clauses (a) to (f) to sub-section (1) in Section 47 but also the right of representation mentioned in sub-section (1).

We are unable to accept this line of reasoning as being sound."

So it is now settled that there is no provision in the Act requiring a notice to an existing operator at the stage of Section 47 (3). Such being the position, an existing operator cannot claim notice or right of hearing at the said stage unless it be possible for him to establish that by a re-determination of strength under Sec. 47 (3) any of his rights is affected. A person may be aggrieved by an order even without his right being affected. The Motor Vehicles Act is a regulatory Act. Its main purpose is to regulate vehicular traffic with a view to achieve maximum public convenience having due regard to relevant factors, such as the condition of road, demand of vehicular service in a particular region, number and nature of transport services available in a particular region and so on. Thus if a permit is granted under the provisions of the Act to a particular person to ply his vehicle on a particular route, it is obvious that it does not confer on him any right to exclude any person who is likewise granted a permit in accordance with the provisions of the Act. By introduction of another person on the route he may feel aggrieved in so far as such other person is likely to divide the income derived so far by him alone. That way he may be said to be aggrieved. But it cannot by any means be said that by such introduction of another person any of his rights has been affected. So even if an existing operator is a person who can invoke revisional jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority under Section 64-A on feeling aggrieved by an order of a Regional Transport Authority under Section 47 (3), it does not follow therefrom that any of his rights is affected by such an order so as to entitle him to claim a hearing from the authority concerned before it passes an order under Section 47 (3). Here, I may refer to the following observations of the Supreme Court in paragraph 7 of the report in AIR 1968 SC 410:

"The High Court, as stated above, was of the view that at the stage of Section 47 (3) existing operators would not be entitled to be heard by the Regional Transport Authority. But assuming that it is so, this does not affect the right of revision conferred by Section 64-A."

If right of revision under Section 64-A is not dependant on right of hearing by the Regional Transport Authority, I fail to see as to how the right of hearing at the stage of Section 47 (3) follows from the right of revision under S. 64-A.

5. Another argument raised in this connection is with reference to limitation provided in the first proviso to Sec. 64-A. It is said that unless it be conceded that an existing operator is entitled to notice at the stage of Section 47 (3), it would be well nigh impossible for him to conform to the period of limitation provided in the first proviso to Section 64-A for invoking revisional jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority thereunder. In reply the learned Standing Counsel maintains that the expression "from the date of the order" occurring in the first proviso to Section 64-A is to be construed to mean "from the date of notice of the order." In support of his contention he places reliance on the case of H. M. Shantanna v. State Transport Authority in Mysore, AIR 1960 Mys 141. The headnote of the Mysore case says that under Section 64-A, Motor Vehicles Act limitation for revision against the order of the Regional Transport Authority to the State Transport Authority begins from the date the aggrieved party has notice of the order of the Regional Transport Authority and not from the date the order is made. As against that, the learned counsel for the petitioners places reliance on the following observations in paragraph 24 of the report in the case of Municipal Board, Pushkar v. State Transport Authority, Rajasthan, AIR 1965 SC 458:—

"There is considerable force therefore, in the argument that if the legislature had intended that an application for revision under Section 64-A may be made within 30 days from the date of intimation or knowledge of the order to the aggrieved person it would have said so; and in the absence of any such thing the Court is bound to hold that the application will be barred unless made within 30 days from the date of the order by which the person is aggrieved."

Learned Standing Counsel has then drawn my attention to the case of Harish Chandra Raj Singh v. Deputy Land Acquisition Officer, AIR 1961 SC 1500. In the last mentioned case after discussing some authorities it is observed in paragraph 11 on page 1505:—

"These decisions show that where the rights of a person are affected by any order and limitation is prescribed for the enforcement of the remedy by the person aggrieved against the said order by reference to the making of the said order, the making of the order must mean either actual or constructive communication of the said order to the party concerned. Therefore, we are satisfied that the High Court of Allahabad was in error in coming to the conclusion that the application made by the appellant in the present proceedings was barred under the proviso to S. 18 of the Act."

In my view it is unnecessary to come to a definite conclusion as to whether or not the words "from the date of the order" occurring in the first proviso to S. 64-A can be construed in the manner indicated in the Mysore case because in any view of the matter the provision for limitation in the first proviso to Section 64-A for an application in revision to be moved thereunder cannot, in my opinion, be construed to confer a right of hearing before the Regional Transport Authority upon the person who may invoke revisional jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority under Section 64-A. If, as shown earlier, re-determination of strength under Section 47 (3) does not affect any right of an existing operator, he cannot claim a right of hearing before the Regional Transport Authority even if he may invoke revisional jurisdiction under Sec. 64-A on feeling aggrieved by a re-determination of strength under Section 47 (3). I would accordingly repeal the contention that an existing operator is entitled to notice at the stage of Section 47 (3).

6. The other contention urged on behalf of the petitioners is that a scrutiny of the impugned resolution would itself disclose that the decision incorporated therein proceeds on considerations not germane to determination of strength under Section 47 (3) and further that in fact the Regional Transport Authority did not at all apply its mind to any point material for such determination. This contention of the learned counsel does not appear to be without substance.

In its first sentence the resolution says that the authority had given serious consideration to the matter of grant of permits under the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act. In the second sentence it says that because of fixation of strength on different routes some such evils have crept in that it is essential to introduce some drastic changes to remove those evils. In the third sentence it says that some persons who obtain permits misuse them. In its fourth sentence it says that we have therefore, come to this conclusion that if the limit of permits on routes is altogether done away with these evils would disappear.

Then comes the decision to the effect that limit of permits on all the routes in Lucknow region be revoked. In my view considerations stated in the resolution as the reason for revoking the limit on the routes in Lucknow region are obviously such as appear to have nothing to do with the matters which are to be taken into consideration for determining strength under Section 47 (3). There is nothing on record to show as to what material was before the Regional Transport Authority to entitle it to say that some of the permit-holders after obtaining permits misuse them. The resolution itself does not indicate as to in what manner the permits were misused. If the idea is that permit-holders or some of them allowed vehicles owned by others to be plied thereunder then obviously that would not be an abuse or misuse of the permit. It is ruled in the case of Khalil-ul-Rahman Khan v. State

Transport Appellate Tribunal, AIR 1963 All 383 that there is no provision in the Motor Vehicles Act which obliges a permit-holder to ply only that vehicle thereunder which he himself owns. As pointed out in the case it is open to a permit-holder to ply under his permit a vehicle owned by another and that would obviously be on such terms as may be agreed upon between the two. This decision of this Court is approved by the Supreme Court in the case of K. M. Vishwanatha Pillai v. K. M. Shanmugam Pillai decided on 25th November, 1968. Reference may be made to item No. 771 of 1968 SC (Notes), 524 = (AIR 1969 SC 493). Considerations indicated in Cls. (a) to (d) to sub-section (1) of S. 43 of the Act are obviously relevant for determination of strength on a particular route at a given time. Far from suggesting that these are the only matters which are to be taken into consideration while determining strength under Section 47 (3), I venture to say that those are certainly some of the relevant considerations which should weigh with the authority while determining strength under Sec. 47 (3). None of these appears to have been taken into account while passing the impugned resolution. On the other hand, as appears from an analysis of the resolution indicated above matters for the factual existence of which there was presumably no evidence whatsoever before the Regional Transport Authority and which appear to have hardly anything to do with the determination of strength on a route, have been made a basis for the revocation of strength on all the routes in a particular region irrespective of varying factors obtaining on different routes in relation to matters mentioned in Cls. (a) to (d) of sub-section (1) of S. 43. These facts do indicate that the Regional Transport Authority acted in the matter mechanically rather by applying its mind to relevant factors. I have already indicated above that the so-called abuse of permit is, having regard to the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act, not at all an abuse. The fact, that there existed different strength on each different route in the Lucknow Region prior to the passing of the impugned resolution, is enough to show that varying conditions existed on different routes in the region so as to justify fixation of different strength on these routes. If in such circumstances a uniform decision has been taken to revoke limit on each route in the region and grant permits to all eligible applicants regardless of the number of applications pending in respect of any route, there is no escape from the conclusion that such a resolution is bad in the eye of law and cannot be permitted to stand. I accordingly conclude that the contention raised on behalf of the petitioners must prevail.

7. The last and the third contention raised on behalf of the petitioners is that notwithstanding the use of the word "may" in Section 47 (3), the provision contained therein is mandatory and not directory. It is well settled that the use of the expression "may" or "shall" is not conclusive of the matter. As to whether a particular provision is directory or mandatory notwithstanding the expression such as "may" or "shall" it uses depends on the intent of the Legislature and the same is to be gathered not only from the language of the particular provision but also from various other relevant factors. In this connection reference may be made to the following passage in Crawford on Statutory Construction on page 516:—

"The question as to whether a statute is mandatory or directory depends upon the intent of the legislature and not upon the language in which the intent is clothed. The meaning and intention of the legislature must govern, and these are to be ascertained, not only from the phraseology of the provision, but also by considering its nature, its design, and the consequences which would follow from construing it the one way or the other." That being so, while interpreting Sec. 47 (3), we have not to go only by its language but also by other factors such as indicated in the quotation cited above. There is no denying the fact that the Motor Vehicles Act is a regulatory Act—main purpose being to regulate vehicular traffic with due regard to relevant factors such as among others those indicated in Section 43 of the Act. If no limit were fixed on any route as envisaged by Section 47 (3), it would always be open to a person intending to ply a vehicle on any such route to make an application as envisaged by the earlier part of sub-section (1) of S. 57 and on such application a permit shall have to be issued after observing due formalities unless the Regional Transport Authority comes to a conclusion that the applicant is not a suitable person for the grant of a permit. In that event there would never arise an occasion for judging comparative merits of the various competing applicants for the grant of permits with the result that public interest may thereby suffer. Also in that event there would arise no occasion for the proviso to sub-section (3) of S. 57 coming into play. Failure to fix strength under Section 47 (3) may very well nullify the very purpose of the Act which is primarily to regulate vehicular traffic having regard to relevant considerations.

Considered in this background, the provision contained in Section 47 (3) cannot possibly be held to be directory. I may refer to the following observations made by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mahfooz Jan v. State Transport Tribunal, Lucknow, Special Appeal No.

1060 of 1967 connected with Civil Misc. Writs Nos. 3396 of 1967 and 4210, 4211 and 4212 of 1968 decided on 13th March, 1969 (All) a certified copy of which judgment has been placed before me:—

"From this observation it would be seen that the provisions of Section 47 (3) of the Act have been treated by their Lordships of the Supreme Court as the first duty of the Transport Authority in every case i.e. deciding the number of permits that have to be granted and then to take up the question of the fitness of individual applicants."

Reference may also be made to the following observations of the Supreme Court in R. Obliswami Naidu v. Additional State Transport Appellate Tribunal, Madras, Civil Appeal No. 1426 of 1968 decided on 17th February, 1969 (SC):—

"On an examination of the relevant provisions of the Act and the purpose behind Sections 47 and 57, we are convinced that before granting a stage carriage permit two independent steps have to be taken. Firstly, there should be a determination by the R. T. A. under Section 47 (3) of the number of stage carriages for which stage carriage permits may be granted in that route. Thereafter applications for stage carriage permits in the route should be entertained. The R. T. A. is not competent to grant stage carriage permits for more carriages than fixed under Section 47 (3)."

The above-cited observations made by a Division Bench of this Court and by their Lordships of the Supreme Court clearly indicate that Section 47 (3) enjoins a duty on the authority to limit the number of stage carriages for which stage carriage permits may be granted in the region or in any specified area or on any specified route within the region, and further that so long as that has not been done, there arises no occasion for the authority to dispose of applications pending before it for the grant of permits. It thus follows that the direction conferred on the authority under Section 47 (3) is in fact coupled with an obligation. That being so, the provision contained in Section 47 (3) cannot but be held to be mandatory. In this connection I may refer to the following observations of the Supreme Court in the case of State of Uttar Pradesh v. Jogendra Singh, AIR 1963 SC 1618 which occur in paragraph 8 of the report:—

"But it is well settled that the word "may" is capable of meaning "must" or "shall" in the light of the context. It is also clear that where a discretion is conferred upon a public authority coupled with an obligation, the word "may" which denotes discretion should be construed to mean a command."

I have thus no hesitation in accepting the contention raised on behalf of the petitioners that Section 47 (3) is mandatory and not directory. Learned Standing Counsel drew my attention to a single Judge decision of this Court in Balkrishna Khattri v. Regional Transport Authority, Lucknow, (Civil Misc. Writ No. 4286 of 1967 connected with Civil Misc. Writ No. 4320 of 1967 decided on 23rd February, 1968 (All)) wherein he has held that provision contained in Section 47 (3) is directory and contended that if I did not agree with the view expressed therein, it was necessary for me to refer the matter to a larger Bench. Normally no doubt I should have in the circumstances referred the matter to a larger Bench but there are two reasons why I do not propose to do so in the instant case. My first reason is that the decision of these writ petitions does not hinge on the controversy under consideration namely whether Section 47 (3) is directory or mandatory because even if it is held to be directory, the petitions would have to be allowed in view of my finding recorded above on the second point urged on behalf of the petitioners. My other reason is that the above-cited observations of a Division Bench of this Court and of the Supreme Court regarding the true import of Section 47 (3) go a long way to shake the authority of the single bench decision referred to by the learned Standing Counsel. For the reasons mentioned above, I am of opinion that the view expressed in the two writ petitions by a learned single Judge referred to by the learned Standing Counsel requires reconsideration but it is not necessary to refer that controversy to a larger Bench in the instant case because the decision of these petitions, in view of my finding on point No. 2, will in any event be in favour of the petitioners.

8. In the end, I allow these petitions and quash the impugned resolution revoking strength on all the routes in Lucknow Region. No other relief appears to be necessary in any of these writ petitions since once the resolution revoking strength on all routes in Lucknow region has been quashed, the Regional Transport Authority has in the matter of grant of permits to proceed on the basis of strength in existence unless the same has been revised according to law. I make no order as to costs.

AIR 1970 ALLAHABAD 221 (V 57 C 34)
MAHESH CHANDRA, J.

Sri Ram Gopal and another, Appellants v. Surendra Kumar and others, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1402 of 1961, D/- 2-9-1968 against decree of Civil J., Farrukhabad, D/- 2-12-1960.

EM/GM/C276/69/SNV/D

(A) Registration Act (1908), Ss. 34, Proviso, 35 (3), 72 and 73 — Non-appearance of executant — When may amount to denial of execution. AIR 1918 Cal 225, Dissented from.

Non-appearance of the executant may amount to denial of execution within Section 72 if he wilfully refuses or neglects to appear and admit execution in obedience to a summons for that purpose. It is a question of fact to be determined whether the executant wilfully refused or neglected to appear and admit execution even though he had received summons. It does not follow from his mere non-appearance that he wilfully refuses or neglects to attend and admit execution. AIR 1918 Cal 225, Dissented from. (Case law discussed). (Para 6)

(B) Registration Act (1908), Ss. 72, 73 and 77 — Refusal by Sub-Registrar to register document — Refusal not on ground of denial of execution — Appeal under S. 72 — Maintainability — Order of District Registrar whether passed under S. 72 or S. 73 and amounting to refusal to order registration — Suit against, is maintainable under S. 77.

Where on failure of the executant to appear, the Sub-Registrar merely refuses registration and the refusal is not on the ground of denial of execution, the only course open to get the document registered is to file appeal to the District Registrar. In the absence of any evidence to the effect that the executant wilfully refused or neglected to appear and admit execution, the order of the Sub-Registrar cannot be taken as one of refusal on ground of denial of execution. The District Registrar cannot dismiss the appeal as not maintainable under Section 72 and on his refusal to order registration, suit under Section 77 is maintainable. (1912) 9 All LJ 756, Foll.

(Para 9)

Moreover, even assuming that proper course is to file application under Section 73, and the District Registrar refuses, whether rightly or wrongly, (for want of verification) to treat the appeal as an application, that order amounts to refusal to order registration. A suit under S. 77 is therefore, maintainable. AIR 1931 All 507 (FB) & AIR 1924 Lah 28, Rel. on.

Baleshwari Prasad and R. C. Ghatak, for Appellant; K. C. Saksena, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by Ram Gopal and Kishan Chand, appellants Nos. 1 and 2 against Jamuna Prasad, Chanda Devi, Ram Kali, Munni, Mithlesh Kumar, Surendra Kumar, Virendra Kumar and Ramendra Kumar respondents, who are the heirs of Jagannath Prasad. Jamuna Prasad is now dead and is represented by Smt. Bataso, Mahesh Chandra, Dinesh Chandra, Ramesh Chandra, Suresh Chandra, Kumari Asha Devi and Kumari Usha Devi respondents 2/2 to 2/7. Smt. Ram Kali is also now dead and her legal representatives are already on the record.

2. On 11-12-1957, an agreement was executed by the appellants on the one hand and Jamuna Prasad and Jagannath Prasad on the other in respect of a Sahan land in district Farrukhabad. It was presented for registration by Jamuna Prasad on 8-1-1958. Jamuna Prasad and Ram Gopal, appellant No. 1 admitted execution, but Jagannath Prasad did not appear before the Sub-Registrar. Registration was thereupon postponed. On 10-1-1958 registration was refused as to Jagannath Prasad executant by the Sub-Registrar. The appellants then presented an appeal to the District Registrar, but it was dismissed on 10-1-1959. On 9-2-1959, this suit was filed by the appellants for directing the respondents to get the document registered, and in case they failed to do so for directing the Sub-Registrar to register the document. Jagannath Prasad died before the institution of the suit and respondents 1 and 3 to 8 are his legal representatives.

3. In defence, execution of the document by Jagannath Prasad was denied. But it is no longer in dispute that the document was executed by Jagannath Prasad also. Nor is the question of the presentation of the document before the Sub-Registrar within time in dispute now. The only question in controversy now is whether the suit was or was not legally maintainable because an appeal was filed before the District Registrar and no application under Section 73 of the Registration Act was made before him within 30 days of the refusal of the Sub-Registrar. The learned Munsif decreed the suit. The first appellate Court allowed the appeal, reversed the decree of the learned Munsif and dismissed the suit, inasmuch as Jagannath Prasad did not appear before the Sub-

Registrar to admit execution of the document. His non-appearance was treated by the Sub-Registrar as a denial of the execution and the appellant should have consequently filed an application before the District Registrar under Sec. 73 and not an appeal under Section 72 of the Registration Act. Since no application was filed in accordance with the provisions of Section 73 the procedure provided by law was held not to have been complied with, and consequently no suit was held maintainable under Section 77 of the Registration Act.

4. The learned counsel for the appellants contends that in the first place mere non-appearance does not amount to a denial of execution, that the Sub-Registrar himself did not refuse to register on the ground of a denial of execution and that the District Registrar was in error in having treated the order of the Sub-Registrar as a refusal to register on such a ground and should not have dismissed the appeal. The learned counsel for the appellant also contends that even if the order of the sub-registrar be treated as being one on the basis of denial of execution and the appeal could not be treated as an application since it was not verified in accordance with Section 3 of the Registration Act, the order of the District Registrar amounted to a refusal to order registration of a document and that the suit was consequently maintainable under Section 77 of the Registration Act.

5. The document presented for registration was filed in the trial Court, but, after the decree of the trial Court the document was returned to the appellants for presentation to the Sub-Registrar for registration. We considered it necessary to have the document before us and we found that all that the Sub-Registrar said on 8-2-1958 was that the execution had been admitted by Jamuna Prasad and Sri Ram Gopal, who was acting also as the guardian of appellant No. 2. The order dated 8-2-1958 further said that the registration was postponed. This was evidently because Jagannath Prasad had not appeared to admit execution of the document. The order of the Sub-Registrar dated 10-4-1958 is "Registration refused as to Jagannath Prasad executant." It is thus evident that the Sub-Registrar's order does not say that the registration was refused because of the denial of the execution by Jagannath Prasad. The Court below has taken the view that non-appearance of Jagannath Prasad before the Sub-Registrar amounted in law to a denial of execution. For this the Court below has relied on Anila Debi v. Moni Mohan Mukerjee, AIR 1918 Cal 225. In that case it was held that no appeal lies to the Registrar against the refusal of a Sub-Registrar to register a document upon the wilful failure of the executant of the document to appear before the Sub-Registrar, as such failure amounts to a denial of execution within the meaning of Section 72 of the Registration Act and that in such a case the only procedure open to the party presenting it was to apply to the Registrar under Section 73 to direct registration. In that case Fletcher, J. speaking for the Court observed:—

"The authorities in this Court establish clearly that a wilful failure to appear before a Sub-Registrar amounts to a denial of execution within the meaning of S. 72, Registration Act."

It appears that Calcutta and Bombay High Courts have repeatedly held that wilful refusal or neglect to attend and admit execution is equivalent to denial of execution within the meaning of the Registration Act. This was the view taken in Radhakissen Rowra Dakna v. Chooneelall Dutt, (1880) ILR 5 Cal 445 and in Eziekeil and Co. v. Annoda Charan Sen, ILR 50 Cal 180 = (AIR 1923 Cal 35). In the later case it was observed that the phrase 'denial of execution' is not defined but the neglect of the executant of a deed to appear in the registration office in obedience to a summons for enforcing his attendance, has been treated as equivalent to a denial of execution within the meaning of Section 35. Farran, J. in re Shaik Abdul Aziz, (1887) ILR 11 Bom 691 followed (1880) ILR 5 Cal 445 and held that the non-appearance of A in pursuance of summons was equivalent to a denial of execution within the meaning of Section 35 of the Registration Act, and that under the provisions of that section the Sub-Registrar was bound to 'refuse to register' the deed.

6. It will appear from the study of Ss. 34 and (sic 35) of the Registration Act that Section 34 provides that subject to the provisions contained in this part and in Sections 41, 43, 45, 69, 75, 77, 88 and 89 no document shall be registered under this act unless the persons executing such document, or their representatives, assigns or agents authorised as aforesaid appear before the registering officer within the time allowed for presentation under Sections 23, 24, 25 and 26 of the Act. The proviso will however, show that the section proceeds to take into account non-appearance because of an urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, and in cases where the delay does not exceed four months allows registration on payment of a fine not exceeding ten times of the proper registration fee in addition to the fee if any payable under Section 25. Sub-sections (1) and (3) of Section 35 provide for admission and denial of the documents respectively. Sub-section (1) provides for a case where execution is admitted. Sub-section (3) of Section 35 provides for those cases in which the execution is denied by the person by whom the document purports to be executed or if such a person appears to the registering officer to be a minor, an idiot, or a lunatic or if any person by whom the document purports to be executed is dead and his representative or assign denies its execution. In such cases the registering officer shall refuse to register the document as to the person so denying, appearing or dead. Sections 72 and 73 do not mention the appearance of a person at all but refer to the denial of execution. The High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay have held that even a non-appearance of the executant may amount to denial of execution if he wilfully refuses or neglects to appear and admit execution in obedience to a summons for that purpose. They proceeded on the basis that it would defeat the object of the Act if it were held that a person executing a document requiring registration and successfully evading or deliberately disobeying the process of the Registration Office can prevent a document being registered at least for eight months. It is true, there may occur cases in which a person may be willing to appear and in fact proceed to the registration office to appear before the Registrar, to admit execution in obedience to summons but meets with an accident on the way and is consequently unable to appear before him. In such a case, it would not be logical to conclude a denial of execution from his mere non-appearance. That was perhaps the reason why in the leading case of (1880) ILR 5 Cal 445 the words wilful refusal or neglect to attend and admit execution (sic) because of an accident or illness cannot be said to have wilfully refused or neglected to attend and admit execution. It is only in the later decision of the Calcutta High Court in AIR 1918 Cal 225 that the High Court went further and held without saying so definitely that failure of a person to appear in spite of summons amounted to denial of execution. With due respect to their Lordship of the Calcutta High Court I, find myself unable to agree to such a proposition. It would be a question of fact to be determined whether the executant wilfully refused or neglected to appear and admit execution even though he had received summons. It does not follow from his mere non-appearance that he wilfully refuses or neglects to attend and admit execution.

7. In Uttam Singh v. Ratan Devi, AIR 1924 Lah 28 Moti Sagar, J. speaking for the Court observed:—

"We do not see any valid reason why a mere failure to appear, which may be due to an accident or to any other legitimate cause should be held to be wilful, and if the registration is refused, the refusal to register be held to be due to a denial of execution." The same reasoning will apply to the case of a neglect to attend and admit execution by a person who is ill and thus physically incapable of attending the registration office or is prevented by accident from doing so. He cannot be said to have neglected to attend the registration office to admit execution. Learned counsel for the respondent pointed out the appellant's allegation in the plaint that in spite of notice Jagannath Prasad did not appear for the registration of the deed. But there is nothing in the plaint whatsoever to show that the appellants admitted that he wilfully refused or neglected to attend the registration office. Nor does the order of the Sub-Registrar show that there was any such wilful refusal or neglect or that he refused registration because of denial of registration either express or implied.

8. In Hayat Ali v. Muhammad Sadiq, (1912) 9 All LJ 756 Griffin, J., referred to the argument in which the learned counsel for the respondent supported the decision of the Court below on the admission that registration of the document was refused on the score of denial of execution. Griffin, J. referred to the order of the Sub-Registrar and observed that it is clear from the order of the Sub-Registrar that the registration was refused not on the ground of denial of registration and held that an appeal consequently lay to the District Registrar and he in his turn having refused to register the document, the plaintiff was under the provisions of Section 77 entitled to file a suit in the Civil Court for the declaration of his right to have the document registered.

9. On reading the order of the Sub-Registrar it is difficult to conceive of what the appellant could do other than what he actually did. The Sub-Registrar merely refused registration as to Jagannath having postponed it once. He did not say that registration was refused on the ground of denial of execution. The obvious course then for the appellant was to go in appeal to the District Registrar. There was no reason for him to infer that Registration had been refused on the ground of denial of execution when the order of the Sub-Registrar itself did not say so. The appeal to the District Registrar cannot be said to have been ill advised, and the District Registrar could not take the order of the Sub-Registrar as one of refusal on grounds of denial of execution when there was nothing on the record to show that there was such a denial or that there was any lawful refusal or neglect to appear and admit execution. No evidence was produced before the Courts below to the effect that there was such a wilful refusal or neglect to appear and admit execution. Nor is there any finding of either of the Courts below to that effect. The District Registrar should not therefore, have held that no appeal lay under Section 72 of the Registration Act and should not have refused to order its registration.

10. The learned counsel for the appellants further contends that even if it be accepted that the appellant should have filed an application and that the appeal was not properly verified as an application and could not therefore, be treated as an application, even then the District Registrar's order is one refusing to order registration and that, consequently, the suit would lie under Section 77 of the Registration Act. In Wali Mohammad Khan v. Ishak Ali Khan, AIR 1931 All 507 (FB) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that omission to comply with the provisions regarding presentation of plaint is a mere irregularity and not an absence of jurisdiction, which can be cured if the plaintiff has acted in good faith. It was further held that the absence of signature or verification or for the matter of that presentation on the part of some of the plaintiffs did not affect jurisdiction of the Court. Obviously, even if the plaint or an application is not properly verified or presented the Court has the jurisdiction to exercise its discretion to allow or to refuse proper verification by the plaintiff or the applicant. If it allows proper verification, it cannot be said to have acted beyond its jurisdiction. It has power to exercise discretion rightly or wrongly in whatever manner. Whether the discretion to refuse to allow verification is exercised rightly or wrongly it is an order refusing to treat the appeal as an application and thus amounting to a refusal to order registration. A suit under Sec. 77 would, therefore, be maintainable. This was also the view taken in AIR 1924 Lah 28. As mentioned already, the execution of the document by the appellants and Jagannath Prasad and Jamuna Prasad is already admitted. The District Registrar was, therefore, in error in (sic. not) ordering the registration of the document.

11. The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs throughout. The decree of the Court below is set aside and that of the trial Court is restored.

Appeal allowed.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Pre. — Interpretation of Statutes — Principle of, is that all provisions must be harmoniously construed so as to achieve object for which law was enacted. (Para 7)

(B) Administrator General's Act (1913), Ss. 14, 2 (2) — Power of High Court to grant letters of administration — Estate of exempted person — Administrator General can be granted letters. AIR 1956 Hyd 149, Dissented from.

When Section 14 says that the Administrator General can apply for letters of administration in any case, whether the deceased was exempted or non-exempted person, even within the period of one month from the death of the deceased, it implies that he has the right to apply also beyond the period of one month from the date of death. In the absence of the next-of-kin, he would be entitled under Section 7 to the grant of letters of administration by the High Court. There is nothing in the phraseology of Section 14 which subjects it to the provisions of Sections 9, 10 or 11 or in any way limits the right of the Administrator General to apply for letters of administration. AIR 1956 Hyd 149, Dissented from; AIR 1943 All 356, Approved. (Paras 6, 7)

(C) Administrator General's Act (1913), Ss. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 — Sections deal with different situations — There is no connection between Ss. 9, 10, 11 inter se and between these sections and Ss. 7 and 8.

It cannot be said that the provisions of Sections 7 and 8 cannot be read independently of the provisions of Sections 9, 10 and 11 of the Act. The provisions of Section 10 and 11 apply to the estate of an exempted as well as unexempted person. It is only Section 9 which is confined to the administration of the estate of an exempted person only. It is difficult to find any connection between these sections inter se and between these sections and Sections 7 and 8 of the Act. There is nothing in the scheme of all these sections indicating any inter-dependence. They deal with different situations. Under Section 9 a duty is cast upon the Administrator General to act and he must apply for letters of administration of the estate of any person other than an exempted person. He is under no such duty in respect of an estate of an exempted person. It will not mean that in case of the death of an exempted person the Administrator General has no right to administer his estate in case the deceased has not left any next-of-kin. He may apply or he may not apply. In case he applies to the High Court of his State in which the assets of an exempted person are found, the High Court has no option but to grant him letters of administration in preference to all others in the absence of next-of-kin of the deceased. Also if some one else applies and there is no next-of-kin then the High Court will grant letters of administration to the Administrator General. The provisions of Section 7 and Section 9 of the Act thus are independent of each other and are not inter-linked. AIR 1955 Pat 56, Rel. on. (Paras 8, 9)

ASTHANA, J.:— A Division Bench of the Court while hearing a Special Appeal from an order of a learned single Judge granting Letters of Administration to the Administrator General, in respect of the assets of one Alexander John, doubted the correctness of the decision in the case of Mt. Ram Kali v. Administrator General of U. P., AIR 1943 All 356 and referred the following question to a Full Bench.

"Whether the High Court can grant Letters of Administration to the Administrator General under the Administrator General's Act, 1913 where the deceased was an Indian Christian (and not an Anglo Indian)?"

2. The Administrator General's Act 1913 (Act No. 3 of 1913) (hereinafter called the Act) is a consolidating Act relating to the office and duties of the Administrator General. Sub-section (2) of Section 2 of the Act defines "exempted person" as an Indian Christian, a Hindu, Mohammedan, Parsi or Buddhist or a person exempted under Section 332 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, from the operation of that Act. Thus clearly an Indian Christian was an exempted person within the meaning of the Act. The term Indian Christian was also defined by sub-section (4) of Section 2 of this Act as meaning a native of India who is or in good faith claims to be of unmixed Asiatic descent, and who professes any form of the Christian Religion. It may be of some interest to note that the Administrator General's Act of 1913 has now been repealed and replaced by the Administrator General's Act, 1963 (Act No. 45 of 1963). In the new Act there is no provision for "exempted person." Thus the question which has been referred in a way is now of mere academic interest and may not arise in future. At one stage during the course of the argument before us it was suggested at the Bar that the deceased Alexander John, regarding whose estate Letters of Administration were sought by the Administrator General, was an Angolo-Indian and not an Indian Christian. But that is a question which this Bench will not examine as the case before it is restricted to the question referred.

3. In the Act of 1913 in its Part III, rights, powers, duties and liabilities of the Administrator General are prescribed. Under Section 6 as regards the Administrator General of any State the High Court of that State would be deemed to be a Court of competent jurisdiction for the purpose of granting probate or letters of administration under any law for the time-being in force, wheresoever the estate to be administered were situate within such State. It would thus be seen that it is the High Court of a State which was constituted as the forum from which the Administrator General could seek the grant of Letters of Administration under any law for the time being in force to administer an estate situate within the territorial jurisdiction of the said High Court. Section 7 of the Act which has an important bearing on the question referred to us, may now be reproduced. It runs as follows:—

"Any letters of administration, which are granted after the commencement of this Act by the High Court shall be granted to the Administrator General of the State unless they are granted to the next-of-kin of the deceased."

4. Then follows Section 8 which runs thus:—

"The Administrator General of the State shall be deemed by all the Courts in the State to have a right to letters of administration other than letters pendente lite in preference to that of—

- (a) a creditor; or
- (b) a legatee other than a universal legatee; or
- (c) a friend of the deceased."

The scheme is that when there is no next-of-kin of the deceased, the High Court is enjoined to grant letters of administration for the estate of the deceased to no other person except the Administrator General and Section 8 gives him preference over the class of persons mentioned therein.

5. The learned counsel for the objectors contended that though Section 7 limits the power of the High Courts to grant letters of administration only to the Administrator General, when the deceased has not left any next-of-kin, in preference to the class of persons mentioned in Section 8 yet nothing in those sections conferred a right on the Administrator General to apply for letters of administration, which right is secured to the Administrator General under the succeeding Sections 9, 10 and 11. It was submitted that since our Court has no ordinary original civil jurisdiction it is only Section 9 of the Act which will come into play and the provisions of that section excluded out of its purview the administration of the estate of an 'exempted person.' Section 9 runs as follows:—

"If any person, not being an exempted person, has died leaving within any State assets exceeding the value of two thousand rupees, and if no person to whom any Court would have jurisdiction to commit administration of such assets has, within one month after his death, applied in such State for probate of his will, or for letters of administration of his estate, the Administrator General of the State in which such assets are shall, subject to any rules made by the Government, within a reasonable time after he has had notice of the death of such person, and of his having left such assets, take such proceedings as may be necessary to obtain from the High Court, letters of administration of the estate of such person."

The submission was that while Sections 7 and 8 of the Act merely lay rules of preference in cases where the Administrator General had a right to apply for letters of administration but nothing therein confers upon the Administrator General the right to apply for letters of administration and it is only under Section 9 when any person other than an exempted person dies and the conditions therein are fulfilled that a right accrues to the Administrator General to apply to the High Court for letters of Administration. No doubt the argument raised above at first flush appears to have a logical plausibility but on a deeper consideration will be found to be untenable.

6. A perusal of Section 14 of the Act shows that nothing in the said Act shall be deemed to preclude the Administrator General from applying to the Court for letters of administration in any case within the period of one month from the death of the deceased. Section 14 in its terms applies to all cases whether the deceased were an exempted person or a non-exempted person. It confers upon the Administrator General a right to apply to the Court for letters of administration. There is nothing in the phraseology of S. 14 which subjects it to the provisions of Sections 9, 10 or 11 or in any way limits the right of the Administrator General to apply for letters of administration.

7. The marginal note appended to Section 7 reads: "Administrator General entitled to letters of administration unless granted to next-of-kin." When S. 14 says that the Administrator General can apply for letters of administration in any case, whether the deceased was exempted or non-exempted person, even within the period of one month from the death of the deceased, it implies that he has the right to apply also beyond the period of one month from the date of death. In the absence of the next-of-kin, he would be entitled under Section 7 to the grant of letters of administration by the High Court. It is difficult then to agree with the contention that under the scheme of the Act, the Administrator General has no right to apply for the grant of letters of administration in case of the estate of an exempted person. The fundamental principle of interpretation of statutes is that all the provisions must be harmoniously construed so as to achieve the object for which the law was enacted. The main object behind the Administrator General's Act is to provide for a machinery for the proper administration of estates where there is no next-of-kin of any deceased, by a competent person on the directions of the High Court. It is the Administrator General who is constituted as the competent person under the Act. Inasmuch as after the commencement of the Act, while the High Court is enjoined not to grant letters of administration to any person save the Administrator General when there is no next-of-kin of the deceased, then to say that in regard to the estate of a deceased who falls within the category of an exempted person, as defined under the Act, the Administrator General cannot apply, will amount to denying the power to the High Court which is vested in it by law and to read the provisions of Section 7 of the Act as if there was engrafted therein an exception and no letters of Administration could be granted by the High Court to the Administrator General in respect of the estate of an exempted person.

The following observations of Allsop, J. in the case of AIR 1943 All 356 are apt:—

"If the provisions of Section 7 of the Act were not read to mean that letters of administration could be issued to the Administrator General of the Division even in respect of the estate of an exempted person, then for such an estate no letters of administration could be issued except to the next-of-kin and that would have been contrary to the provisions of Section 234 Succession Act. It is true that the provisions of the Succession Act cannot be read to affect the rights of an Administrator General, but I do not think that the Administrator General's Act without specifically saying so would have contemplated a repeal of the provisions of the Succession Act applied to the persons other than the Administrator General of a Division. I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the Administrator General may apply for letters of administration in respect of any estate and that Section 8, Administrator General's Act must be read so as to mean that he will have a right in preference to creditors of legatees other than universal legatees or friends of the deceased in any Court other than a High Court. In a High Court, of course, he has preference under Section 7 over everybody except the next-of-kin."

8. We think that the law has been correctly stated by Allsop, J. It is not possible to agree with the contention that the provisions of Sections 7 and 8 cannot be read independently of the provisions of Sections 9, 10 and 11 of the Act. The marginal note of Section 9 clearly indicates its purpose. It describes a situation when the Administrator General must apply to the High Court for administering the estates of persons other than exempted persons, while the purpose of Section 10 is to vest power in the High Court to direct the Administrator General to apply for administration of an estate and the purpose of Section 11 is to direct the Administrator General to collect and hold assets until the right of succession or administration is determined. The provisions of Sections 10 and 11 apply to the estate of an exempted as well as an unexempted person. It is only Section 9 which is confined to the administration of the estate of an exempted person only. It is difficult to find any connection between these sections inter se and between these sections and Sections 7 and 8 of the Act. There is nothing in the scheme of all these sections indicating any interdependence. They deal with different situations.

9. Section 9 deals with a special situation. When any person other than an exempted person dies leaving estate exceeding the value of two thousand rupees and no person to whom any Court would have jurisdiction to commit administration of such estate applies within one month of the death for grant of letters of administration of the estate, then it becomes incumbent on the Administrator General of the State in which such estate is situate to take proceeding to obtain letters of administration within a reasonable time after he had notice of the death of such person and of the deceased having left an estate exceeding the value of two thousand rupees. Thus under that section a duty is cast upon the Administrator General to act and he must apply for letters of administration of the estate of any person other than an exempted person. He is under no such duty in respect of an estate of an exempted person. That is to say, if a person other than an exempted person dies leaving an estate exceeding the value of two thousand rupees and the conditions mentioned in Section 9 exist, then the Administrator General would be failing in his duty and would be guilty of breach of his obligation if he does not take steps for the grant of letters of administration, while when an exempted person dies then in the same situation if the Administrator General does not take any steps, he would not be guilty.

of breach of his duty. The policy of the law seems to be that in case of the death of a person not being an exempted person his estate exceeding rupees two thousand in value must be administered by the Administrator General if no other person entitled to administer the estate applies within one month of the death.

The underlying object is to afford by law greater protection to the estate of a person other than an exempted person by placing upon the Administrator General a heavier and more onerous responsibility for seeking directions from the High Court, with the greatest possible expedition. This is also borne out by the provisions of Section 54 of the Act which requires the District Judge to take charge of property of a deceased person other than an exempted person leaving assets within the limits of his jurisdiction and then report the circumstances without delay to the Administrator General of the State. It will not mean that in case of the death of an exempted person the Administrator General has no right to administer his estate in case the deceased has not left any next-of-kin. He may apply or he may not apply. In case he applies to the High Court of his State in which the assets of an exempted person are found the High Court has no option but to grant him letters of administration in preference to all others in the absence of next-of-kin of the deceased. Also if some one else applies and there is no next-of-kin then the High Court will grant letters of administration to the Administrator General. The provisions of Section 7 and Section 9 of the Act thus are independent of each other and are not interlinked.

10. In the case of Gobindlal Nakphopha v. Administrator General of Bihar, AIR 1955 Pat 56 a Division Bench of the Patna High Court took the view that Sections 6, 7 and 8 cannot be so construed as to refer to unexempted persons and these sections were independent of Sections 9, 10 and 11 of the Act. It seems to have approved the decision of Allsop, J. in AIR 1943 All 356. A reference was made to the Division Bench decision of the Hyderabad High Court in the case of Administrator General, Hyderabad v. T. Laxmamma, AIR 1956 Hyd 149 in support of the proposition that the High Court was not competent to grant letters of administration on the application of Administrator General in the case of an exempted person. With great respect to the learned Judges of the Hyderabad High Court we cannot persuade ourselves to agree with their opinion. We think their reasoning that Section 9 of the Act prevents the Administrator General from applying for letters of administration or probate relating to the estate left by an exempted person is not supported by the phraseology of that section and as mentioned above we have respectfully arrived at a contrary conclusion.

11. The question under reference may also be answered in the affirmative, having regard to the practice and precedent all along followed in this Court, permitting the grant of letters of administration to the Administrator General in respect of the assets or estate of an exempted person, in the absence of any next-of-kin of such a deceased. We have already noticed that under the scheme of the new Act there is no such distinction between the estates of exempted and non-exempted persons.

12. For the reasons given above, we answer the referred question in the affirmative.

13. Let the papers of the case now be placed before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for sending the case back to the Division Bench for hearing and deciding the Special Appeal.

Reference answered in affirmative.

N. D. Pant, for Appellants; L. M. Pant, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This is a defendant's appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge Budaun, dated 7th December, 1961. The facts in this case are not in dispute and, succinctly put, are as follows.

2. Smt. Umatul Khatun, wife of Moulvi Tawakkul Husain, was the owner in possession of house No. N-7/6, situate in Mohalla Sheikh Patti. She sold this house to Hem Chand respondent No. 1 (since dead and represented by his heirs) and Tribhuwan Nath respondent No. 2 for a sum of Rs. 1,500 under a registered sale deed dated 25th May, 1951. The two respondents paid the full price to the vendor. On 11th August, 1951 the Assistant Custodian, Evacuee Property, Budaun declared the house as evacuee property. The respondents, as required by the statute, applied for confirmation of the sale under Section 40 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act). Their application was, however, dismissed on 19th October, 1951. The appeal and thereafter revision preferred against the order of dismissal of the application under Section 40 also met the same fate. The respondents, therefore, applied under Rule 22 of the Administration of Evacuee Property (Central) Rules, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the Rules). That application was also rejected, and the respondents were directed to go to the Civil Court. The respondents accordingly, after giving notice under Section 80, C. P. C., filed the suit giving rise to the present appeal for the recovery of Rs. 2075-42 together with interest and costs from the appellant.

2. The suit was contested by the appellant on the grounds that it was barred by time; that the jurisdiction of Civil Court was barred by Section 46 of Act 31 of 1950; and that the transaction was not a bona fide one.

3. The pleadings of the parties gave rise to a number of issues, the main being the issues of jurisdiction and of limitation. The trial Court came to the conclusion that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try the suit, and that the suit was well within time. It also accepted the finding of the Custodian that there was no mala fides on the part of the respondents who paid the sale consideration under the bona fide belief that they would get possession of the house and they had no apprehension that such an old lady aged about 92 years would migrate to Pakistan so soon after the sale. The trial Court held that the conditions required under Rule 22 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Rules were fulfilled in the present case. On these findings the trial Court decreed the suit for Rupees 1,501-52 P.

4. The defendants went up in appeal, and the learned Judge confirmed the findings of the trial Court on the issues of jurisdiction and of limitation. The finding about the bona fide transaction on the part of the respondents does not appear to have been challenged before the lower appellate Court, and therefore, the finding of the trial Court on that issue would also be deemed to have been confirmed by the lower appellate Court. The defendants have now come to this Court in Second Appeal.

5. On the findings recorded by the trial Court, as confirmed by the lower appellate Court, only two points survive for decision in this appeal. The question of bona fides on the part of the respondents is now concluded as finding of fact.

6. Sri N. D. Pant, counsel for the appellants, first took up the issue of jurisdiction. He relied upon Section 46 (d) of the Act. Section 46 reads thus:—

"Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, no civil or revenue Court shall have jurisdiction:

- (a) to entertain or adjudicate upon any question whether any property or any right to or interest in any property is or is not evacuee property; or
- (b) (Omitted).
- (c) to question the legality of any action taken by the Custodian-General or the Custodian under this Act; or
- (d) in respect of any matter which the Custodian-General or the Custodian is empowered by or under this Act to determine."

Sri Pant admits that it is only CL (d) of Section 46 which can apply to the facts of the present case. Clauses (a) and (c) have no application. In my opinion, Section 46 (d) of the Act does not stand as a bar to the civil suit. The respondents, as indicated earlier, first applied for confirmation of the sale under Section 40 of the Act but that was rejected. Thereafter they applied under R. 22 of the Rules. Rule 22 so far as it is pertinent to our case reads—

"22(1). Any person claiming the right to receive any payment from any evacuee or from the property of such evacuee whether in re-payment of any loan advanced or otherwise, may present petition to the Custodian for registration of his claim. Such application shall be signed and verified by the claimant in the same manner as a plaint is required to be signed and verified under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1938.

Explanation:—An application under this sub-rule shall lie in respect of a claim for refund of money paid as consideration for the transfer by an evacuee of any property, where such transfer is not confirmed by the Custodian under Section 40 of the Act.

(2) (a) Where a claim made under sub-rule (1) is supported by—

- (i)
- (ii)
- (iii)
- (iv); or

(b) where such claim is of the nature referred to in the 'Explanation' to sub-rule (1) and the Custodian holds that the transfer of the property in respect of which the claim is made was a bona fide transaction, the Custodian may register the claim or such part thereof as has not been satisfied:

Provided that in the case of a claim of the nature referred to in the Explanation to sub-rule (1), the claim shall be registered only for that amount of money which is proved to have been paid as consideration for the transfer of the property.

(2-A) In any case which does not fall under sub-rule (2), the Custodian shall direct the claimant to establish his claim in a Civil Court.

Explanation—Nothing in this rule shall debar the Custodian from meeting the day to day expenses incurred in the management of evacuee property and such expenses may be paid without sanction. Sanction of the Central Government or the Custodian-General is also not required to the discharge by the Custodian of the legitimate obligations and liabilities incurred in the ordinary course of business of a trading concern carried on by the Custodian whether such liabilities and obligations are incurred before or after the vesting of the business in the Custodian."

7. The aforesaid rule makes it evident that it was open to the respondents to apply for registration of their claim, and the respondents did so apply. The Custodian could register the claim on being satisfied with the conditions contemplated by R. 22 (2) (b), viz., that the transfer of the property in respect of which the claim was made was a bona fide transaction. Sub-rule (2-A) of R. 22 provides for a situation where the transaction was not found by the Custodian to be a bona fide one. In such a situation the Custodian 'shall' direct the claimant to establish his claim in a Civil Court, and actually the Custodian did direct the respondents in this case to get their claim established in a Civil Court. It was under these circumstances that the respondents had to file the suit giving rise to this appeal.

8. In view of Rule 22, Section 46 (d) cannot possibly stand as a bar to the suit. Section 46 has to be read along with R. 22. The Rule itself provides that in case a transaction of transfer was not found to be bona fide the Custodian "shall" direct the claimant to get his claim established in a Civil Court. The filing of such a suit for establishing the claim is clearly contemplated by the Rules framed under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act.

9. Sri Pant next referred to Sections 4 and 28 of the Act. Although from the lower Court's judgment it appears that these sections were never referred to before the Court below, I permitted Sri Pant to refer to them as on the admitted facts of the case it was a pure question of law. Section 4 provides:—

"The provisions of this Act and of the rules and order made thereunder shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any such law."

This section only contemplates that this Act and the rules framed thereunder override other laws. We have, therefore, to examine whether there is any rule or law in the Act or the Rules framed thereunder barring the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. If there is such a provision, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court would be barred; otherwise Civil Court will have jurisdiction. But it has already been noticed earlier that R. 22 instead of creating any bar provides for such a suit.

Section 28 of the Act reads:—

"Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Chapter, every order made by the Custodian-General, District Judge, Custodian, Additional Custodian, Authorised Deputy Custodian, Deputy Custodian or Assistant Custodian shall be final and shall not be called in question in any Court by way of appeal or revision or in any original suit, application or execution proceedings."

The suit giving rise to the present appeal has not been filed to challenge any order of the Custodian: rather the suit has been filed in obedience to the order of the Custodian. Thus, Section 28 of the Act also has no application to the facts of the present case.

10. Next Sri Pant relied upon S. 17 of the Act. It reads thus:—

"17(1): Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, no evacuee property which has vested or is deemed to have vested in the Custodian under the provisions of this Act shall, so long as it remains so vested, be liable to be proceeded against in any manner whatsoever in execution of any decree or order of any Court or other authority, and any attachment or injunction or order for the appointment of a receiver in respect of any such property subsisting on the commencement of the Administration of Evacuee Property (Amendment) Act, 1951, shall cease to have effect on such commencement and shall be deemed to be void.

(2) Where, after the 1st day of March, 1947, any evacuee property which has vested in the Custodian or is deemed to have vested in the Custodian under the provisions of this Act has been sold in execution of any decree or order of any Court or other authority, the sale shall be set aside if an application in that behalf has been made by the Custodian to such Court or authority on or before the 17th day of October, 1950."

On the strength of this section, Sri Pant submitted that after the property had vested in the custodian no evacuee property would be liable to be proceeded against in any manner whatsoever. Sub-section (2) of S. 17 even provides for setting aside the sale of evacuee property in execution of such a decree on the application in that behalf being made by the Custodian. To my mind even this section has no application to the facts of the present case. The respondents have filed their suit for the refund of the sale consideration in respect of a bona fide transfer of property which was subsequently declared to be an evacuee property. The respondents are not proceeding against the evacuee property itself. The learned counsel also referred to a similar provision in Section 15 of Act 44 of 1954. But that section also will have no application for the same reasons as indicated above in respect of the application of Section 17 of the Act.

11. Sri Pant strongly relied upon The "Custodian Evacuee Property Punjab v. Jafran Begam", AIR 1968 SC 169. In that case it was held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court that the Act is a complete Code in itself in the matter of dealing with evacuee property. Section 7 of the Act gives the power to Custodian to determine what properties are evacuee properties. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court or the Revenue Court is barred under Section 46, and no such Court can entertain any suit or adjudicate upon any question whether a particular property or right or interest therein is or is not evacuee property. Where the question whether certain properties are evacuee properties has been decided under Section 7 etc., whether that decision is based on issues of fact or issues of law, the jurisdiction in such a case was held to be clearly barred under Section 46. It would be noticed that the facts in the above case were entirely different from the facts of the present case. In the case in hand there is no question about adjudication of the property as being evacuee or otherwise. The above ruling is, therefore, clearly distinguishable.

12. Sri Pant next relied upon the Explanation added to sub-rule (4) (a) of R. 22 of the Rules and urged that the Custodian has been given the power under the said Rule to discharge the "legitimate obligations and liabilities", and on this basis he argued that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction and it is open to the respondents to approach the Custodian in the matter. In support of his argument he relied upon Raja Bhanu Pratap Singh v. Assistant Custodian E. P. Bahraich, AIR 1966 SC 245 at p. 440. It was held in this case that the Custodian can entertain the claim of the holder of a money decree against the evacuee for satisfaction of his dues out of the assets vested in the Custodian by Section 7 of the Act. It was further held that, in view of Section 17 (1) of the Act the evacuee property cannot be attached in execution of any decree or order of any Court or other authority whether the claim is against the evacuee or it is against the Custodian arising out of any act of administration done by him. The facts of this case are also distinguishable from the facts of the present case.

13. Next Sri Pant relied upon "Assistant Custodian Evacuee Property, Meerut v. Virendra Kumar", 1964 All LJ 132 = (AIR 1965 All 70). It was held in this case that, in view of the provisions of Section 17 (1) once the property vests in the Custodian it cannot be proceeded against in any manner unless expressly provided in the Act itself. Section 16, totally bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in respect of certain matters set out therein. It was, however, held that the effect to be given to a notice under Section 50 is not to make the Custodian a legal representative of the evacuee in a suit filed against him but only to keep him in the picture. It was also held that the amendment of Section 10 (2) (m) of Act 91 of 1956 had completely taken away the right of the Custodian to make any payment to the decree-holder of an evacuee. The respondents in the present case are not proceeding against the evacuee property. They bona fide claim the refund of the amount paid by them as sale consideration in respect of transfer of property which was later declared to be evacuee property. Section 17, therefore, has no application to the facts of the present case.

14. Sri Pant also relied upon S. 10 (2) (a) of the Act, and relied upon the case of AIR 1966 SC 245 in support of his contention that the respondents should approach the Custodian and put up their claim before him. I am unable to accept this argument. So far as the aforesaid Supreme Court Case is concerned, the facts were entirely different and it has got no application to the facts of the present case. The respondents had already been to the Custodian and the Custodian had directed him to establish their claim in a competent Court of law. There is, therefore, no question of their approaching the Custodian now.

15. For the reasons given above I am of the view that the suit is maintainable in Civil Court and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not barred in any manner.

16. The next point involved in the case is the question of limitation. The question to be determined is whether Art. 97 or Art. 120 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act is applicable to the present case.

17. In order to appreciate the point urged by the counsel for the appellant it would be necessary to read Arts. 97 and 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, quoted below:—

Description of suit	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run
97 : For money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails.	Three years	The date of the failure
120 : Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this Schedule.	Six years	When the right to sue accrues.

18. According to Sri Pant, Art. 97 would be applicable to the facts of the present case, while for the respondent it is urged that it is the residuary Art. 120 that would be applicable. In interpreting the Articles of the Limitation Act certain well-established principles have to be borne in mind, e.g., (i) an interpretation which is penal should be avoided; (ii) if possible, the interpretation which does not bar the suit should be preferred to the one which bars the suit; (iii) if there is a specific Article applicable to the facts of the case, the residuary Article should not be applied; and (iv) all the columns of the Article should be construed. That these principles are well established would be evident from the following cases:

(1) "Makhan Lal Rai Pramanik v. Pramath Nath Basu" (AIR 1953 Cal 50);

(2) "K. S. Rama Swami Ayyar v. S. V. Krishnier" AIR 1957 Mad 431.

19. We may examine these cases here. In AIR 1953 Cal 50 it was held that a Court ought not to put such an interpretation upon a statute of limitation by implication and inference as may have a penalizing effect unless the Court is forced to do so by the irresistible force of the language used. The Limitation Act being an Act which takes away or restricts the right to take legal proceedings must, where its language is ambiguous, be construed strictly. To the same effect is the case in AIR 1957 Mad 431.

20. Bearing the aforesaid principles in mind we have now to examine whether Art. 97 would be attracted in the present case.

21. Article 97 can have no application to the facts of the present case for various reasons. In the first place the period of three years is to be calculated from the date of the "failure of the consideration". Now, the question is what will be deemed to be the date of failure. Will it be the date when the application for confirmation of the sale under Section 40 of the Act was dismissed on 19th October, 1951, or it will be the date when the appeal or revision arising out of that order was finally disposed of, or whether it will be the date when the application under R. 22 of the Rules was rejected on 7-6-1954. If we accept 19th October, 1951, and there is no reason why it should not be accepted, as the date of the failure of the consideration, the limitation would start from that date.

It is well established that once a period of limitation starts running, it cannot be arrested. The law of Administration of Evacuee Property Act—the self-contained Act—provides various remedies open to the purchaser under the Act. It also provides that the transferee has to proceed only in the manner provided by the Act. The respondent in this case did proceed in the manner provided by the Act and the Rules, and he filed the suit only when he had exhausted the remedies open to him under the Act. If the respondent could not file the suit just after the 19th of October, 1951, the date of the failure of the consideration, because of certain other obligatory intervening proceedings, that cannot be taken to be the starting point of limitation. In this, the respondent gets support from the case reported in "AIR 1955 Ori 57 at p. 60" Panchanan Das v. Province of Orissa wherein it was held that the plaintiff could not bring the suit on the date of cause of action as it was barred by the provisions of the Defence of India Rules. Thus, if the three columns of Art. 97 are construed, it is evident that this Article will have no application to the facts of the present case.

22. Another reason for holding that Art. 97 will have no application is that if there is a registered document, it is Article 116 which would be applicable and not Art. 97. Article 116 of the Limitation Act reads:—

Description of suit

Period of limitation

Time from which period begins to run.

116. For compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered.

Six years

When the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered.

Admittedly the sale deed in question was a registered document and, therefore, the Article most near and most specific to the facts of the present case could be Article 116, and not 97 (See "AIR 1946 All 159"). If Art. 97, which was sought to be applied by the counsel for the appellant as the relevant Article to the facts of the present case, has no application, we have to fall back upon Art. 116 or the residuary Art. 120 of the Limitation Act. Which of the two Articles — Art. 116 or 120 — would apply, should not detain us, as in either case the period of limitation is six years, and if any of these Articles applied to the present suit, it would be well within time.

23. Sri Pant relied upon "Ram Bali

Singh v. Shyam Sunder Misra", AIR 1922 All 475. In this case a pre-emptor impleaded in the suit only one of the four brothers alienees of the property purchased, due to a mistake of fact. The suit was decreed, and the entire consideration was realized by the alienee who was impleaded and he was given formal possession. The pre-emptor's application for mutation was resisted by the three brothers of the alienee, who were not impleaded, and their objection was allowed except for 1/4th share of the alienee who had been impleaded. Thereafter the pre-emptor filed a suit for possession of the property released in favour of the three brothers or, in the alternative, for proportionate refund of the pre-emption money. It was held in these circumstances that the cause of action arose when the pre-emptor's claim for mutation was resisted, i.e., when the consideration failed or when the mistake of fact was discovered.

24. In the present case, however, the respondents were not in a position to bring the suit as there were certain intervening proceedings which they had to take before they could file a suit. The above ruling has, therefore, no application to the facts of the present case, Mr. Pant cited a few other cases also, but they are all clearly distinguishable.

25. Sri Agrawala, appearing for the respondents, relied upon "AIR 1965 Ker 154", C. Ittycheria v. O. Varughese. In this case a mortgagee brought a suit for realization of money advanced by him on a usufructuary mortgage to the mortgagor on the latter's failure to put the former in possession of the property. It was held that money was advanced not on the strength of a mere promise to execute a mortgage deed but as consideration for a mortgage with possession; payment of money could not be considered as "money paid upon an existing consideration" and the plea that the suit was barred by Art. 97 of the Limitation Act was unsustainable.

26. He also relied upon "AIR 1967 Delhi 91" Ram Lal Puri v. Gokalnagar Sugar Mills Co. Ltd. It was a suit for recovery of earnest money paid under a sale which did not materialize. It was held that the suit would be governed by Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and not by Arts. 62, 97 or 115. In my opinion the cases cited by Mr. Agarwala are more near the case than the cases relied upon by Sri Pant.

27. For the reasons given above I am unable to hold that the view taken by the Courts below was erroneous in any manner on both the points, and so the appeal must be dismissed.

28. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Special Appeal No. 510 of 1966, D/-13-8-1968, against order of R. S. Pathak, J., in C. M. W. P. No. 2641 of 1960, D/- 29-4-1966.

(A) Pensions Act (1871), S. 4 — Suit relating to amount of gratuity — Held, gratuity must be taken to be commuted pension and as such capital sum — Suit in Civil Court maintainable.

A pension is a periodical payment. Once a part of it is converted into a capital sum it ceases to partake the nature of pension. (Para 9)

Held, that in view of the rules operating in the case a gratuity must be taken to be commuted pension, which is a capital sum and not an accumulated pension and therefore, the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit relating to the amount of gratuity was not barred by Section 4. (Paras 8 and 11)

(B) Pensions Act (1871), S. 4 — Expression 'grant of money' does not include gratuity or a capital sum converted out of a part of pension. (Para 10)

JAGDISH SAHAI J.:— This special appeal by Sri Mela Ram is directed against the judgment of Hon. R. S. Pathak, J. dated 24-9-1966 dismissing writ petition No. 2641 of 1960 filed by the petitioner appellant. The petitioner was in service of Government of India in the Postal Department in the capacity of Supervisor.

2. He retired from service, After calculation it was proposed to give him a certain amount of money as gratuity in addition to his monthly pension.

3. But before the pension or gratuity was paid and a pension slip or gratuity slip issued to the petitioner a sum of Rs. 3,300 was sought to be deducted from the amount of gratuity proposed to be paid to him.

4. He filed writ petition No. 2641 of 1960 challenging the order of the Director, Postal Staff, Lucknow directing the deduction of Rs. 3,300 from his gratuity.

BM/DM/A612/69/JHS/B

5. The writ petition came up for final hearing before Hon. R. S. Pathak, J. who took the view that considering the nature of allegations made, he considered that the proper remedy of the petitioner was to file a regular suit in a competent Civil Court and that in the circumstances of the case the relief by means of a writ petition was not the proper remedy. Dissatisfied with the judgment of Hon. R. S. Pathak, J. dated 29-4-1966, the petitioner-appellant has filed the instant special appeal. It was strenuously contended by Mr. S. C. Khare, the learned counsel for the petitioner-appellant, that the learned single Judge failed to notice that under Section 4 of the Pensions Act the suit was barred. Section 4 of the Pensions Act reads:

"Except as hereinafter provided no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the Government or by any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for any such pension or grant, and whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted."

6. It is well settled that the ouster of the jurisdiction of a Civil Court cannot be assumed. The ouster must be the result of an express provision in a legislative enactment or one of necessary implication therefrom.

7. Clearly if the amount of gratuity can be treated to be pension it would be doubtful whether the Civil Court would have jurisdiction to try any suit relating to it.

8. If on the contrary a gratuity cannot be comprehended in the expression "pension" as occurring in Section 4 of the Pensions Act then that provision would be no bar to the maintainability of a suit in a Civil Court relating to any deduction made from the amount of gratuity. In view of the rules operating in the present case a gratuity must be taken to be commuted pension. It is well settled that commuted pension is a capital sum and not an accumulated pension. See Municipal Council Salem v. B. Gururajah Rao, AIR 1935 Mad 249.

9. A pension is a periodical payment. Once a part of it is converted into a capital sum it ceases to partake the nature of pension.

10. Mr. Khare contended that assuming that gratuity is not pension it is still a "grant of money" within the meaning of Section 4 of Pensions Act. In our opinion the expression "grant of money" does not include gratuity or a capital sum converted out of a part of pension.

11. We are, therefore, of the opinion that a Civil Court would be competent to go into this matter.

12. In the present case the deduction has been made from the gratuity calculated as payable to the petitioner appellant on the ground that he was guilty of negligence of duty. Whether or not he was so guilty is a question of fact which can only be decided on the basis of evidence and not in the summary proceeding of a writ petition. Consequently we agree with R. S. Pathak, J. that in the circumstances of the present case the proper remedy of the petitioner is to file a regular suit.

13. We express no opinion on the merits of the controversy between the parties. The appeal is dismissed. There is, however, no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal against the judgment and order passed by Sri M. P. Gautam, Magistrate 1st Class, Roorkee, district Sahranpur, acquitting the respondents of an offence under Sec. 323, I. P. C., and Section 147, I. P. C.

2. The facts, giving rise to this appeal, are as follows. Faiyaz, who is a resident of Sikandarpur, thana Fatehpur, district Sahranpur, lodged a report on 30-1-1965 at thana Fatehpur. The allegations in the report were that a nephew of Faiyaz was taking his bullocks to the field for ploughing. The bullocks damaged the crop of Aziz. The nephew of Faiyaz immediately drove out the bullocks, but he was slapped by Aziz and Idris. Faiyaz asked them not to slap his nephew. Thereupon all the respondents assaulted him with lathis. Faiyaz received a number of injuries. His injuries were medically examined. The Police registered a case against the respondents under Section 147, I. P. C. and Section 323, I. P. C. After completing the investigation, the police challaned the respondents. The parties filed a compromise for compounding the offence under Section 323, I. P. C. This compromise was verified and the trial Court passed the following order:—

"The injured complainant Faiyaz has compounded the offence under Sec. 323, I. P. C. against the accused. The accused are thus acquitted under S. 323, I. P. C.

The charge-sheet under Section 147, I. P. C. has also been submitted. The learned counsel for the accused has relied upon the ruling cited in 1964-2 Cri LJ 111 (Pat). The charge under Sec. 147, I. P. C. also jolts when the offence has been compromised by the injured." Against this order, the State has come up in appeal to this Court.

3. It was argued by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that the offence under Section 147, I. P. C. was not compoundable and the trial Court was wrong in acquitting the respondents of the offence under Section 147, I. P. C.

4. In Ramphal Gope v. State of Bihar, 1964-2 Cri LJ 111 (Pat), cited by the trial Court, Syed Naqui Imam, J., has held as below:—

"Mr. Baidya Nath Prasad appearing for the petitioners has pointed out to me that before the trial Court there was a compromise petition filed, and the trial Court accepted the compromise so far as the offence under Section 323, Indian Penal Code was concerned. Now that the appellate Court has found these petitioners guilty under Sections 323 and 323/34, Indian Penal Code, in my opinion, the compromise petition can be put into effect even at this stage. There now remains the charge under Section 147, Indian Penal Code which is not compoundable. But it appears that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to assault. If the charges under Sections 323 and 323/34, Indian Penal Code fail on account of the compromise, it is obvious that the charge under Section 147, Indian Penal Code must also fail because the common object was to assault."

This question was the subject matter of decision in a number of cases. It appears that all the case law on the question was not placed before the Court in Ramphal Gope's case, 1964-2 Cri LJ 111 (Pat).

5. In The Crown v. Muhammad Hussain, 51 Cri LJ 1016 = (AIR 1950 Lah 121) Muhammad Jan and Kayani, JJ. reviewed the entire law on the subject, and held that if the offence under Sec. 324, I. P. C. was compounded by the permission of the Court, then the charge under S. 148, I. P. C. should not fail on that account and should be tried.

6. The earliest case on this subject is Venkanna v. Crown, AIR 1923 Mad 592. In this case, the accused were convicted under Sections 143 and 447, I. P. C. The offence under Section 447, I. P. C. was compounded. It was argued that the common object of the accused was to commit an offence of trespass and, as the offence of trespass was compounded, therefore, the offence under Section 143, I. P. C., ipso facto, failed. This argument was not accepted; and Wallace, J. observed as below:—

"I am not prepared to support this contention. The essence of the offence under Section 143, Indian Penal Code, is the combination of several persons united in the purpose of committing a criminal offence and that purpose constitutes in itself an offence distinct from the Criminal offence which these persons agree and intend to commit. The compounding of one offence does not mean that the offence has not been committed, but that it has been committed, though the victim is willing either to forgive it or to accept some form of solatium is sufficient compensation for what he has suffered."

7. Another case is Emperor v. Jarnali, AIR 1925 Lah 464. In this case, the accused were charged under Section 325, I. P. C. and Section 147, I. P. C. The offence under Section 325, I. P. C. was compounded with the permission of the Court. It was argued that after the acquittal of the accused of the offence under Sec. 325, I. P. C., the offence under Section 147, I. P. C. ipso facto, fell down. Campbell, J. observed as below:—

"If he had referred to Section 403 (2), Criminal P. C. and had read with it Section 235 (1) and illustration (g) to that sub-section he would have perceived that an acquittal under Section 345, Criminal P. C., of an offence under Section 325, Indian Penal Code, constitutes no bar to the subsequent trial of the accused on a charge under S. 147, Indian Penal Code."

8. In Gurunarayan Das v. Emperor, AIR 1948 Pat 58 the accused were charged under Sections 325, 147 and 148, I. P. C. This was a Division Bench case. Meredith, J. observed as below:—

"The convictions are not only for grievous hurt and hurt, but also under the rioting Sections 147 & 148. The offences under these Sections are not compoundable at all, and, therefore, no acquittal could be allowed by reason of the compromise in regard to the convictions under these sections."

Bennett, J. agreed with the judgment of Meredith J.

9. In Agha Nazarali Sultan Muhammad v. Emperor, AIR 1941 Sind 186 which is a Division Bench case, the aforesaid Madras case was followed, and it was held that if the other offence was compounded it did not mean that the offence under Section 143, I. P. C. also fell down. In this connection, the following observations can be read with advantage:—

"On the point that an offence under Section 143, Penal Code, is a distinct and separate offence in itself distinct and separate from an offence which it is the common object of the unlawful assembly to commit, and that although this latter offence may by itself be compounded, the offence under Section 143, Penal Code, is not compoundable as a matter of public Policy, being an offence in the fullest sense of the term against the public peace, there is the authority of the Madras High Court, ILR 46 Mad 257 = (AIR 1923 Mad 592)."

10. Unlawful assembly has been defined in Section 141, I. P. C. The first, second, fourth and fifth Clauses of this section would not apply to the facts of the present case. The third Clause, which would be applicable, reads as below:—

"To commit any mischief of criminal trespass or other offences; or"

It was argued that if an unlawful assembly was formed with an object to commit a crime and if it was found that the accused were not guilty of any offence, then the accused should not be held to have formed the unlawful assembly.

11. Section 146, I. P. C. defines rioting and Section 147, I. P. C., lays down the punishment for rioting by an unlawful assembly. The respondents formed an unlawful assembly and, in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, they committed violence and assaulted the complainant. The offence under Section 147, I. P. C. is certainly separate from the offence under S. 323, I. P. C.

12. The compromise would result in the acquittal of the respondents of the offence under Section 323, I. P. C. This would not go to show that they did not commit any violence as members of the unlawful assembly. In compromise case, the acquittal is recorded simply because the parties come to terms. It does not mean that no offence was committed at all. On the other hand, admitting that the offence had been committed, the parties patch up their differences and enter into compromise, so that they may live peacefully in future. It is for this end that composition of certain kind of offence is permitted.

13. It should be noticed here that certain offences, which are of aggravated nature, are excluded from the operation of Section 345, Criminal P. C., under which the offences are compounded. The offence under Section 147, I. P. C., is against the public tranquillity and is of an aggravated nature. It has, therefore, been taken out from the orbit of S. 345, Cr. P. C.

14. In my opinion, the acquittal of the respondents of the offence under Section 323, I. P. C., on the basis of the compromise would not go to show that the offence under Section 323, I. P. C., was not at all committed. It will, therefore, be not correct to say that the respondents did not commit violence in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. I have already observed in the earlier part of this judgment that in Ramphal Gope's case, 1964-2 Cri LJ 111 (Pat) the earlier decisions were not taken into consideration, and the judgment in that case was based on the finding that if the charges under Sections 323 and 323/34, Indian Penal Code, failed on account of the compromise, the charge under Section 147, Indian Penal Code, also failed because the common object was to assault. With due deference, I do not subscribe to this view.

15. After taking into consideration the rulings of different High Courts on this question, I am of the opinion that the composition of the offence under Section 323, I. P. C., did not amount to acquittal of the respondents of the offence under Section 147, I. P. C. The learned trial Court has, therefore, wrongly acquitted the respondents of the offence under Section 147, I. P. C.

ORDER

The appeal is allowed. The order of the trial Court acquitting the respondents of the charge under Section 147, I. P. C., is set aside. Let the record of the case be sent down to the trial Court for trying the respondents for the offence under Section 147, I. P. C. in accordance with law.

Appeal allowed.

B. DAYAL AND B. N. LOKUR, JJ.

Smt. Prema Devi, Petitioner v. Joint Director of Consolidation (Head quarter) at Gorakhpur Camp and others, Opposite Parties.

Civil Misc. Writ Nos. 1319 and 1235 of 1963, D/- 13-12-1968.

Hindu Succession Act (1956), Ss. 14 (1) and (2), and 4 (2) — Act has no application to agricultural plots — Provisions do not apply to land tenures created under U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act — Hindu widow in possession of land in lieu of maintenance — Acquisition of Asami right under S. 11 of the U. P. Act — Asami right, held, did not become bhumidari right by reason of Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act. AIR 1964 All 165 & AIR 1968 All 419, Overruled—(Tenancy Laws — U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, 1950 (1 of 1951), Ss. 10 and 11) — (Constitution of India, Sch. 7, List III, Entries 5, 6 and 7; List II, Entry 18).

The provisions of Hindu Succession Act cannot be made applicable to agricultural plots governed by the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act.

Entry No. 5 in the third List of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution which is the only entry under which the Central Legislature has the jurisdiction to pass the Hindu Succession Act relates only to personal law. Laws passed under this entry do not apply to any particular property. They merely determine the personal law. Entry 18 in List II in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State Legislature is in the widest term. All laws relating to land and land tenures are therefore, within the exclusive jurisdiction of the State Legislature. Even personal law can become applicable to land tenures if so provided in the State Law, but it cannot override State legislation. It is noteworthy that in List 3 wherever the entry relates to rights in land; agricultural land has expressly been excluded. While legislating in respect of such general subject the Legislature must be assumed to pass law only affecting property which it had jurisdiction to legislate about. (Para 5)

Under the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act which regulated the tenancy rights, there is no provision applying personal law to any of the tenures created under that Act and thus the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act are wholly inapplicable to the land tenures under the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act. (Para 6)

A compromise decree allowed a Hindu widow to remain in possession of certain agricultural plots which were khudkasht and sir lands of the erstwhile holder. By reason of the provision under Section 11 of the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, she became an Asami in respect of such lands. Subsequently when the Hindu Succession Act came into force, she claimed to have become a bhumidar of the land in view of Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act:

Held, that she did not become a bhumidar, that is, a tenure holder of another class. Tenancy rights were created by the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act and Bhumidhari rights could only be acquired under the provisions thereof. The nature of her tenure would not change on the passing of the Hindu Succession Act. (Para 7)

Even if Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act were to be held applicable, since she held the land in lieu of maintenance under the compromise decree, her limited rights could not be held affected. The case attracted sub-section (2) of S. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act. The scheme of Section 14 apparently is to give full proprietary rights to Hindu woman where she got only limited rights by virtue of ancient Hindu Law but not to affect those which were received under an instrument by deliberate human volition. Sant Prakash, for Petitioner; Lalji Sahai Srivastava and Bharati Ji Agarwal, for Opposite Parties.

B. DAYAL J.:— These two connected writ petitions filed by Smt. Prema Devi, widow of Asharfilal and Satnarainlal and other have been referred to a Division Bench by a learned single judge of this Court as he found it difficult to agree with a single judge decision of this Court Ram Jag Mistri v. Deputy Director of Consolidation, AIR 1968 All 419. The facts of the case are now no more in dispute and have been decided finally by the Joint Director of Consolidation who, in turn, accepted the findings of fact arrived at in Second Appeal by the Deputy Director of Consolidation. The relevant facts may now be stated in short.

One Udaibhan Lal had four sons, namely, Bhagwati Pd., Satya Narain Lal, Daya Shankar Lal and Asharfi Lal. Smt. Prema

Devi is the widow of Asharfi Lal, who died in the lifetime of his father Udaibhan Lal. When Udaibhan Lal died in 1936, he left zamindari as also sir and khudkasht plots. On the death of Udaibhan Lal, the names of his three surviving sons, namely, Bhagwati Pd., Satya Narain Lal and Daya Shankar Lal, along with Smt. Premā Devi, widow of Asharfi Lal, were mutated in all the three villages, Dasuati, Sonahti and Pathkauli in the district of Basti where the properties of Udaibhan Lal were situated. In 1947, two of the brothers, Satya Narain Lal and Bhagwati Pd., filed suit No. 460 of 1947 in the Court of the Munsif, Basti, for a declaration that Smt. Premā Devi had no share in the property and to this suit Smt. Premā Devi was made a defendant. The third brother Daya Shankar Lal was also joined as a pro forma defendant. This suit was ultimately compromised in 1949 and a compromise decree was passed. Under the compromise decree, Smt. Premā Devi was given certain plots for her maintenance in two villages, Dasuati and Pathkauli. It is now a finding of fact that after the compromise in 1949 Smt. Premā Devi is in possession of those plots. She is not in possession of any other property of the family. In this compromise it was expressly provided that she would be entitled to maintain herself out of the income of those plots but she would have no right to alienate the same. It was further provided in the compromise that on her death, the property would revert back to the collaterals of her husband.

But it appears that even after the compromise the revenue records were not corrected and her name continued as a co-proprietor in all the three villages. On the coming into force of the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, her name was recorded as co-bhumidhar of all the khudkasht and sir plots in all the three villages. In 1960, consolidation proceedings started and objections were filed by Satya Narain Lal and others that the name of Smt. Premā Devi was wrongly entered in the revenue records which should be expunged and that she was only entitled to be entered as an Asami over the plots given to her in the compromise in the two villages. Since the property lay in three villages and related to three different khatas, three separate objections were filed. The Consolidation Officer allowed all the three objections and expunged the name of Smt. Premā Devi as co-bhumidhar from all the three khatas. He directed her name to be recorded as an Asami over the plots given to her under the compromise.

On appeal, the decision was reversed and her name was maintained as co-bhumidhar in all the khatas. On second appeal, the Deputy Director of Consolidation restored the order of the Consolidation Officer and allowed the appeal. On revision by Smt. Premā Devi, the learned Joint Director of Consolidation maintained the order expunging her name as co-bhumidhar in the two villages in which she had been given plots under the compromise and retaining her name as a Asami over the plots given to her. But he allowed the revision regarding village Sonahti where she had not been given any plot. The Joint Director of Consolidation thought that her rights in that village were not governed by the compromise. He directed that her name as co-bhumidhar would continue on the plots relating to that village Sonahti.

Against this decision of the Joint Director of Consolidation, one writ petition has been filed by Smt. Premā Devi challenging the correctness of the order in two revisions which were dismissed by the Joint Director of Consolidation and the other cross-writ petition has been filed by Satya Narain Lal and others challenging the correctness of the decision relating to village Sonahti. Both the writ petitions depending on common facts and law have been heard together and are being disposed of by this common judgment.

2. To deal first with writ petition 1235 of 1963 filed by Satya Narain Lal and others, it is sufficient to say that the learned Joint Director of Consolidation completely misdirected himself. The compromise in the civil suit related to all the three villages and in lieu of her right of maintenance, Smt. Premā Devi was allowed only the plots in two villages. It was not necessary to allow plots in all the three villages to satisfy her need of maintenance. The position on the date of the suit was that Smt. Premā Devi's husband having died in the lifetime of his father who also died in 1936 Smt. Premā Devi got no interest in the joint family property. She was merely entitled to maintenance. Under this compromise she got certain plots of land in her possession for her maintenance. After the compromise she was merely in possession of those plots and her rights were confined to those plots only. Even if her name continued, as joint owner by mistake, it could not give her any rights. The Deputy Director of Consolidation in Second Appeal was, therefore, right in expunging her name from all the three villages.

3. In the petition filed by Smt. Premā Devi, the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that upon the passing of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, Smt. Premā Devi acquired full Bhumidhari rights and in any case the compromise decree not having been enforced, had no effect upon her rights which she acquired by her name having been retained on the whole of the property as co-bhumidhar.

4. The second point is concluded by a finding of fact that she was never in possession of the property other than the plots given to her by the compromise decree and the mere fact of her name remaining on the revenue records cannot be sufficient to invest her with any right. Under the Hindu Law, as it stood in 1936, she got no right in the joint family property and the only property which came into her possession by means of the compromise decree were the specific plots. Even under Section 14 (1) of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, she could improve her position only in respect of property in her possession. So its effect has to be considered only regarding the specific plots given to her in lieu of maintenance.

5. In the first place, we are of the opinion that the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, cannot be made applicable to agricultural plots. This Act was passed by the Central Legislature in 1956 and the only entry under which the Central Legislature had the jurisdiction to pass the Act, was entry No. 5 in the third list of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. This entry is as follows:— "5-Marriage and divorce; infants and minors; adoption; wills, intestacy and succession; joint family and partition; all matters in respect of which parties in judicial proceedings were immediately before the commencement of this Constitution subject to their personal law." This entry obviously relates only to personal law and laws passed under this entry do not apply to any particular property. They merely determine the personal law. In List 2, Entry No. 18 is as follows:— "Land, that is to say, right in or over land, land tenures including the relation of landlord and tenant, and the collection of rents; transfer and alienation of agricultural land; land improvement and agricultural loans; colonization." This entry which is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State Legislature is in the widest term. All laws relating to land and land tenures are therefore, within the exclusive jurisdiction of the State Legislature. Even personal law can become applicable to land tenures if so provided in the State Law, but it cannot override State legislation.

It is noteworthy that in List 3 wherever the entry relates to rights in land 'agricultural land' has expressly been excluded. For instance, Entry No. 6 is as follows: "Transfer of property other than agricultural land....." Entry No. 7 is as follows:—

"Contracts, including partnership, agency, contracts of carriage, and other special forms of contracts, but not including contracts relating to agricultural land." No such exception was expressly mentioned in Entry No. 5 because this entry related only to matters personal to individuals and did not relate directly to any property. While legislating in respect of such general subject the Legislature must be assumed to pass law only affecting property which it had jurisdiction to legislate about. Gwyer, C. J. while delivering the judgment of the Federal Court in a reference on the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, reported in AIR 1941 FC 72 observed as follows:—

"There is a general presumption that a Legislature does not intend to exceed its jurisdiction. When a Legislature with limited and restricted powers makes use of a word of such wide and general import as "property", the presumption must surely be that it is using it with reference to that kind of property with respect to which it is competent to legislate and to no other....."

The Hindu Succession Act, 1956, was passed merely to alter the personal law of succession applicable to Hindus. It had no reference to any kind of property in particular and was not meant to govern rights in agricultural tenancies. Sub-section (2) of S. 4 of the Act runs as follows:—

"For the removal of doubts it is hereby declared that nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to affect the provisions of any law for the time being in force providing for the prevention of fragmentation of agricultural holdings or for the fixation of ceilings or for the devolution of tenancy rights in respect of such holdings."

This sub-section indicates that it was only for the removal of doubts that this provision had been included. Even without this provision, the Act could not apply to agricultural holdings.

6. Under the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act which regulated the tenancy rights, there is no provision applying personal law to any of the tenures created under that Act and thus the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act are wholly inapplicable to the land tenures under the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act.

7. Even if it be assumed that this Act is applicable to agricultural land and land tenures, it is obvious that Section 14, which is the only provision possibly applicable to the facts of the case and which is relied upon by the learned counsel on behalf of Smt. Prema Devi, cannot give her any benefit. On the coming into force of the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, in 1952 Smt. Prema Devi who was in possession of certain plots of land in lieu of her maintenance, became an Asami under Section 11 of that Act. Section 11 of the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act is as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 10 where sir or khudkasht has been allotted by the sir or khudkasht holder thereof to a person in lieu of maintenance allowance, such person shall be deemed to be the asami thereof entitled to hold the land for so long as the right of maintenance allowance subsists."

Under this section Smt. Prema Devi became an Asami of the plots which had been given to her in lieu of maintenance. Subsequently, when the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, came into force, she could not become a bhumidhar, that is a tenureholder of another class. Tenancy rights were created by the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act and bhumidhari rights could only be acquired under the provisions thereof. It is not possible to hold that the nature of her tenure would change on the passing of the Hindu Succession Act.

Section 14, sub-section (1) of the Hindu Succession Act runs as follows:—

"Any property possessed by a female Hindu, whether acquired before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be held by her as full owner thereof and not as a limited owner."

The property which Smt. Prema Devi held was Asami right in specific plots. She could not possibly become the full owner of those plots, for proprietary rights vest in the Government.

8. Apart from this, sub-section (2) of S. 14 of the said Act is as follows:—

"Nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall apply to any property acquired by way of gift or under a will or any other instrument or under a decree or order of a Civil Court or under an award where the terms of the gift, will or other instrument or the decree, order or award prescribe a restricted estate in such property."

In the present case, Smt. Prema Devi got these plots of land by means of a compromise decree. Before that decree, she had no right in the land. It was for the first time under the decree which was passed on a compromise that she got these plots of land. Even if it be assumed that this decree itself is a record of the compromise between the parties, then she got the property under the compromise which was filed in Court in writing and on the basis of which the decree was passed. This compromise is also covered by the words "other instrument" in sub-section (2) of S. 14 and, therefore, the rights given to Smt. Prema Devi under the compromise decree cannot be enlarged under sub-section (1) of the section. The scheme of Section 14 apparently is to give full proprietary rights to Hindu women where she got only limited rights by virtue of ancient Hindu Law but not to affect those which were received under an instrument by deliberate human volition. In the present case, limited rights were acquired under a compromise decree and are thus not affected even if the provisions of Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act are applicable to the case.

9. Learned counsel on behalf of Smt. Prema Devi drew our attention to the case of Shakuntala Devi v. Beni Madhav, AIR 1964 All 165 where a learned single Judge of this Court held that the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act are applicable to agricultural land also which decision has been followed by another single Judge of this Court in AIR 1968 All 419. We have carefully gone through these cases but, with respect, we are unable to agree with this conclusion. Learned counsel also relied upon the case of Amar Singh v. Baldeo Singh, AIR 1960 Punj 666 (FB). In that case personal law was applicable to the land in dispute and the matter for consideration was, whether Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act was valid. It was held valid as it related to a matter of personal law. We respectfully agree with the conclusion.

10. The result therefore, is that Civil Misc. Writ No. 1319 of 1963 filed by Smt. Prema Devi is dismissed while Civil Misc. Writ No. 1235 of 1963 filed by Satya Narain Lal and others is allowed. The order passed by the Joint Director of Consolidation is quashed and that of the Deputy Director of Consolidation in Second Appeal is restored. Parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Bijai Narain Singh and others, Petitioners v. State of Uttar Pradesh, Opposite Party.

Civil Misc. Writ Petn. No. 2940 of 1968, D/-19-3-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 19, Rr. 1 and 2 and Ss. 139, 141 and 5 (2) — Oath Commissioners appointed by District Judges to verify affidavits — They are competent only where affidavits are to be filed before Courts of Civil Jurisdiction governed by Civil P. C. — Oath Commissioners cannot verify affidavits to be filed before various authorities constituted under U. P. Act 5 of 1954, authorities being neither Courts of Civil jurisdiction nor governed by Civil P. C. in the matter of procedure — Authorities are not also revenue Courts — (Tenancy Laws — U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act (5 of 1954), Ss. 8, 8-A, 9-A, 9-B, 19-A, 21, 38 and 41 and R. 26 of the Rules).

Order 19, Rr. 1 and 2 and Ss. 139 and 141 of Civil P. C. which are the relevant provisions under which Oath Commissioners are appointed and affidavits filed before them are verified, show that two conditions must be fulfilled in order that such appointees by the District Judges may be competent to verify the affidavits coming to them. One is that they are to be filed before the Courts whose procedure is governed by Civil P. C. And, the other is that those Courts must be Courts of Civil Jurisdiction. (Paras 9 & 42)

Thus viewed, the affidavits to be filed before the Consolidation Officers constituted under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act or even officers higher to them cannot be verified by the Oath Commissioners appointed by the District Judges in that the authorities are neither Courts of Civil Jurisdiction nor governed by Civil P. C. in the matter of procedure. (Paras 35, 42 & 44)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9 — Tribunals and Courts — Distinction pointed out.

Tribunals with many a trapping of a Court, nevertheless, are not Courts in the strict sense of exercising judicial power. Some such features are giving of a final decision, competence to hear contentious matters, power to render decisions affecting the rights of subjects, existence of a provision for appeal against its decision and it being a body to which a matter can be referred by another body. The presence of the above features does not necessarily make a quasi-judicial body a Court. Broadly speaking, what distinguishes a Court from a quasi-judicial tribunal is that it is charged with a duty to decide in a judicial manner the rights of parties in a definitive judgment. To decide in a judicial manner involves that the parties are entitled as a matter of right to be heard in support of their claim and to adduce evidence in proof of it. Viewed in the light of the above, the authorities constituted under the above U. P. Act either as it stood originally or as amended in 1963 cannot be called Courts. (Paras 13, 15, 28 & 29)

The Consolidation Officer exercises his judicial powers when he acts under Sections 9-A and 9-B of the Act after the village records have been revised and the valuations and shares in holdings have been determined under Section 8 and the Statement of Principles has been prepared under Section 8-A, again, when he acts under Section 21 after the provisional Consolidation scheme has been drawn up under Section 19-A. The matters which come up before the Consolidation Officer under Sections 9-A and 9-B are those dealt with under Sections 8 and 8-A, and those which come up under Section 21 are those dealt with under Section 19-A. Initially the matters under Sections 8, 8-A and 19-A are dealt with by the Assistant Consolidation Officer who disposes of non-contentious ones or those in which he can bring about conciliation, and forwards the disputed ones to the Consolidation Officers for his decision under Sections 9-A, 9-B or 21, as the case may be. What is noticeable is that it is mandatory for the Assistant Consolidation Officer to consult the Consolidation Committee while acting under Sections 8, 8-A and 19-A. It is not correct to say that after the amendments in 1963 it is no longer necessary to take the views of the Consolidation Committee which was essential under the original provisions viz., Section 12 (2) and R. 34. Though, now, there is no mention of the Committee's views being considered or reported to the Consolidation Officer, yet, in the report under Section 9-A which replaced old Section 12 and the present R. 25-A, the Committee's view would also find place. Sections 8 and 8-A which compel the Assistant Consolidation Officer to consult the Committee implies that in his said report its views would also be stated. Section 9-B which makes mention of the Consolidation Committee in the section itself and further requires giving of notice also to the Consolidation Committee cannot be considered a mere empty formality. The purpose can be nothing else than to have its views also. Similar provisions are to be found in Section 21. Consequently, it cannot be said that the Consolidation Committee has no say in the matter now. R. 26 which had replaced old R. 34 cannot also go to sustain the plea that the authorities are Courts in that the influence of the Consolidation Committee stands in the way.

Even in the matter of procedure, all the provisions of Civil P. C. do not apply to the proceedings under the U. P. Act. S. 38 of the U. P. Act and R. 26 of the Rules made thereunder read with Chs. IX and X of the U. P. Land Revenue Act which attract the provisions of Civil P. C. to proceedings under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act show that all the provisions of Civil P. C. are not applicable.

(Paras 32 and 42)

Consolidation authorities cannot also be held to be revenue courts within the meaning of Section 5(2) of Civil P. C., because the said authorities do not deal with suits or other proceedings relating to rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes. The U. P. Act, on the other hand, provides for the consolidation of agricultural holdings for the development of agriculture. (Para 34)

(C) Tenancy Laws — U. P. Per Misra, J.:— The words "shall be deemed to be a Court of competent jurisdiction" occurring in sub-section (3) of S. 9-A of the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act do not confer the full status of Courts on the Consolidation Officers mentioned in that section even for the limited purpose of that provision. The very use of the words 'deemed to be' goes to show that the legislature did not intend to give full status of Courts to the authorities constituted under the Act. AIR 1930 PC 54 & AIR 1965 SC 33 at p. 39, Foll.

(Para 30)

Per Mukerjee, J.:— The words "deemed to be" in sub-section (3) imply that although the consolidation authorities referred to in Section 9-A are not in reality Courts, the legislature intended that they shall be deemed to be Courts when they act within the limited ambit of that section. The duty of a Court in interpreting a statute is to give effect to the intention of the Legislature as expressed by the language thereof. A legal fiction created by a statute has to be given its full effect without allowing the mind "to boggle" and it must be held that the Assistant Consolidation Officer and the Consolidation Officer, when they dispose of matters mentioned in sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 9-A have the "full status of Courts", anything to the contrary contained in any other law for the time being in force notwithstanding. (D) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Futile writ — Writs which cannot be given effect to not granted — Affidavits to be filed before authorities constituted under U. P. (1908), O. 19, Rr. 1, 2, Ss. 139 and 141).

The Consolidation Officers constituted under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act perform duties both judicial and executive. The Oath Commissioners appointed under the provisions of Civil P. C. are competent to verify only affidavits as are required to be filed before Courts of civil jurisdiction to which the procedure contained in Civil P. C. is applicable. Hence, in the absence of any agency to decide as to which matters were judicial, it was neither feasible nor practicable to permit the Oath Commissioners appointed by the District Judges to verify the affidavits required to be filed before the Consolidation Officers. No writ can, therefore, issue because even if it was to be granted it could not be given effect to. (Para 21)

Sripat Narain Singh, for Petitioners; Standing Counsel, for Opposite Party.

B. B. MISRA, J.:— This reference to a Full Bench arises out of a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution seeking a writ of Mandamus commanding the U. P. Government to withdraw its Notification dated June 29, 1968, directing that Oath Commissioners appointed by District Judge under Section 139 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not authorised to verify affidavits relating to the proceedings before the various authorities constituted under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act 5 of 1954, (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

2. The six petitioners, who are lawyers of Azamgarh, were appointed Oath Commissioners by the District Judge of that place by his order dated 19-7-1966 passed under the provisions of S. 139 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Originally, affidavits to be filed, inter alia, before the various authorities constituted under the Act, used to be verified by the petitioners, the propriety of which was also recognised by the U. P. Government under its G. O. No. 3147/VII-AI-45/65 dated March 11, 1968. Subsequently, by G. O. No. 1855/VII-AI-44/65 dated June 29, 1968, the U. P. Government partially modified the aforesaid G. O. dated March 11, 1968, and withdrew its recognition in respect of affidavits to be filed before the Consolidation Authorities saying that, in view of judicial pronouncement, they were not Courts of Civil Judicature, and, as such, Oath Commissioners were not authorised to verify affidavits relating to proceedings before them. The petitioners challenge the legality of that order of the Government on the ground that the various authorities constituted under the Act are Courts of Civil Jurisdiction.

3. Thus the point for determination is as to whether Oath Commissioners appointed by District Judges are competent to verify the affidavits to be filed before the authorities constituted under the Act.

4. The relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure under which Oath Commissioners are appointed and verify affidavits are to be found in Sections 139 and 141, and Order 19.

5. Affidavits are tendered under O. 19, Rr. 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure which are to the following effect:—

"1. Any Court may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing, on such conditions as the Court thinks reasonable:

Provided that where it appears to the Court that either party bona fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorising the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit.

2. (1) Upon any application evidence may be given by affidavit, but the Court may, at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the deponent.

(2) Such attendance shall be in Court, unless the deponent is exempted from personal appearance in Court, or the Court otherwise directs."

6. Section 139 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads thus:—

"In the case of any affidavit under this Code—

- (a) any Court or Magistrate, or
 - (b) any officer or other person whom a High Court may appoint in this behalf, or
 - (c) any officer appointed by any other Court which the State Government has generally or specially empowered in this behalf,
- may administer the oath to the deponent."

7. It is not disputed that under subsection (c) of the above section, the U. P. Government has empowered District Judges to appoint Oath Commissioners.

8. Section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure runs as follows:—

"The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction."

9. On a perusal of the above provisions, it would appear that two conditions must be fulfilled in order that Oath Commissioners appointed by District Judges may be competent to verify the affidavits coming to them. One is that they are to be filed before the Courts whose procedure is governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. And, the other is that those Courts must be Courts of Civil Jurisdiction.

10. It has, therefore, to be examined if the various authorities constituted under the Act are governed by the Code of Civil Procedure in the matter of procedure, and whether they are Courts of Civil Jurisdiction.

11. These matters were gone into threadbare by a Division Bench of this Court in Ram Bharosey Lal v. The Deputy Director of Consolidation, U. P., 1964 RD 411 (All) to which one of us was a party. After reviewing the case law on the subject and also examining the various provisions of the Act it came to the conclusion that the various authorities constituted under it were not Courts. Subsequently, a Full Bench of this Court approved that decision in Sita v. State of U. P., 1968 All LJ 144 = (AIR 1969 All 342) (FB).

12. On the legal aspect it relied on an English Case, Shell Co. of Australia v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation, 1931 AC 275 at pp. 296-297, wherein Lord Sankey, L. C., made the following observations:—

"The authorities are clear to show that there are tribunals, with many of the trappings of a Court, which, nevertheless, are not Courts in the strict sense of exercising judicial power.

In that connection it may be useful to enumerate some negative propositions on the subject: (1) A tribunal is not necessarily a Court in the strict sense because it gives a final decision, (2) Nor because it hears witnesses on oath, (3) Nor because two or more contending parties appear before it between whom it has to decide, (4) Nor because it gives decisions which affect the rights of subjects, (5) Nor because there is an appeal to a Court, and (6) Nor because it is a body to which a matter is referred by another body."

13. The negative propositions set out above indicate that the features to which they refer may constitute the trappings of a Court. But the presence of the said trappings does not necessarily make a quasi-judicial body a Court.

14. The above principles were followed in several cases by the Supreme Court from time to time. Those cases are Bharat Bank v. Employees of Bharat Bank, AIR 1950 SC 188; Braj Nandan Sinha v. Jyoti Narain, AIR 1956 SC 66; Virindar Kumar Satyawadi v. The State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153; Harinagar Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Shyam Sunder, AIR 1961 SC 1669; Jagannath Prasad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 416; Jaswant Sugar Mills Ltd. Meerut v. Lakshmi Chand, AIR 1963 SC 677 and Engineering Mazdoor Sabha v. Hind Cycles Ltd., AIR 1963 SC 874.

15. The Division Bench of this Court in Ram Bharosey Lal's case, 1964 RD 411 (All) has given extracts from each of them. It is not necessary to traverse the whole ground again. Suffice it to say that broadly speaking what the above cases have laid down is that what distinguishes a Court from a quasi-judicial tribunal is that it is charged with a duty to decide in a judicial manner the rights of parties in a definitive judgment. To decide in a judicial manner involves that the parties are entitled as a matter of right to be heard in support of their claim and to adduce evidence in proof of it.

16. The Division Bench of this Court then examined the various provisions of the Act in the light of the law laid down in the aforesaid cases and came to the conclusion that the authorities constituted under that Act could not be called Courts.

17. The learned counsel for the petitioners contended that the law laid down in Ram Bharosey Lal's case, 1964 RD 411 (All) is no longer good law in view of a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court in Jugal Kishore Sinha v. Sitamarchi Central Co-operative Bank Ltd., AIR 1967 SC 1494, and also because of the fact that the various provisions in the original Act on the basis of which that decision was given, have undergone a material change by subsequent amendments. It was urged that the points which led to the earlier decision were no longer there with the result that under the existing provisions, the Consolidation Authorities would answer the tests laid down in the cases mentioned above and would come in the category of Courts.

18. The first point, therefore, to be seen is as to how far the Supreme Court in Thakur Jugal Kishore Sinha's case, AIR 1967 SC 1494 has touched the points decided by the Division Bench of this Court in Ram Bharosey Lal's case, 1964 RD 411 (All). As said above, the decision in Ram Bharosey Lal's case, 1964 RD 411 (All) is divisible into two parts, the first dealing with the legal question as to what category of tribunals fall within the category of 'Courts', and the second examining the various provisions of the Act in order to determine if they possessed all the attributes of Courts as laid down by the Supreme Court from time to time. In Jugal Kishore Sinha's case, AIR 1967 SC 1494 the Supreme Court has not said anything contrary to its earlier decisions laying down the criteria for deciding as to whether a tribunal is a Court or not. In fact, passages have been quoted from the two cases decided in 1956 elaborating the principle enunciated by Lord Sankey and setting forth the ratio decidendi in distinguishing Courts from quasi-judicial bodies. It would thus appear that there is nothing in Jugal Kishore Sinha's case, AIR 1967 SC 1494 touching the legal stand taken by the Division Bench of this Court.

Coming now to the other point decided by the Division Bench, the decision of the Supreme Court in Jugal Kishore Sinha's case, AIR 1967 SC 1494 can have no application. In the first place, the case before the Supreme Court was one under the Contempt of Courts Act and it had to see if the Assistant Registrar discharging the functions of the Registrar under Section 48 read with S. 6 (2) of Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (6 of 1935) was a Court subordinate to the High Court. In the present case it has to be seen if the various Consolidation Authorities under the Act are Courts of Civil jurisdiction. Different considerations prevail in determining as to whether a Court is subordinate to the High Court or it is a Court of civil jurisdiction. In order to see if a particular tribunal comes under the Contempt of Courts Act, the primary consideration to see is if it is subordinate to the High Court whereas in a case like the one in hand, the point to be determined is as to whether it is a Court of civil jurisdiction. Secondly, the provisions of the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act are different from the provisions of the Act. On an examination of the provisions of that Act, the Supreme Court found that the Registrar had not merely the trappings of a Court but in many respects had been given the same powers as were exercised by ordinary Civil Courts of the land by the Code of Civil Procedure. It has to be remembered that in that case the Supreme Court came to that conclusion because of the particular provisions of the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act. Consequently, it cannot be held that the decision of this Court in Ram Bharosey Lal's case, 1964 RD 411 (All) has been affected in any manner by the decision of the Supreme Court in Jugal Kishore Sinha's case, AIR 1967 SC 1494.

19. It has next to be seen if the Act has undergone any material change by subsequent amendment so as to call for a departure from the rule laid down in Ram Bharosey Lal's case, 1964 RD 411 (All). The original Act was passed in 1953 and came to be placed on the Statute Book as U. P. Act No. 5 of 1954. It was amended from time to time, the last amendment having been made by U. P. Act 8 of 1963. Rules under Section 54 (3) of the Act were first published in 1954 after the coming into force of the original Act. They were also amended from time to time after the various amendments of the Act, the last amendment in them having been made in 1963.

20. It is not necessary to go into all the amendments in the Act and the Rules which have been made from time to time. Only those amendments have to be looked into which are in respect of the powers exercisable by the Consolidation Authorities in discharging their judicial functions. For that purpose, only the amendments which were made by the Amendment Act 38 of 1958 and those made subsequently by Act 8 of 1963 along with the corresponding Rules made thereunder will have to be looked into.

21. The first thing would be to see as to what authorities have been constituted under the Act. The hierarchy of the various authorities constituted under that Act beginning from the lowest, as given in Section 42, are in the following order: Assistant Consolidation Officer; Consolidation Officer; Settlement Officer (Consolidation); Deputy Director (Consolidation); and Director of Consolidation. The Assistant Consolidation Officer and Consolidation Officer do the spade work and are the authorities of first instance before whom objections and disputes come up for decision. The powers of Assistant Consolidation Officer are restricted to non-contentious matters, and also where he can bring about conciliation between the parties. So far as disputed matters are concerned, he has to refer them to the Consolidation Officer for decision. Appeals against the orders of the Consolidation Officer are to be heard by the Settlement Officer (Consolidation). Revisions against the orders of the Settlement Officer (Consolidation) are to be disposed of by the Director of Consolidation, in which category the Assistant Director, the Deputy Director, and the Joint Director are also included. As the Assistant Consolidation Officer and the Consolidation Officer are the initial authorities before whom objections and disputes come up, affidavits are to be filed mostly before them. It is only very sparingly that the necessity of filing affidavits before the authorities higher than them arises. Therefore, what has to be seen primarily is as to whether the Assistant Consolidation Officer and the Consolidation Officer can be held to be 'Courts'. It is not disputed that under the Scheme of the Act both these authorities have to perform both judicial and executive functions. In discharging their functions they have to be guided by the policy underlying the Act which is to be found in its Preamble, which says that it had been enacted to provide for the consolidation of agricultural holdings for the development of agriculture. It is thus noticeable that the Consolidation Authorities have to take into consideration the policy of the legislature also.

At the time of arguments it was conceded by the learned counsel for the petitioners that the Assistant Consolidation Officer was not a 'Court'. It was further conceded that the Consolidation Officer acts in dual capacities, that is to say, he exercises both judicial and executive powers. Obviously, therefore, when he is discharging his executive functions he cannot be called a 'Court'. Therefore, the only point to be determined is as to whether he can be held to be a 'Court' when discharging his judicial functions. Before embarking on the determination of that question, it may be pointed out that it would neither be feasible nor practicable to permit the Oath Commissioners appointed by District Judges to verify the affidavits to be filed before the Consolidation Officer because there was no one to decide as to whether the affidavit was required to be filed before the Consolidation Officer when he was acting in his judicial capacity or as an Executive Officer, and it would not be proper to leave the decision of that matter to the Oath Commissioner himself. The writ petition is, therefore, liable to be dismissed on this ground alone because even if it were granted the order cannot be given effect to as the Consolidation Officer exercised both executive and judicial functions and there was no agency to decide as to which matters were judicial, with the result that it could not be said as to what affidavits could be verified by the petitioners.

22. But, as the question about the various authorities constituted under the Act being Courts was argued at some length, it would be well to go into it.

23. As said above, the Consolidation Officer exercised some judicial functions also. So, it will have to be examined if he had all the attributes of a Court in that limited sphere so as to hold him a 'Court'.

24. On an examination of the Act and the Rules after amendment in 1963 and their comparison with the earlier provisions it would appear that mostly there has been re-shuffling, breaking up, and re-numbering of the previous provisions, with the result that some old provisions have come to be deleted and a few provisions have been newly brought in. As we are mainly concerned with the judicial powers of the Consolidation Officer, we will have to confine the discussions with that end in view.

25. The first appearance of the Consolidation Officer for the exercise of his judicial powers comes when he acts under Sections 9-A and 9-B of the Act after the village records have been revised and the valuation and shares in holdings have been determined under Section 8, and the Statement of Principles has been prepared under Section 8-A. Then, he again comes into the picture when he acts under Section 21 of the Act after the provisional Consolidation Scheme has been drawn up under Section 19-A.

26. The matters which come up before the Consolidation Officer under Secs. 9-A and 9-B are those dealt with under Sections 8 and 8-A, and those which come up under Section 21 are those dealt with under Section 19-A. Initially the matters under Sections 8, 8-A and 19-A are dealt with by the Assistant Consolidation Officer who disposes of non-contentious ones or those in which he can bring about conciliation, and forwards the disputed ones to the Consolidation Officer for his decision under Section 9-A, 9-B or 21, as the case may be. What is noticeable is that it is mandatory for the Assistant Consolidation Officer to consult the Consolidation Committee while acting under Sections 8, 8-A and 19-A.

27. Now, with that background it may be seen as to what comes up before the Consolidation Officer for disposal and how he is to deal with it under Sections 9-A, 9-B and 21. It would be well to quote those provisions in extenso for a proper appreciation of the points raised at the Bar.

"9-A. Disposal of cases relating to claims to land and partition of joint holdings—

(1) The Assistant Consolidation Officer shall—

(i) where objections in respect of claims to land or partition of joint holdings are filed, after hearing the parties concerned; and

(ii) where no objections are filed, after making such enquiry as he may deem necessary.

Settle the disputes, correct the mistakes and effect partition as far as may be by conciliation between the parties appearing before him and pass orders on the basis of such conciliation.

(2) All cases which are not disposed of by the Assistant Consolidation Officer under sub-section (1), all cases relating to valuation of plots and all cases relating to valuation of trees, wells or other improvements for calculating compensation therefor, and its apportionment amongst co-owners, if there be more owners than one, shall be forwarded by the Assistant Consolidation Officer to the Consolidation Officer, who shall dispose of the same in the manner prescribed.

(3) The Assistant Consolidation Officer, while acting under sub-section (1) and the Consolidation Officer, while acting under sub-section (2), shall be deemed to be a Court of competent jurisdiction, anything to the contrary contained in any other law for the time being in force notwithstanding.

9-B. Disposal of objections on the Statement of principles—

(1) Where objections have been filed against the statement of Principles under Section 9, the Assistant Consolidation Officer shall, after affording opportunity of being heard to the parties concerned after taking into consideration the views of the Consolidation Committee, submit his report to the Consolidation Officer, who shall dispose of the objections in the manner prescribed.

(2) Where no objections have been filed against the Statement of Principles within the time provided therefor under Sec. 9, the Consolidation Officer shall with a view to examining its correctness, make local inspection of the unit, after giving due notice to the Consolidation Committee, and may thereafter make such modifications or alterations in the Statement of Principles as he may consider necessary.

(3) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Consolidation Officer under sub-section (1), or sub-section (2), may within 21 days of the date of the order, file an appeal before the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, whose decision, except as otherwise provided by or under this Act, shall be final.

(4) The Consolidation Officer and the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, shall, before deciding an objection or an appeal, make local inspection of the unit after giving due notice to the parties concerned and the Consolidation Committee.

21. Disposal of objection to the Provisional Consolidation Scheme—

(1) All objections received by the Assistant Consolidation Officer, shall, as soon as may be after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed therefor, be submitted by him to the Consolidation Officer, who shall dispose of the same as also the objections received by him, in the manner hereinafter provided, after notice to the parties concerned and the Consolidation Committee.

(2) Any person aggrieved by the order of the Consolidation Officer under sub-section (1) may, within 15 days of the date of the order, file an appeal before the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, whose decision shall, except as otherwise provided by or under this Act, be final.

(3) The Consolidation Officer shall, before deciding the objections and the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, may, before deciding an appeal, make local inspection of the plots in dispute after notice to the parties concerned and the Consolidation Committee.

(4) If, during the course of the disposal of an objection or the hearing of an appeal, the Consolidation Officer or the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, as the case may be, is of the opinion that material injustice is likely to be caused to a number of tenure-holders in giving effect to the provisional Consolidation Scheme, as prepared by the Assistant Consolidation Officer, or as subsequently modified by the Consolidation Officer, as the case may be, and that fair and proper allotment of land to the tenure-holders of the units is not possible without revising the provisional Consolidation Scheme, or getting a fresh one prepared, it shall be lawful, for reasons to be recorded in writing, for —

(i) the Consolidation Officer to revise the provisional Consolidation Scheme, after giving opportunity of being heard to the tenure-holders concerned, or to remand the same to the Assistant Consolidation Officer, with such directions as the Consolidation Officer may consider necessary; and

(ii) the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, to revise the provisional Consolidation Scheme, after giving opportunity of being heard to the tenure-holders concerned or to remand the same to the Assistant Consolidation Officer, or the Consolidation Officer, as the Settlement Officer, Consolidation, may think fit with such directions as he may consider necessary."

28. The first point urged was that it was no longer necessary to take into consideration the views of the Consolidation Committee which was essential under the original provisions. In my opinion, that is not so. It is true that under the original Section 12 (2) and Rule 34 (both having been changed now) it was incumbent on the Assistant Consolidation Officer to incorporate the views of the Consolidation Committee in his report to the Consolidation Officer, but now no mention is made of any such report being made by the Assistant Consolidation Officer to the Consolidation Officer under Section 9-A, which has replaced old Section 12. Now, R. 25-A clearly says that the Assistant Consolidation Officer will send a report.

No doubt, specific mention has not been made about incorporating the views of the Consolidation Committee but when the Assistant Consolidation Officer had to consult that Committee under Sections 8 and 8-A, it implies that he would give its views also in his report.

The same is not true of Section 9-B, which does make a mention of the Consolidation Committee in the section itself. Not only that, Section 9-B enjoins not only upon the Consolidation Officer but also on the Settlement Officer (Consolidation) hearing an appeal to give notice not only to the parties concerned but also to the Consolidation Committee at the time of making local inspection. That is not a mere empty formality. To put it bluntly, the Consolidation Committee is not to be there simply to show the faces of its members. The purpose could be nothing else but to have its views also. Similar provisions are to be found in Section 21. Consequently, it cannot be held that the Consolidation Committee has no say in the matter even now.

29. The next contention was that old Rule 34 which set out 'the manner prescribed' under which the discretion to take evidence rested with the Consolidation Officer has been deleted and now a new Rule 26 has been incorporated, under paragraph 2 of which it has been made obligatory on the Consolidation Officer to hear the parties, frame issues on the points in dispute, take evidence, both oral and documentary, and decide the objections. On the basis of the above provision it was very vehemently stressed that the requisites laid down by the Supreme Court in the cases mentioned in the earlier part of this judgment had been fulfilled and that, therefore, Consolidation Officer should be held to be a 'Court'. Here again, the Consolidation Committee will stand in the way. The influence of a third party, however, remote, should not have any part to play in formulating the decision.

30. Thirdly, stand was taken on the words 'shall be deemed to be a Court of competent jurisdiction' in Section 9-A on whose basis it was said that the Consolidation Officer was a Court. There was no necessity of using any epithet or introducing this legal fiction if they were full-fledged Courts and the legislature intended to give them that status. The Privy Council has held that when a person is 'deemed to be something', the only meaning possible is that whereas he is not in reality that something, the legislature requires him to be treated as if he were. (See the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. the Bombay Trust Corporation Ltd., 1930 All LJ 73 = (AIR 1930 PC 54)). The same view has been held by the Supreme Court in the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Express Newspapers Ltd., Madras, AIR 1965 SC 33 at p. 39. Thus the very use of the words 'deemed to be' goes to show that the legislature did not intend to give full status of Courts to the authorities constituted under the Act. It may, however, be urged that the legal fiction should at least be given effect to for the purpose for which it is created and so the Consolidation Authorities can be held to be Courts for the limited purposes in the provisions where the deeming clause has been used. In the present case it appears that the legislature did not intend to give the authorities the full status of Courts even in that limited sphere. This is indicated by the fact that the word 'Court' which was used independently and without any epithets in original Section 22 of the Act, which came to be interpreted by a Full Bench of this Court in Sita Ram's case, 1968 All LJ 144 = (AIR 1969 All 342) (FB) (Supra) as not including the Consolidation Officer, the Settlement Officer (Consolidation), and the Deputy Director of Consolidation was deleted in its entirety by the Amending Act of 1963.

31. From the above, it would appear that the Consolidation Officer under the Act or even Officers higher to him cannot be held to be Courts mainly because the views of the Consolidation Committee are always before them and they can be influenced by those views in their decisions.

32. It may now be seen as to whether the various authorities constituted under the Act are governed by the Code of Civil Procedure in the matter of procedure. On an examination of the various provisions of the Act it would appear that all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure have not been made applicable to the proceedings under the Act. Some limited powers have been specifically given under Section 38 and enlarged by Rule 26, which have been again supplemented by S. 41, which says that the provisions of Chapters IX and X of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, shall apply to all proceedings under the Act. On a perusal of the provisions of Section 38 and Rule 26 it would appear that they make a mention of the application of only some provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the same way the provisions in Chapters IX and X of the Land Revenue Act show that all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure have not been made applicable to the proceedings under that Act also. As such, it could not be held that all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure have been made applicable to the proceedings under the Act. Had the intention of the legislature been to make all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to the proceedings under the Act, it could have said so just in one sentence.

33. Still, it was averred that though all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure had not been made applicable to revenue Courts, they were still held to be Courts. On that analogy it was contended that the various authorities constituted under the Act were at least revenue Courts and, as such, Courts of Civil Jurisdiction, and that, therefore, Oath Commissioners appointed by District Judges could verify the affidavits to be filed before them. For that contention, reliance was placed on a decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Nagpur in Bade v. Emperor, AIR 1935 Nag 125 (1) which had relied on an earlier Full Bench decision of this Court in Madho Prakash Singh v. Murli Manohar, (1883) ILR 5 All 406.

As against those cases, the Standing Counsel Mr. M. N. Shukla cited a Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court in Arjun Rautura v. Krishna Chandra Gajpati Narayan Deo, AIR 1942 Pat 1 (FB). The rulings relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioners can have no application to the present case because the Full Bench decision in (1883) ILR 5 All 406 (FB) was given under the old Code of Civil Procedure in which revenue Courts were not separately defined. Now, a revenue Court has been described specifically in Section 5 (2) of the present Code as follows:—

"Revenue Court in sub-section (1) means a Court having jurisdiction under any local law to entertain suits or other proceedings relating to the rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes, but does not include a Civil Court having original jurisdiction under this Code to try such suits or proceedings as being suits or proceedings of a civil nature."

34. From the above description of revenue Courts it would appear that it deals with suits or other proceedings relating to rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes. Under the Act, the proceedings do not relate either to rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes. On the other hand, the Act provides for the consolidation of agricultural holdings for the development of agriculture. Obviously, therefore, consolidation Courts cannot come in the category of revenue Courts, as defined by Section 5 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

35. It would thus appear that the various authorities constituted under the Act can neither be held to be Courts of civil jurisdiction nor governed by the Code of Civil Procedure in the matter of procedure. It follows, therefore, that the petitioners cannot verify the affidavits to be filed before the various authorities constituted under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act.

36. Consequently, this writ petition must be dismissed.

37. T. P. MUKERJEE J.:— I agree with the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother Misra, J.

38. I regret, however, I am unable to agree with him in the view that the consolidation authorities, mentioned in Section 9-A of the Act, do not have "the full status of Courts" even for the limited purpose of that section. Section 9-A of the Act deals with "Disposal of cases relating to claims to land and partition of joint holdings" and it provides:—

"9-A (1) The Assistant Consolidation Officer shall—

(i) where objections in respect of claims to land or partition of joint holdings are filed, after hearing the parties concerned, and

(ii) where no objections are filed, after making such enquiry as he may deem necessary, settle the dispute, correct the mistakes and effect partition as far as may be by conciliation between the parties appearing before him and pass orders on the basis of such conciliation.

(2) All cases which are not disposed of by the Assistant Consolidation Officer under sub-section (1), all cases relating to valuation of plots and all cases relating to valuation of tress, wells or other improvements, for calculating compensation therefor, and its apportionment amongst co-owners, if there be more owners than one, shall be forwarded by the Assistant Consolidation Officer to the Consolidation Officer, who shall dispose of the same in the manner prescribed.

(3) The Assistant Consolidation Officer, while acting under sub-section (1) and the Consolidation Officer, while acting under sub-section (2), shall be deemed to be a Court of competent jurisdiction, anything to the contrary contained in any other law for the time being in force notwithstanding."

Sub-section (3) of Section 9-A quoted above, states categorically that the Assistant Consolidation Officer and the Consolidation Officer, while acting, respectively under sub-sections (1) and (2), shall be deemed to be a Court of competent jurisdiction. The words "deemed to be" in sub-section (3) imply that although the consolidation authorities referred to in Section 9-A are not in reality Courts, the Legislature intended that they shall be deemed to be Courts when they act within the limited ambit of that section.

39. The fact that in the case of 1968 All LJ 144 = (AIR 1969 All 342) (FB) a Full Bench of this Court held that the word "Court" occurring in Section 22 (2) of the Act, as it was originally worded, did not refer to consolidation authorities in my opinion, has no bearing on the construction of Section 9-A of the Act, Section 22 (2) of the Act, as it stood before, ran as follows:—

"Upon the publication of the Statement of Proposals under sub-section (1) of the Section 20 all suits or proceedings in the Court of first instance, appeal, reference or revision, in which the question of title or a question whether any person is a Sirdar, Adhivasi or asami in relation to the same land has been raised, shall be stayed."

40. Commenting on this sub-section, Beg, J., who spoke for the Full Bench, observed that the word "Court" used therein did not mean consolidation authorities. The terms of Section 9-A of the Act (introduced by Act 8 of 1963) are not, however, in pari materia with S. 22 (2). By S. 9-A, the Legislature enjoins that the Assistant Consolidation Officer and the Consolidation Officer shall be deemed to be Courts when acting under sub-ss. (1) and (2) of that section. The terms of S. 9-A are clear and unequivocal. The duty of a Court in interpreting a statute is to give effect to the intention of the Legislature as expressed by the language thereof. In this connection it may be appropriate to reproduce the dictum laid down by Lord Asquith, in memorable words, in East End Dwellings Co. Ltd. v. Finsbury Borough Council, 1952 AC 109:—

"If you are bidden to treat an imaginary state of affairs as real, you must surely, unless prohibited from doing so, also imagine as real the consequences and incidents which, if the putative state of affairs had in fact existed, must inevitably have flowed from or accompanied it..... The statute says that you must imagine a certain state of affairs; it does not say that having done so, you must cause or permit your imagination to boggle when it comes to the inevitable corollaries of that state of affairs."

41. Thus, according to Lord Asquith, a legal fiction created by a statute has to be given its full effect without allowing the mind "to boggle" and it must be held that the Assistant Consolidation Officer and the Consolidation Officer, when they dispose of matters mentioned in sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 9-A have the "full status of Courts", anything to the contrary contained in any other law for the time being in force notwithstanding.

42. That does not, however, necessarily mean that the Oath Commissioners appointed by the District Judges would be competent to verify affidavits before the consolidation authorities when they discharge their functions under Section 9-A of the Act. Such Oath Commissioners are appointed under Cl. (c) of Section 139 of the Civil Procedure Code which lays down:—

"139. In the case of any affidavit under this Code,

(a) any Court or Magistrate, or

- (b) any officer or other person whom a High Court may appoint in this behalf, or
- (c) any officer appointed by any other Court which the State Government has generally or specially empowered in this behalf,

may administer the oath to the deponent."

It is manifest from the language of this section that Oath Commissioners may administer oath to the deponent "in the case of any affidavit under this Code." Section 141 provides that procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code shall be followed in all proceedings "in any Court of Civil jurisdiction" and the Preamble to the Code shows that it was enacted to consolidate and amend the laws relating to "the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature." Rule 1 of Order 19 of the Code lays down, inter alia, that "any Court may, for sufficient reason, order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit....." It follows from these provisions that the authority to administer oath to a deponent is confined exclusively to a proceeding in a Court of Civil Judicature to which the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code apply. Section 9-A of the Act, as already noted, enacts that the Assistant Consolidation Officer and Consolidation Officer shall be deemed to be "a Court of competent jurisdiction" when they act under sub-sections (1) and (2) of that section. Section 2-A does not lay down that the consolidation authorities are to be regarded as "a Court of civil jurisdiction" and, as my learned brother Misra, J. has pointed out, all the provisions of the Civil P. C. are not applicable to proceedings before such authorities. He has also shown that in view of Section 5 (2) introduced in the Civil P. C. of 1908, Revenue Courts cannot be regarded as Civil Courts.

43. The result is, obviously, that the Oath Commissioners are not competent to verify affidavits even for the purposes of the proceedings under Section 9-A of the Act.

44. B. D. GUPTA, J.:— I have had the benefit of reading the judgment of brother Misra and am in agreement with the opinion recorded by him that the various authorities constituted under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act can neither be held Courts of civil jurisdiction nor be governed by the Code of Civil Procedure and that, therefore, the petitioners cannot verify affidavits desired to be filed before the various authorities constituted under the said Act.

45. As regards the divergence of opinion between brother Misra and brother Mukerji on the question whether the consolidation authorities mentioned in Section 9-A of the Act have the full status of Courts for the limited purpose of that Section, I express no opinion because the expression of any opinion in regard to the above question does not appear necessary for deciding the case before us and will be in the nature of obiter.

BY THE COURT

46. In view of our opinion that the petitioners cannot verify affidavits desired to be filed before the various authorities constituted under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act, the petitioners are not entitled to any relief.

Accordingly this petition is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 ALLAHABAD 251 (V 57 C 41) FULL BENCH

G. KUMAR, J. S. TRIVEDI AND
B. N. LOKUR, JJ.

Swami Prasad Pradhan, Petitioner v. Hargovind Sahai Mathur and others, Respondents.

Civil Misc. Writ No. 3661 of 1967, D/- 13-5-1969.

(A) Panchayats — U. P. Panchayat Raj Act (26 of 1947), Ss. 95 (1) (g), 96-A—Suspension of Pradhan of Gaon Sabha — Power is delegated to Sub-Divisional Officer only and not to Collector — Suspension order passed by Sub-Divisional Officer under the Collector's order — Suspension is invalid.

In pursuance of Section 96-A, the power under Section 95 (1) (g) has been delegated to the Sub-Divisional Officer, but not to the Collector. It follows that the Collector has no authority to exercise the power under Section 95 (1) (g). Where a plain reading of the order of suspension passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer shows that it was under the Collector's orders that the Pradhan of Gaon Sabha was placed under suspension and not as a result of the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Officer himself, the order is invalid. It may be that the Sub-Divisional Officer was convinced that the Pradhan of Gaon Sabha had committed irregularities but the decision to suspend him is of the Collector and not of the Sub-Divisional Officer and hence the order of suspension is invalid. (Paras 3 and 4)

(B) Panchayats — U. P. Panchayat Raj Act (26 of 1947), S. 95 (1) (g) — Power under to suspend Pradhan of Gaon Sabha — Cannot be exercised during pendency of enquiry — Status of Pradhan vis-a-vis State Government — Sub-clauses of Section 95 (1) (g) — Construction of — 1966 All LJ 740 and CMW No. 1140 of 1969, D/-23-4-1969 (All) and C. M. W. No. 2399 of 1968, D/- 25-4-1969 (All), Overruled.

Sec. 95 (1) (g) does not permit suspension pending enquiry in relation to any of the clauses thereof. The section deals with the power of suspension or removal simpliciter. There is little doubt that the power of removal can be exercised only after due enquiry; there can also be no doubt that the power of suspension cannot be exercised except after due enquiry in cases falling under Cls. (i), (iii), (iv) and (v) or even in those falling under the first two parts of Cl. (ii), where the person concerned refused to act or becomes incapable of acting for any reason. The section cannot be construed as authorising suspension pending enquiry only in cases covered by the last part of Cl. (ii), viz. where he is accused or charged for an offence involving moral turpitude. The section has to be read as a whole and, when done so, there is no particular reason why suspension pending enquiry is prohibited in respect of all clauses and two parts of clause (ii) but permitted in respect of the last part of Cl. (ii). The setting of the section and its various clauses is such that the power relatable to the last portion of Cl. (ii) should not be inconsistent with or by way of exception to the power relatable to the other clauses and the first two parts of Cl. (ii). If a different treatment was intended in regard to the last part of Cl. (ii) the legislature would not have placed all the five clauses on the same footing. Therefore, the last part of Cl. (ii) cannot alone be singled out as authorising suspension pending enquiry. That being so, the power of suspension or removal conferred by Sec. 95 (1) (g) can be exercised only by way of punishment and not pending enquiry, whatever clause of the section including the last part of Cl. (ii) is attracted for action.

(Paras 16, 17)

The Pradhan holds an elected office and his rights and duties are regulated by the Act. Though a public servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Penal Code by virtue of Section 28 of the Act, he is not a subordinate of the Sub-Divisional Officer or even of the State Government. The Act has conferred upon the State Government and its delegates, under Section 95, certain powers of control and supervision over the Gaon Sabha and its office bearers. The Pradhan is an elected representative and cannot be considered as a servant of the Government and also there is no contractual relationship between him and the Government much less the relationship of master and servant. The Gaon Sabha being the creature of statute, no question of inherent powers arises as the power and duties of Gaon Sabha as well as the powers and duties of its officers are all regulated by the Act.

The power to place under suspension an officer of the Gaon Sabha is absolutely not essential for the proper exercise of the power conferred under Section 95 (1)

(g), and therefore, suspension during enquiry cannot be ordered on the ground of the well recognised canon of interpretation of statutes that while a statute confers a jurisdiction it impliedly also grants the power of doing all such acts or employing such means as are essentially necessary to its execution. 1966 All LJ 740 & C. No. 93 of 1963, D/-9-12-1964 (All), Approved; AIR 1970 SC 140, Explained and Foll.

(C) Panchayats — U. P. Panchayat Raj Act (26 of 1947), S. 95 (1) (g) (ii) and (iii) — Suspension of Pradhan — Validity of order — Determination of — Duty of Court — Pradhan charged for giving leases illegally to some persons — Charge referable to Cl. (iii) and not Cl. (ii) of Section 95 (1) (g).

In determining the validity or otherwise of the order of suspension, the Court has to look to the order of suspension itself and not to the accusations made in the charge-sheet prepared subsequently. Where the Pradhan of Gaon Sabha is suspended for giving leases illegally to some persons, the order of suspension is referable to Cl. (iii) and not to Cl. (ii) of S. 95 (1) (g).

N. K. Saxena, for Appellants; Standing Counsel, for Opposite Parties.

LOKUR, J.:— This petition under Article 226 of the Constitution is referred to a Full Bench at the instance of Kirty, J. on the ground that there is a conflict in decisions of Division Benches of this Court and the legal position is anomalous.

2. The petitioner Swami Prasad was elected Pradhan of the Bilrai Gaon Sabha in 1960 but was placed under suspension by an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Mahoba dated 17th October, 1967. The petitioner Swami Prasad has challenged the order of suspension as invalid on several grounds. The order of suspension reads as follows:

"Under Collector's order dated 29-9-67 Sri Swami Prasad, Pradhan Gaon Sabha Bilrai is placed under suspension with immediate effect. Tahsildar Mahoba will please get his charge transferred to Up-pradhan in consultation with B. D. O. Kabrai. He has been suspended for giving leases illegally to the persons. Charge-sheet will be followed later on."

There is no doubt that the petitioner Swami Prasad has been suspended pending a departmental enquiry on the ground that he had given leases illegally to some persons.

3. It was contended on behalf of the petitioner, in the first place, that the order has been made at the behest of the Collector and the Sub-Divisional Officer has not applied his mind to the facts of the case and hence the order is inoperative. In the counter-affidavit filed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, however, it has been brought out that the allegations made against the petitioner were initially enquired into by the Tahsildar and found to be correct, that the Sub-Divisional Officer looked into the report of the Tahsildar and, being satisfied that the petitioner had committed irregularities in granting leases to several persons, made a report to the Collector and thereupon the petitioner was suspended in public interest. A plain reading of the order of suspension passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer shows that it was under the Collector's orders that the petitioner was placed under suspension and not as a result of the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Officer himself. It may be that the Sub-Divisional Officer was convinced that the petitioner had committed irregularities in granting leases but the decision to suspend the petitioner was of the Collector and not of the Sub-Divisional Officer. This is clear from the order itself.

4. The order of suspension is attributed to the power conferred by Section 95 (1) (g) of the U. P. Panchayat Raj Act, 1947. It is the State Government which has the power under this section to suspend or remove, inter alia, an officer of a Gaon Sabha, but Section 96-A of the Act enables the State Government to delegate all or any of its powers under the Act to any subordinate officer or authority. In pursuance of this provision the power under Section 95 (1) (g) has been delegated to the Sub-Divisional Officer, but not to the Collector. It follows that the Collector has no authority to exercise the power under that section and any orders passed by him under that section are unauthorised. The order in question, though recorded by the Sub-Divisional Officer, is referable to the order of the Collector and the Sub-Divisional Officer has not himself taken the decision to suspend the petitioner. On this ground alone the order ought to be declared as invalid and the petition disposed of accordingly. However, this reference to the Full Bench has been made on a legal question which, in fairness, ought also to be considered and we proceed to do so.

5. The legal question raised before us is whether Section 95 (1) (g) permits the appropriate authority to place the Pradhan of a Gaon Sabha under suspension pending a departmental enquiry against him as has been done in the present case. Section 95 (1) (g) reads as follows:—

"95. Inspection— (1) The State Government may—

... ..
(g) suspend or remove a member of a Gaon Panchayat or joint committee or Bhumi Prabandak Samiti, an office-bearer of a Gaon Sabha or a Panch, Sahayak Sarpanch or Sarpanch of a Nyaya Panchayat, if he—

(i) absents himself without sufficient cause from more than three consecutive meetings or sittings,

(ii) refuses to act or become incapable of acting for any reason whatsoever or if he is accused of or charged for an offence,

(iii) has abused his position as such or has persistently failed to perform the duties imposed by the Act or rules made thereunder or his continuance as such is not desirable in public interest, or

(iv) being a Sahayak Sarpanch or a Sarpanch of the Nyaya Panchayat takes active part in politics, or,

(v) suffers from any of the disqualifications mentioned in Cls. (a) to (m) of Section 5-A;"

6. The order of reference has drawn attention to the decision of Pathak J. in Babu Nandan Gir v. Sub-Divisional Officer, Salempur, 1965 All LJ 663 = (AIR 1966 All 158) in which an order placing the pradhan under suspension pending enquity was held to be without legal authority. There was a Special Appeal against the judgment of the Single Judge and a Division Bench, relying upon an unreported decision of another Division Bench in Shambhu Narain Singh v. Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar Faizabad, Spl. Appeal No. 93 of 1963, D/-9-12-1964 (All), confirmed the judgment, holding that the power to suspend the Pradhan conferred by Section 95 (1) (g) of the Act is to suspend by way of punishment after proper enquiry and not during the pendency, of the enquiry (Sub-Divisional Officer, Salempur v. Babu Nandan Gir Special Appeal No. 109 of 1965, D/-7-4-1965 (All) unreported).

However, in Baburam Tripathi v. Sub-Divisional Officer, 1966 All LJ 740, another Division Bench held that a perusal of Section 95 (1) (g) (ii) leaves no doubt that the order of suspension can be passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer as soon as he is prima facie satisfied that the office-bearer of a Gaon Sabha is accused of an offence involving moral turpitude. It is the difference of opinion between Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740 and the Sub-Divisional Officer, Salempur's case, Spl. Appeal No. 109 of 1965, D/-7-4-1965 (All) (Supra) which has led to this reference to the Full Bench.

7. It may be mentioned at the outset that there does not appear to be any conflict of views between Pathak, J. in 1965 All LJ 663 = (AIR 1966 All 158) and the Division Bench which decided Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740. In Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740 the order of suspension was referable to Cl. (ii) of Section 95 (1) (g) and it was held that if the requirements of that clause are fulfilled, the power to suspend pending enquiry exists. Pathak, J. held that same opinion when he observed:—

"From an examination of the provisions of Cl. (g) it appears that the power to suspend or to remove was intended to be exercised by the State Government as a punitive measure only except for the specific case in sub-clause (ii) where a person was accused of or charged for an offence involving moral turpitude. In a case falling under the exception in which action is taken upon the mere accusation or charging of the person for an offence, the action could not obviously be of a punitive nature. There, it is possible to say that the power to suspend may be exercised pending enquiry into the accusation or the charge. For the remaining provision of Section 95 (1) (g) there is nothing to suggest that the power to suspend can be employed also pending enquiry."

8. In dismissing the appeal against the judgment of Pathak, J., however, the Division Bench made a general observation that the power under Section 95 (1) (g) is to suspend by way of punishment after proper enquiry and not during the pendency of enquiry, thereby excluding the possibility of suspension pending enquiry even in cases answering to the requirements of Cl. (ii) of that section. This decision followed the view expressed by the Division Bench in Spl. App. No. 93 of 1963, D/- 9-12-1964 (All) (Supra) wherein it was held:—

"We have no doubt that the respondent had no power to suspend the appellant during the pendency of the enquiry into the charge against him. He could suspend him only by way of punishment as provided in S. 95 (1) (g). The Act contains no provision authorizing suspension pending enquiry into a charge."

9. The argument that the power to punish under Section 95 (1) (g) for a charge framed necessarily includes the power to suspend during the enquiry was negatived on the reasoning that it was not possible to say that suspension during the enquiry into a charge was intimately connected with the infliction of a punishment under Section 95 (1) (g), that the section would become meaningless or be rendered infructuous without such power and that in order to effectuate the punishment it must be preceded by suspension during the enquiry. It may incidentally be mentioned here that the order of suspension in that case did not specify the ground on which it was passed.

10. Thus, the conflict between Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740 on one side and the cases of Spl. App. No. 93 of 1963, D/- 9-12-1964 (All) and Spl. App. No. 109 of 1965, D/- 7-4-1965 (All) on the other is merely regarding the availability of the power to suspend under circumstances falling within Section 95 (1) (g) (ii).

11. In the present case, it should be noted that the order of suspension was made on the ground that the petitioner granted leases illegally to some persons. This ground would not fall within the scope of Cl. (ii) of Section 95 (1) (g) and the decision in Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740 would not, therefore, be applicable to the facts of this case. It is contended that the charge-sheet framed subsequently on the 21st November, 1967, did contain some accusation involving moral turpitude and, therefore, the case can be referred to Cl. (ii) of Section 95 (1) (g). In determining the validity or otherwise of the order of suspension, the Court has to look to the order of suspension itself and not to the accusations made in the charge-sheet prepared subsequently. On the face of the order of suspension, it is not referable to Cl. (ii) but to Cl. (iii) of Section 95 (1) (g) and it is not and cannot be contended that even in the case coming under Cl. (iii) a Pradhan can be suspended pending enquiry. On this ground also the order of suspension deserves to be declared invalid.

12. However, to proceed further with the conflict of decisions of the two division Benches of this High Court, it has been brought to our notice that the decision of the Division Bench in Spl. App. No. 93 of 1963, D/- 9-12-1964 (All) was taken up in appeal to the Supreme Court in Civil Appeal No. 721 of 1966, Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar Faizabad v. Shambhu Narain Singh, decided on 31st March, 1969—(AIR 1970 SC 140) and was upheld by the Supreme Court. It was argued that the Supreme Court having held that the power to suspend under Section 95 (1) (g) was a power to punish and that there was no specific power to suspend a Pradhan pending enquiry into charges, the law is well settled now and the decision of the Division Bench in Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740 is no more good law.

13. The aforesaid judgment of the Supreme Court has been noticed subsequently in two cases in this High Court—one before a Division Bench and the other before a Single Judge. But before adverting to these two cases, it would be relevant to analyse the views of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has held that the Pradhan holds an elected office and his rights and duties are regulated by the Act. Though a public servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code by virtue of Section 28 of the Act, he is not a subordinate of the Sub-Divisional Officer or even of the State Government. The Act has conferred upon the State Government and its delegates, under Section 95, certain powers of control and supervision over the Gaon Sabha and its office bearers.

Referring to the power of suspension and removal envisaged by Section 95 (1) (g) the Supreme Court observed:—

"But that power is admittedly a power to punish. No specific power to suspend a Pradhan pending enquiry into the charges levelled against him has been conferred on the State Government. This much is conceded."

It was argued before the Supreme Court that the relationship between the State Government and the Pradhan was that of master and servant and the State Government was, therefore, competent to preclude the Pradhan from discharging functions under the Act during the pendency of the enquiry into the charges levelled against him, but the argument was repelled and it was held that the Pradhan was an elected representative and cannot be considered as a servant of the Government and also that there was no contractual relationship between him and the Government much less the relationship of master and servant. (This was the view of Pathak, J. also). It was also held that the Gaon Sabha being the creature of statute, no question of inherent powers arose as the powers and duties of Gaon Sabha as well as the powers and duties of its officers were all regulated by the Act. The further contention that the power to suspend by way of punishment must be construed as implying the power to suspend pending enquiry on the well recognised canon of interpretation of statutes that while a statute confers a jurisdiction it impliedly also grants the power of doing all such acts or employing such means as are essentially necessary to its execution was not accepted on the ground that the power to place under suspension an officer of the Gaon Sabha is absolutely not essential for the proper exercise of the power conferred under Section 95 (1) (g).

14. The Supreme Court decision has been referred to in Civil Miscellaneous Writ No. 1140 of 1969, Bhagwat Prasad v. Sub-Divisional Officer Baberu decided on 23rd April, 1969 (All). In this case a Division Bench consisting of Broome and G. C. Mathur, JJ. following the decision in Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740 held that suspension pending enquiry in cases falling under Cl. (ii) of Section 95 (1) (g) would be in order and distinguished the decision of the Supreme Court on the ground that the case before the Supreme Court appeared to relate to Cl. (i) of Section 95 (1) (g) and not to Cl. (ii). With respect, we are unable to agree with the distinction made. As observed above and as stated by the Division Bench in their judgment in Spl. Appeal No. 93 of 1963, D/-9-12-1964 (All) arising out of Shambu Narain Singh's case, it was not stated in the order of suspension on what ground the order was passed and hence it is not correct to hold that the Supreme Court which was dealing with Shambhu Narain Singh's case, Spl. Appeal No. 93 of 1963, D/- 9-12-1964 (All), was concerned with Cl. (i) of Section 95 (1) (g). The Supreme Court, in fact, has made no distinction between the various clauses of that section and their decision relates to Section 95 (1) (g) as a whole and not to any of its specific clauses.

15. The other case in which the Supreme Court decision is noticed is Nathu v. Sub-Divisional Officer, Civil Misc. Writ No. 2399 of 1968, D/- 25-4-1969 (All). In this case the order of suspension attracted the requirements of Cl. (ii) of S. 95 (1) (g) and was upheld on the strength of Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740. Satish Chandra J., sitting singly, felt bound by the above decision of the Division Bench but he also observed that the statements of the Supreme Court that the power to suspend conferred by Section 95 (1) (g) is admittedly a power to punish and no specific power to suspend a Pradhan pending enquiry into the charges levelled against him has been conferred on the State Government are based on admissions or concessions made by the counsel before the Supreme Court and not on a consideration or interpretation of the provisions of Section 95 (1) (g). He pointed out that the Supreme Court did not also address itself to the decision of the Division Bench in Babu Ram Tripathi's case, 1966 All LJ 740. His conclusion is:

"In the circumstances it is difficult to hold that this decision of the Supreme Court involves the declaration of law on the point whether there is power to suspend pending enquiry."

16. Satish Chandra, J. relied on a Supreme Court decision in Jagannath Prasad Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 1245 for the proposition that a judgment of the Supreme Court which proceeds on concession of counsel cannot be deemed to be a declaration of law by the Supreme Court on the point conceded by the counsel and held that the Supreme Court decision under consideration cannot be treated as binding under Art. 141 of the Constitution as it was based on admissions and concessions made by the counsel. The following passage in the State of West Bengal v. Corporation of Calcutta, AIR 1967 SC 997 has also been referred to:—

"The decision made on a concession made by the parties even though the principle conceded was accepted by the Privy Council without discussion, cannot be given the same value as one given upon a careful consideration of the pros and cons of the question raised It is not possible to predicate what the Privy Council would have said if that distinction had been placed before it. Be that as it may this decision cannot be taken as finally deciding the question that is raised before us."

Satish Chandra, J. has posed a subtle question whether a statement of law made by the Supreme Court following upon concessions made by the counsel would be the law declared by the Supreme Court and binding on all Courts within the meaning of Art. 141 of the Constitution. We do not, however, propose to enter upon a discussion of this question, for, even if, on the reasoning of Satish Chandra, J. the Supreme Court judgment is not binding on us, in our view, section 95 (1) (g) does not permit suspension pending enquiry in relation to any of the clauses thereof. The section deals with the power of suspension or removal simpliciter. There is little doubt that the power of removal can be exercised only after due enquiry; there can also be no doubt that the power of suspension cannot be exercised except after due enquiry in cases falling under Cls. (i), (ii), (iv) and (v) or even in those falling under the first two parts of Cl. (ii), where the person concerned refused to act or becomes incapable of acting for any reason. It is difficult to construe the section as authorising suspension pending enquiry only in cases covered by the last part of Cl. (ii), viz. where he is accused or charged for an offence involving moral turpitude. The section has to be read as a whole and, when done so, there is no particular reason why suspension pending enquiry is prohibited in respect of all clauses and two parts of Cl. (ii) but permitted in respect of the last part of Cl. (ii).

17. It is contended that the words "if he is accused of or charged for an offence involving moral turpitude" indicate that a mere accusation or a charge is sufficient to enable suspension pending enquiry. A literal construction of this part of Cl. (ii) may support this contention, but the setting of the section and its various clauses is such that the power relatable to the last portion of Cl. (ii) should not be inconsistent with or by way of exception to the power relatable to the other clauses and the first two parts of Cl. (ii). If a different treatment was intended in regard to the last part of Cl. (ii) the Legislature would not have placed all the five clauses on the same footing. We are, therefore, unable to single out the last part of Cl. (ii) alone as authorising suspension pending enquiry. That being so, we hold that the power of suspension or removal conferred by S. 95 (1) (g) can be exercised only by way of punishment and not pending enquiry, whatever clause of the section including the last part of Cl. (ii) is attracted for action.

18. The result is that the petition must succeed on the ground that the Sub-Divisional Officer has passed the order of suspension without exercising his own judgment and acting on the Collector's orders and also on the ground that the power of suspension pending enquiry is not contemplated by Section 95 (1) (g) of the Act. Accordingly, the order of suspension of the petitioner dated 17th October, 1967, is declared void and inoperative and is hereby quashed. We make no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

bate must be taken of them only in so far as they relate to immoveable properties situated within Madras. Ex. A-6 was written at Guindy that is outside Madras, and, though part of it relates to immoveable property situated within Madras, so far as the legacy of Rs. 15,000 given to Aparanji Ammal is concerned, that disposition does not relate to immoveable property within Madras. To that extent Part 6, Succession Act, does not apply to the will and therefore no probate has to be taken". Dealing with the argument of the learned counsel for the respondent that probate must be taken for the whole of Ex. A-6, the learned Judge observed: "If this contention is correct, sub-clause (b) would have been worded 'to all wills and codicils made outside those territories containing any dispositions of immovable property situated within those limits'". Cornish J. in a separate judgment, after giving the history of the legislation agreed with Ramesam, J., that the plaintiff's claim to the pecuniary legacy under the codicil was maintainable without a probate.

In so far as the liability under the pronote is concerned, both the learned Judges held that the note was executed by the testator and his executor, the latter being under no obligation of any sort to Aparanji Ammal for the payment of the legacy, and the testator did not intend her to have both the legacy and the amount covered by the pronote. In this view, the Bench held that the legacy is recoverable without obtaining a probate. It may be noted that this decision was rendered in accordance with the law as it existed prior to the amendment of S. 57 by the addition of clause (c) in 1927 which applied the provisions of Schedule III to the wills of Hindus wherever executed. We may observe that probate is the only legal evidence of a will in any question respecting a right to property under the will and the classification of wills and codicils in Section 57 (1) clauses (a) and (b) before the amendment might have to be treated as separate instruments for the purpose of the application of Section 213(1) and the other relevant sections of the Indian Succession Act.

A will or codicil, as we have seen, comes within clause (a) and is governed by the applied sections of the Indian Succession Act but a will or a codicil made outside the prescribed limits comes within clause (b) and is governed by those sections. As Cornish, J. observed in AIR 1930 Mad 956 at p. 962: "The plain meaning of these words is that in respect of a will or of a codicil coming within clause (b) of Sec. 213 (1) applies only to the extent of the will or codicil disposing of immovable property within the prescribed limits, but does not otherwise apply to the instrument. There is nothing very strange in such an exception being made when it is remembered that in England formerly the Court of Probate had no jurisdiction to authenticate a will so far as it related to real estate and that the Probate was no evidence at all of the validity or contents of a will as to such property". The question in that case was not whether the 1st defendant should apply for a probate of the entire property or for only a part of it. It was only whether the legatee could recover the amount without obtaining a probate. Ramesam, J., at page 959 said that he was clearly of opinion "in so far as the plaintiff has got to establish a right to the legacy of Rs. 15,000 no probate need be taken of Ex. A-6 whether we regard it as separate or independent will or whether it be regarded as a codicil supplementary to the will Ex. A-5. In either case, to the extent that the plaintiff's right to the legacy is sought to be established, no probate need be taken of it."

The learned Judge further observed: "It must be remembered that defendant 1 actually entered upon his duties as executor, applied for probate and got an order in his favour, but for some reasons did not actually take out a probate. He would now be estopped from saying that he is not under any obligation as executor; vide Muniswami Chetti v. Maruthammal, (1911) ILR 34 Mad 211 which applies the principle of Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Aiyangar, (1911) ILR 34 Mad 257."

4. This decision, in our view, does not throw any light, nor is it an authority for the proposition contended for by Sri Balaparameswari Rao that partial probate of a will can be obtained at the choice of the executor. As we said earlier, there is no section in the Succession Act dealing specifically with grants in respect of a portion of the estate of a particular item of property. Chapter II of Part IX dealing with limited grants for the use and benefit of others having right, and grants for the special purposes. The decisions which have been referred to in the office note cannot be distinguished, as attempted by Sri Balaparameswari Rao, on the ground that those cases relate to wills executed in Bengal or within the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Courts of Bombay and Madras or in respect of immoveable properties situated within those territories. The principle laid down therein as a general rule that probate of a will should be applied for the whole of the estate, is not applicable to wills executed or properties situated outside those limits except in respect of immoveable properties situated within those limits.

There is no warrant for this contention. In the Goods of Grish Chunder Mittar, (1881) 6 Cal 483 = 7 Cal LR 593, Mt. Girija Bala v. Manindra Lal, AIR 1927 Cal 654 and In the Goods of Sewprasad Saraf, AIR 1954 Cal 444 are cases which are an authority for the proposition that, as a rule, in all cases the probate or the letters of administration must be taken for the entire estate, both of moveable as well as immoveable properties, and that the duty must be paid upon the value of the whole, except in cases where limited ner by the observations that are complained of."

It is true that a person authorised to award a punishment can always entrust an enquiry to a person who is not so authorised Pradyat Kumar Bose v. Hon'ble the Chief Justice of Calcutta High Court, 1955-2 SCR 1331 = (AIR 1956 SC 285). It is equally true that the entire proceedings beginning from the show cause notice, framing of the charges and the conduct of the enquiry and ending with the report and final show cause notice of punishment must conform to certain well-accepted principles of natural justice i.e., that the Enquiring Officer must be unbiased and should not prejudice the case, and that the enquiry also must be fair and impartial by giving full opportunity to the delinquent to plead and establish his defence. It appears that even where it is not alleged that the punishing authority is not biased or has not in any way violated the principles of natural justice or has not transgressed any of the accepted principles upon which fair and impartial enquiries have to be held, the fact that he acts upon a report of an enquiry conducted by an officer who is biased or has violated the principles of natural justice or has prejudged the case, would nonetheless vitiate the finding and punishment. In the language of Das C. J., in State of U. P. v. Mohammad Nooth, AIR 1958 SC 86 at p. 91.

"If it shocks our notions of judicial propriety and fair play, as indeed it does, it was bound to make a deeper impression on the mind of the respondent as to the unreality and futility of the proceedings conducted in this fashion."

It will, in our view, not avail of an answer to allegations of bias that it was not alleged that the punishing officer was not biased even though the conduct of the Enquiring Officer had given rise to such bias. This principle of natural justice, we think is equally applicable to enquiries under Article 311 as they are to administrative tribunals and administrative enquiries. The principle of natural justice would include within it impartiality of hearing process and the conducting of proceedings in good faith.

4. In Subba Rao v. State of Hyderabad, 1957 Andh LT 155 = (AIR 1957 Andh Pra 414), Subba Rao C. J. (as he then was) delivering the judgment of the Bench consisting of himself and Mohammed Ahmed Ansari, J. (as he then was), and agreeing with the summary of the case law on the subject given by Sinha, J., in Choudhury v. Union of India, AIR 1956 Cal 862, observed at p. 162:

"Doubtless, the Government i.e., the authority entitled to punish the petitioner in this case can ordinarily delegate the holding of an enquiry to its subordinate officers before taking final action against him. But it is a fundamental principle of natural justice that the officer selected to make an enquiry should be a person with an open mind and not one who is either biased against the person against whom action is sought to be taken or one who has prejudged the issue." While it may not be permissible according to the observations made by the American Judges as cited by our learned brother — to probe into the mental process of the enquiring officer or the person charged with making an administrative decision but nonetheless where bias or prejudice is obvious even before the enquiry commenced so as to raise a strong feeling in the mind of the delinquent that he has no hope of a fair trial, then the principle that 'justice should not only be done but seen to be done' has its full impact upon the validity of the proceedings.

It is true that the process in administrative enquiries need not follow the ideals and patterns of regular courts of law. As observed by Mr. Justice P. B. Mukharji of the Calcutta High Court in an article "Administrative Law" (published in the Journal of the Indian Law Institute, October 1958 Vol. I, Part No. 1):

"The climate of the court, the climate of the orthodox jurisprudence, the pattern of the judicial procedure and the judicial environment, and the anatomy of the judicial process are all basically different from those of the administrative courts, the administrative agencies, the administrative process, and the administrative technique. To judicialise the administrative process is one way to defeat the new demand, and to fly against the very reason for the growth and development of the administrative law".

But nonetheless there can be no doubt that certain basic principles of natural justice apply equally to administrative enquiries as to judicial enquiries. A person who has conducted a preliminary enquiry and found a prima facie case for a regular enquiry, will not be permitted to conduct the regular enquiry because he has already in some way formed an opinion in the case, or where an administrative superior has expressed definite views on the conduct of a delinquent officer, he will not be permitted to hold an enquiry: See 1957 Andh LT 155 = (AIR 1957 Andh Pra 414). In Suryanarayana v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (1967) 2 Andh WR 253 a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chandrasekhara Sastry and Krishna Rao, JJ. had also taken a similar view. In that case, the charge against the petitioner was as follows:

"All the above goes to prove that Shri R. Suryanarayana Addl. Agricultural Demonstrator, Hiramandalam with an ulterior motive preplanned and committed the fraud by removing the paddy seed from the paddy seed bags procured by him.

He, being a responsible Government servant on the spot, instead of taking steps to see that his subordinate staff do not commit fraud, misappropriation or any other irregularity, has himself deliberately committed the fraud and thus failed to exercise proper care to Government stocks quite contrary to rules in force."

The enquiry officer having thus clearly given a finding on the charges even before the enquiry started had also proceeded to indicate the punishment. The ratio of this decision was set out by Krishna Rao, J., at page 257:

"The above facts clearly indicate that the Enquiry Officer had already prejudged the issue and can never be expected to maintain an open mind during the course of the enquiry. In other words, the Enquiry Officer gave his judgment even before the trial, rendering the whole trial a mere farce. We are therefore justified in coming to the conclusion that the enquiry officer in the present case has not started his enquiry with an open mind but that he has prejudged the very issue before him."

The facts in each case therefore will have to be taken into consideration in determining whether there is a violation of the principles of natural justice and fair hearing. In the cases on hand, the Deputy Superintendent of Police had, in the charge-memos dated 17th June 1960, stated that the delinquents "had abused their position and brought discredit to the department". That was a categorical opinion and that in our view, indicates bias; or, at any rate, a fear or apprehension in the minds of the delinquents that they had no hope or chance of a fair trial; to say that the delinquents did not protest at that time is to ignore the fact that they, being in service in the lowest rung, may have entertained a fear of antagonising the superior. At any rate, that cannot be a matter which can be taken into consideration in determining whether the proceedings have been validly initiated. In our view, therefore, the expression of an opinion by the enquiry officer in the charge-memos that the delinquents had abused their position and brought discredit to the department would vitiate the proceedings.

5. On the second question whether the mentioning of the final punishment of dismissal in the charge memo constitutes a violation of Article 311 of the Constitution there is—as pointed out by Parthasarathi, J.—a divergence of view of Single Benches of this Court. Our learned brother Obul Reddy, J., in Gunnama Naidu v. Sub-Collector Gudur, W. P. No. 1566 of 1967 D/- 28-10-1968 (AP) thought that this would cause a reasonable apprehension in the mind of a delinquent Officer that the Enquiry Officer had made up his mind and that he will not have a fair-play if that Officer were to enquire against him. On the other hand, our learned brother Chinnappa Reddy, J., in Venkanna v. State of Andhra Pradesh, W. P. No. 2033 of 1966 on 1-3-1968 (AP) and Sambaiah v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, W. P. No. 1275 of 1966, D/-30-7-1968 (AP) was of the view that bias is not a legitimate inference that can be drawn invariably from the mere fact of the indication of punishment in the charge memo. As pointed out by Chinnappa

Reddy J. and as also noticed by us earlier the decision in 1967-2 Andh WR 253 was a case in which in the first show cause notice issued to the delinquent officer itself, the enquiry officer had given clear findings on all the charges and that was the ground on which the aforesaid Bench Decision, in our view and with respect, was rightly distinguished. The decision of our learned brother, Narasimham, J. in Mohan Das v. Superintendent of Police, Khammameth, (1967) 1 Andh WR 156 was also distinguished on the same grounds inasmuch as it was stated in the charge that the delinquent had grossly misbehaved in the affair.

It is no doubt true that our learned brother Krishna Rao, J. in R. Suryanarayana's case, 1967-2 Andh WR 253 (supra) did in the end mention that indicating the punishment in a charge-memo itself is not contemplated by Article 311 and is wholly inappropriate and that such an indication of penalty really offends Article 311 of the Constitution of India. In our view, that is not the ratio of that decision; and if that was the only ground, it would have to be seen whether in fact the indication of punishment prejudiced the defence of the delinquent if otherwise the enquiry was conducted in a fair and impartial manner and the provisions of Art. 311(2) were complied with.

6. In Khem Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 300 their Lordships of the Supreme Court had considered a similar question. While referring to the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in High Commissioner for India v. I. M. Lall, AIR 1948 PC 121 in which the notice given to I. M. Lall did not specify dismissal as the only and particular punishment proposed to be imposed on him, but called upon him to show cause why he should not be dismissed, removed or reduced or subjected to such other disciplinary action as the competent authority might think fit to enforce, S. R. Das, C. J., said that the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in I. M. Lall's case, AIR 1948 PC 121, Supra, while agreeing with the view taken by the majority of the Federal Court, quite clearly indicated that what they agreed with was that second opportunity was to be given to the Government servant concerned after the charges had been brought home to him as a result of the enquiry. "Their Lordships" the learned Chief Justice observed, "made it clear that no action could, in their view, be said to be proposed within the meaning of the section until a definite conclusion had been come to on the charges and the actual punishment to follow was provisionally determined on, for before that stage the charges remained unproved and the suggested punishments were merely hypothetical and that it was on that stage being reached that the statute gave the civil servant the opportunity for which sub-section (3) made provision."

A close perusal of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in I. M. Lall's case, AIR

1948 PC 121 (supra), will, however, show that the decision in that case did not proceed on the ground that an opportunity had not been given to I. M. Lall against the proposed punishment merely because in the notice several punishments were included, but the decision proceeded really on the ground that this opportunity should have been given after a stage had been reached where the charges had been established and the competent authority had applied its mind to the gravity or otherwise of the proved charge tentatively and proposed a particular punishment. Khem Chand's case, AIR 1958 SC 300 was one in which the charge-sheet had asked the delinquent to show cause why he should not be dismissed from service and though the report of the Enquiry Officer had found the delinquent guilty of practically all the charges for the first time the punishment of dismissal was suggested by him. But since he was not the punishing authority, he made a report to the Deputy Commissioner, but who accepted the report and confirmed the opinion that the punishment of dismissal should be inflicted on the appellant. The Deputy Commissioner did not appear to have given the delinquent a further opportunity to show cause why that particular punishment should not be inflicted on him. It is this omission to indicate the punishment in the second show cause notice as required under Clause (2) of Article 311 that had been held to have contravened the constitutional protection and his dismissal was therefore set aside. Though S. R. Das C. J., no doubt said as page 308:

"If the competent authority were to determine before the charges were proved, that a particular punishment would be meted out to the Government servant concerned, the latter may well feel that the competent authority had formed an opinion against him, generally on the subject matter of the charge or, at any rate, as regards the punishment itself", nonetheless did not say, that by itself would amount to violation of the principles of natural justice. The question as we have posed earlier, would be as to whether the indication of punishment in the charge-memo by itself would amount to a violation of the principles of natural justice, or whether the constitutional protection guaranteed under clause (2) of Article 311 was also complied with. In many cases where punishment has been indicated, in the charge-memo it may be that it was meant to indicate that if the charges are proved, that punishment would be meted out but it is not to say without anything further that the charges had been proved against him and therefore the punishment would be meted out.

7. In the other unreported decision of this Court in K. Venkateswara Rao v. Inspector-General of Police, Andhra Pradesh W. P. No. 1164 of 1964 dated 20-9-1965 (AP) the Bench consisting of Manohar Pershad, J. (as he then was) and Kumarayya, J. had stated that the Deputy Inspector

General of Police had disagreed with the Enquiry Officer in respect of one charge which he found as proved while agreeing with the finding that the other charge was held to have not been proved observed that

"as the order of the Deputy Inspector-General of Police and the dissenting note do not show that that officer had come to an independent decision after perusing the record, such an order cannot be sustained, and has to be quashed. After this, it is unnecessary for us to go into the other contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner whether the evidence on record is legal evidence or not so as to sustain the order of dismissal."

After having so stated incidentally, the Bench also considered at the end the question whether the indication of punishment in the charge-memo would vitiate the enquiry. Reliance seems to have been placed by the Government Pleader for his contention that there is nothing wrong in indicating the punishment by a reference to the procedure contained in certain Police Standing Orders, but he could not produce them. On the other hand, the Government Order with which they were concerned had definitely stated that the accused officers should not be asked to show cause against a particular penalty in the first charge-memo itself before the competent authority arrives at a provisional conclusion after completion of the enquiry, thereby giving rise to an argument that the authority concerned had prejudged the issues involved. Further a penalty can be suggested only with reference to the charges proved.

This decision in our view, is not an authority for the proposition that the mere mention of punishment would by itself vitiate the enquiry because the Bench nonetheless held in that case that though there was a mention of penalty in the first show cause notice given to the petitioner therein, it does not appear that the Enquiry Officer had already made up his mind against the petitioner because if that was so, he would not have acquitted the petitioner of the charges. Manohar Pershad, J., had towards the end observed:

"In view of this there does not remain any force in the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that he was prejudged by this mention of punishment in the first notice."

8. An examination of the decided cases leads us to the conclusion that except in so far as the facts and circumstances of a particular case indicate a prejudged mind or amount to prejudging of the issue, the mere mention of punishment in the charge-memo by itself would not amount to bias or prejudice. If, as we said earlier, the provisions of clause (2) of Article 311 have to be complied with at the end of the enquiry; if so, a reasonable opportunity of being heard should be given by calling upon the delinquent to show cause as to why he should not be meted out with the punishment indicated in the charge-memo in respect of the charges held to have been proved against him. While this is so, in order to obviate any allegation of bias or prejudgment, it is always best for the Enquiry Officers to avoid indicating punishment in the charge.

9. In the view taken by us on the first two questions, the last two questions specified in the order of Parthasarathi, J., need not be considered. The appeals are allowed with costs in this Court and in the Courts below, the judgment of the first appellate Court set aside and that of the trial Court restored.

Appeals allowed.

(V 57 C 14)

KONDAIAH, J.

Nimmakayala Audi Narayanamma, Appellant v. State of Andhra Pradesh, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 137 of 1968, D/-24-4-1969, against the complaint by the Asst. S. J., Cuddapah, D/-19-1-1968.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 476, 537 — Scope and principles of Section 476 stated — It is incumbent on Court before making complaint to record finding that it is expedient in interests of justice to enquire into offence — Omission to record finding is not mere irregularity curable under Sec. 537 but goes to root of matter — Where no such finding is recorded, it is not permissible to draw presumption under Sec. 114, Evidence Act that Court had formed opinion regarding expediency to enquire into matter, even if Court making complaint may be Court before which offence was committed — Satisfaction is objective — Order must be a speaking order — Person sought, to be proceeded against must be heard before forming an opinion — AIR 1962 All 251, Dissent. (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.)

On an analysis of Section 476 Criminal P. C. the following principles can be deduced:

(1) It is not every case of perjury irrespective of facts and circumstances that should form the subject of an enquiry but it is only in such cases where the Courts are of honest belief and opinion, on an objective consideration of the facts and circumstances that the interests of justice require the laying of a complaint.

(2) It is not mandatory but discretionary for the Court, depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case, either to conduct any preliminary enquiry or to dispense with the same, to form an opinion that it is in the interests of justice to prosecute the person or persons that committed perjury.

(3) The proceeding under Section 476 appealable under Sec. 476-B is an independent and altogether a different proceeding from that of the original Sessions case where the witnesses have committed the offence of perjury.

(4) The proceeding under Section 476 being penal in nature, it is not only desirable and reasonable, but just and proper and in accordance with the principles of natural justice to afford a reasonable opportunity by issuing a show cause notice to the accused party to establish by adducing evidence oral and documentary that it was not expedient in the interests of justice to prosecute him.

(5) On a plain reading of the provisions of Section 476, and in particular the words "such Court may... record a finding to that effect", there is no room for doubt that the Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made, as a condition precedent for filing a complaint.

(6) The provision in Section 476 relating to the recording of a finding is not merely directory but is mandatory, for, an appeal lies against the order of the Court; and under Section 476-B, the appellate Court is competent either to withdraw the complaint already made or direct the complaint to be made, depending on the facts and circumstances of each case.

(7) The opinion or the satisfaction contemplated under Section 476 is an objective and not a subjective one and should be reflected in the finding recorded or the order passed by the Court and such an order must be a speaking one supported by valid and justifiable grounds to enable the appellate Court under Section 476-B to know the material on which the Court had come to such a conclusion or opinion that it was expedient in the interests of justice to launch a prosecution.

(8) Though the Court, while recording the finding contemplated under Section 476 need not strictly adhere to the very language, viz., "that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made," used in the section, it must use such language that it leaves no doubt that it was a fit and proper case and it was in the interests of justice to launch a prosecution against the person or persons that committed perjury.

(9) Even where the Presiding Officer, before whom the offence under Section 195 (1) (b) or (c) has been committed, himself prefers the complaint and forwards the same to the Magistrate, no presumption under Section 114 of the Evidence Act to the effect that he had formed an honest opinion, even though no such finding has been recorded, that it is expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence, can be made as, on a plain and grammatical reading of the language and scheme of Section 476, it is incumbent on the Court to give a specific finding before making a complaint. AIR 1962 All 251, Dissent.

(10) The omission or failure to record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interest of justice to enquire into the offence, is not a mere irregularity curable under Section 537, Criminal P. C. and it goes to the root of the matter as the Court will have no jurisdiction to file a complaint without recording such a finding. AIR 1962 All 251, Dissent. (Para 16)

 C. Padmanabha Reddy, for Appellant; Public Prosecutor, for the State.

JUDGMENT: The complaint filed on February 2, 1965 by the appellant before the Police against Gotur Palreddi and eight others for the offences under Sections 457, 380, 395 and 395 read with 397 I. P. C. was referred as false. Thereupon, a private complaint preferred by her on 1-7-65 before the J.S.C.M., Cuddapah was, after committal tried by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Cud-dapah in S. C. 5/65 who, by his judgment dated October 28, 1967 acquitted the accused of all the charges levelled against them holding that there was neither truth nor substance in the complaint. On 19-1-1968, the Assistant Sessions Judge filed a complaint before the Judicial First Class Magistrate, Cuddapah against the appellant alleging that she had maliciously instituted criminal proceedings against Gotur Palreddi and eight others on the false charge of commission of the offence of dacoity with intent to cause injury to them, knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such charge or proceeding in his Court, and has thereby committed an offence punishable under the 2nd part of Section 211 I. P. C. Hence this appeal.

2. The failure on the part of the Assistant Sessions Judge, contended by Sri Padmanabha Reddy for the Appellant, to give a finding as contemplated by Section 476 Criminal P. C. about the expediency in the interests of justice to inquire into the offence under Section 211 I. P. C. alleged to have been committed by his client in the course of trial in S. C. No. 5 of 1965, warrants the quashing of the complaint.

3. The learned Public Prosecutor contended contra and urged that Section 476 Criminal P. C. does not contemplate the Court to give any such specific finding in every case.

4. The point that arises for determination is whether on the facts and in the circumstances, the Assistant Sessions Judge has or has not preferred the complaint according to law as contemplated by the provisions of Section 476 Criminal P. C.?

5. For a proper appreciation of the point at issue, it is profitable to consider Sec. 476 Criminal P. C. which reads thus:

"When any....Criminal Court is...of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into any offence referred to in Section 195 sub-section (1), clause (a) or clause (b) which appears to have been committed in or relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the First Class; having jurisdiction...."

Section 476 Criminal P. C. prescribes an exhaustive procedure relating to the preferring of complaints by Courts, civil, criminal or revenue, in respect of offences mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-sec. (1) to Section 195. This section enjoins the Court, before which the offence under Section 211, I. P. C. appears to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding before it, to be satisfied objectively in each case that it was expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be held into the offence. Thereafter the Court may have such preliminary enquiry as it thinks necessary and record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice or that it is a fit case to prosecute the person or persons who committed the offence and then make a complaint in writing and forward the same to the First Class Magistrate for disposal according to law. The words "such Court may after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect" must necessarily be construed that it is incumbent on the Court to record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence referred to in Section 195 (1) clause (b) or (c) although the preliminary enquiry may or may not be held in the discretion of the Court, depending upon the circumstances of each case. The action of the Court under Section 476 is appealable by the aggrieved party under Section 476-B Criminal P. C. to the Court having jurisdiction to receive appeals against the decisions of that Court.

In my considered opinion, the opinion contemplated under Section 476 to be formed by the Court before which the offence appears to have been committed, that it was expedient in the interests of justice to prosecute such person or persons, must be an objective but not a subjective one. The test that has to be laid must be that of a prudent reasonable person and it should be a speaking one supported by valid grounds. Otherwise it would be often very difficult and sometimes even impossible for the appellate Court under Section 476-B to arrive at a conclusion as to whether the Court has rightly applied its mind and passed the order under Section 476 Criminal P. C. or not. The opinion contemplated under Section 476 must be expressed in a speaking order. Whether it be either with or without such preliminary enquiry as the Court thinks it necessary it has to record a finding to the effect that on a consideration of the facts and circumstances, it was of an honest and bona fide opinion that it was a fit case for prosecution or that it was expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the matter. Without such finding it would be very difficult to probe into the mind of the Court that passed the order under Section 476 Criminal P. C. or the complaint lodged by the Court before the First Class Magistrate as the appellate Court while considering under Sec. 476-B Criminal P. C. is entitled to agree or disagree with such an action of the trial Court and make the complaint in cases where the subordinate Court refused to make a complaint, under Section 476-B or direct the withdrawal of the complaint in appropriate cases if it finds that the same is not warranted in the interests of justice.

6. That apart, the provisions of Section 476 and Section 476-B Criminal P. C. contemplate a different proceeding from that of the original proceeding before the subordinate Court where the offence appears to have been committed by the party. After the closure of the enquiry relating to the main offence which was decided in the Sessions Case, the further proceeding contemplated under Section 476 Criminal P. C. to prosecute the person who had filed a false complaint, which in the opinion of the Court it is expedient in the interests of justice to be enquired into is a different proceeding. No doubt it is true, as pointed out by the learned Public Prosecutor, in some cases it happens that the very same Magistrate or the Judge who tried the original case would have been the Presiding Officer who had to consider the applicability of the provisions of Section 476 Criminal P. C. and file a complaint in appropriate cases. Even then it is just and proper that that Court whether presided by the same presiding Officer or by a different Officer, should proceed according to the provisions of Section 476 and issue a show cause notice as to why the person sought to be prosecuted should not be prosecuted and after affording an opportunity, record a finding to the effect that it was expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence committed by him and file a complaint before the First Class Magistrate.

The proceedings under Section 476 Criminal P. C. being judicial and criminal in nature, the interpretation that should be placed in construing the section should be just, fair, proper and equitable and must be in accordance with the principles of natural justice. By adopting such interpretation and procedure, the aggrieved party would be afforded with an adequate opportunity to show and satisfy the Court that it was not in the interests of justice, to launch the prosecution and thereby avoid further proceeding. That apart, the appellate Court also would be in a position to appreciate the reasons assigned in each case and would have the advantage of coming to its own conclusion without any difficulty about the justification or otherwise of launching the prosecution in a particular case. When once the prosecution had been launched, the accused will not be having an opportunity thereafter to raise the question of expediency in the interests of justice to launch the very prosecution itself. The case thereafter will have to be gone into on the merits.

7. It appears there is no direct case of our High Court on this question. I shall presently consider the several decisions of various High Courts cited before me by both the counsel in support of their respective contentions.

8. The decision of the Allahabad High Court in Lal Behari v. State, AIR 1962 All 251, on which strong reliance has been placed by the learned Public Prosecutor, in a way supports his plea. The learned Public Prosecutor relies upon the following passage of Nigam J., who spoke for the Bench, at page 255:

...the jurisdiction of the Court to prefer a complaint does not in my opinion depend upon the recording of the opinion though it is consequent on the formation of such an opinion. In the circumstances, I am of the view that omission to record such an opinion is only an irregularity and does not affect the legality of the complaint...Normally the fact that a complaint is preferred is itself evidence of the fact that such an opinion had been formed and in proper cases a presumption may even be raised under Section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act."

No doubt, the aforesaid passage supports the contention of the learned Public Prosecutor. It is pertinent to notice two sentences prior to the aforesaid passage, which read thus:

"...I am of opinion that the formation of an opinion that the prosecution is expedient in the interests of justice is a condition precedent to the preference of the complaint. The law also requires that such a finding should be recorded...."

The aforesaid passage in paragraph 20 in the Judgment of Nigam J., at page 255, if read as a whole, would also support the plea of the appellant herein that a finding to the effect that the prosecution is expedient in the interests of justice should be recorded.

9. In Liaqat Husain v. Vinay Prakash, AIR 1946 All 156, a Division Bench of the same High Court has ruled that a finding by the Court that the prosecution is expedient in the interests of justice must be given before filing the complaint. In Chhajoo v. Radhay Shyam, AIR 1968 All 296 (FB), a Full Bench of the same High Court, while considering the scope and interpretation of Section 476 Criminal P. C., observed at page 302 thus:

"An analysis of Section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as already pointed out, would show that it contemplates three stages in the making of a complaint: The first stage is when a finding has to be given by the Court concerned to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice to file a complaint; the second is the making of the complaint in writing signed by the presiding officer or by the officer appointed by the High Court and the third stage is that of forwarding the same to a Magistrate of the First Class."

10. The Madras High Court is consistently of the view that the provision in Section 476 Criminal P. C. to record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence, is not merely directory but is mandatory and it is a condition precedent for preferring a complaint before the Magistrate in Chaduvula Munuswami Naidu v. Emperor, AIR 1928 Mad 783, Devadoss, J. ruled thus at page 783:

"Before a complaint under Section 476 is made, it is necessary that a Court which thinks that an offence mentioned in Sec. 195, sub-section (1), clause (b) or clause (c) has been committed should record a finding to that effect and after recording such finding may make a complaint....The provision is not merely directory, but it is mandatory, for an appeal lies against the order of the Court and under Section 476-B an appellate Court can either withdraw a complaint or direct a complaint to be made. That being so, it is necessary for the appellate Court to see what reasons the lower Court had for deciding to make a complaint under Section 476. It is not every case of perjury that should form the subject of an inquiry; but it is only when the interests of justice do require that a complaint should be made then and then only a complaint should be made. Though the Courts should be anxious to put down perjury as much as possible, it is not in the interests of justice that every false statement made by a witness in Court or in an affidavit filed in Court should be subject of a charge for perjury."

In Ramayya v. Emperor, AIR 1933 Mad 67 (1), a Division Bench of the Madras High Court ruled thus:

"The Code lays down so as to leave no room for any doubt that the Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made and therefore Courts will be well advised always to make a record to that effect if that is their opinion because most regrettable delays and waste of time sometimes arise by putting the superior Courts to the task of discovering whether they mean something which they have not written." In re, Pakhiriswami Pillai, AIR 1948 Mad 297, Yahya Ali, J., ordered the withdrawal of the complaint as there was no finding by the Magistrate that the prosecution was expedient in the interests of justice as the same is an incurable defect.

11. In Kailashpati Mishra v. Nand Lal Ahir, AIR 1952 Pat 70, Ahmed, J., while considering the scope of Section 476 Criminal P. C. at page 71, observed thus:

"The section, therefore, lays down two conditions for its operation. Firstly, a preliminary inquiry, if necessary, shall be held and secondly, that the Court shall record a finding to the effect stated in the section."

12. In Paramananda Mohapatra v. The State, AIR 1968 Orissa 144, the Orissa High Court has taken the same view. In Brijmohanlal v. Sohanraj, 1963 (1) CrL LJ 713 (Raj), the Rajasthan High Court held that the requirement of recording a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that a complaint be filed under Section 476, is mandatory and any failure to comply with that requirement deserves the order to be set aside.

13. The decision of Jaganmohan Reddy, J. (as he then was) in Sundaram Reddy v. Venkatasubba Naidu, 1958-2 Andh WR 480, does not render any assistance to the prosecution case in the present case. What the learned Judge had to consider in that case was whether or not preliminary enquiry was compulsory in each case. The learned Judge, at page 485, observed thus:

"What the Court has, therefore, to decide under this section is whether an offence of the kind contemplated under the section appears to have been committed and in the interests of justice it should further enquire into it. It is not always obligatory on the part of the Court to make a preliminary enquiry; but that would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case." Negating the contention of the counsel for the accused that the Sessions Judge failed to record his opinion that it was expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made, the learned Judge observed at page 484 thus:

"No doubt the Sessions Judge had not used the actual words of the section, namely that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made, but in my view there is no charm in this incantation where the Judge has used language which leaves no doubt that the prosecution was in the interests of justice. It is not a question of a mere inference alone."

14. The decisions of the Mysore High Court in Narajappa v. Chikkaramiah, AIR 1959 Mys 117 and of the Patna High Court in Rajeswar Singh v. Ram Bahadur Singh, 1965 (2) CrL LJ 837 (Pat), relied upon by the learned Public Prosecutor, do not advance his plea, as those cases are the authorities for the view expressed by this Court in 1958-2 Andh WR 480, that the preliminary enquiry was not compulsory, but the Court, in its discretion, may dispense with the holding of an enquiry if it thinks that it was unnecessary on a consideration of the facts and circumstances of any given case.

15. The decisions of the Madras High Court in AIR 1928 Mad 783, AIR 1933 Mad 67 (1) and AIR 1948 Mad 297, being before June, 1954, are binding on me (see Subbarayudu v. State of Andhra, ILR 1955 Andhra 1 = (AIR 1955 Andhra 87)). That apart, the language of Section 476 Criminal P. C. fully supports the view of the Madras High Court that it is incumbent on the Court to form an opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence and record a finding to that effect, and that the failure to conform with such a requirement warrants the quashing of the complaint as the defect is not a one which can be cured under Section 537 Criminal P. C. I am in entire agreement with the view expressed by the Madras High Court. I am unable to agree with the view expressed by Nigam, J., who spoke for a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in AIR 1962 All 251, that the jurisdiction of the Court to prefer a complaint does not depend upon the recording of the opinion and that the omission to record such an opinion is only an irregularity and does not affect the legality of the complaint.

16. From the aforesaid discussion, the following principles can safely be deduced:

(1) It is not every case of perjury irrespective of facts and circumstances that should form the subject of an enquiry but it is only in such cases where the Courts are of honest belief and opinion, on an objective consideration of the facts and circumstances that the interests of justice require the laying of a complaint.

(2) It is not mandatory but discretionary for the Court, depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case, either to conduct any preliminary enquiry or to dispense with the same, to form an opinion that it is in the interests of justice to prosecute the person or persons that committed perjury.

(3) The proceedings under Section 476 Criminal P. C. appealable under Sec. 476-B is an independent and altogether a different proceeding from that of the original Sessions case where the witnesses have committed the offence of perjury.

(4) The proceeding under Section 476 Criminal P. C. being penal in nature, it is not only desirable and reasonable, but just and proper and in accordance with the principles of natural justice to afford a reasonable opportunity by issuing a show cause notice to the accused party to establish by adducing evidence oral and documentary that it was not expedient in the interests of justice to prosecute him.

(5) On a plain reading of the provisions of Section 476, and in particular the words "such Court may...record a finding to that effect," there is no room for doubt that the Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made, as a condition precedent for filing a complaint.

(6) The provision in Section 476 relating to the recording of a finding is not merely directory but is mandatory, for, an appeal lies against the order of the Court; and under Section 476-B, that the appellate Court is competent either to withdraw the complaint already made or direct the complaint to be made, depending on the facts and circumstances of each case.

(7) The opinion or the satisfaction contemplated under Section 476 is an objective and not a subjective one and should be reflected in the finding recorded or the order passed by the Court and such an order must be a speaking one supported by valid and justifiable grounds to enable the appellate Court under Section 476-B to know the material on which the Court had come to such a conclusion or opinion that it was expedient in the interests of justice to launch a prosecution.

(8) Though the Court, while recording the finding contemplated under Section 476 Criminal P. C., need not strictly adhere to the very language, viz., "that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made," used in the section, it must use such language that it leaves no doubt that it was a fit and proper case and it was in the interests of justice to launch a prosecution against the person or persons that committed perjury.

(9) Even where the Presiding Officer, before whom the offence under Section 195 (1) (b) or (c) has been committed, himself prefers the complaint and forwards the same to the Magistrate, no presumption under Section 114 of the Evidence Act to the effect that he had formed an honest opinion, even though no such finding has been recorded, that it is expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence, can be made as, on a plain and grammatical reading of the language and scheme of Section 476, it is incumbent on the Court to give a specific finding before making a complaint.

(10) The omission or failure to record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice to enquire into the offence, is not a mere irregularity curable under Section 537 Criminal P. C. and it goes to the root of the matter as the Court will have no jurisdiction to file a complaint without recording such a finding.

17. Let me now turn to the facts of the present case and under the merit of the respective contentions of the counsel, applying the principle referred to above. Admittedly, the Assistant Sessions Judge, who tried S. C. No. 5 of 1965, did not record a finding in the Sessions case that the appellant herein had committed perjury and it was in the interests of justice to prosecute her. Not only that there was no finding to that effect in the Sessions case which ended in acquittal, but even a show cause notice as to why the appellant who committed perjury should not be proceeded against, was not issued before preferring the complaint before the Magistrate. It is true, as contended by the learned Public Prosecutor, that it was the same person who tried the Sessions case that filed the complaint before the Magistrate, but on that account alone, it cannot be held that he had formed in his mind an honest and bona fide opinion that it was just and proper to prosecute the appellant. As already expressed earlier, I feel it not just and proper to draw any inference or presumption under Section 114 of the Evidence Act that the Assistant Sessions Judge who tried the case being the same person that filed the complaint before the Magistrate, must be presumed to have come to such an honest conclusion that it was in the interests of justice to conduct an enquiry into the offence of perjury committed by the appellant before him. When there is no finding either in the original judgment or subsequently, it is very difficult to sustain the argument of the learned Public Prosecutor that the complaint in the present case is in order. Therefore, for all the reasons stated above, the proceedings in P. R. C. 1/68 on the file of the Judicial First Class Magistrate, Cuddapah that have arisen out of the complaint filed in the present case, must be held to be not according to law and procedure contemplated under Section 476 Criminal P. C. and must be quashed. It is no doubt open to the Court to proceed afresh and make any complaint, if it so thinks, after following the procedure indicated above.

18. In the result, the appeal is allowed, quashing the complaint filed on 19-1-1968 by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Cuddapah before the Judicial First Class Magistrate, Cuddapah.

Appeal allowed.

A. Gangadhararao and P. Sitaramaraju, for Petitioner; T. Venkatappa and 2nd Govt. Pleader, for Respondents (Nos. 1 and 2 respectively).

JUDGMENT: This is an application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India for the issue of a Writ of Certiorari to quash the order of the second respondent, Commissioner for Workmen Compensation, Andhra Pradesh, Hyderabad in W. C. Case No. 283 of 1966 dated 2-8-1967 overruling an objection as to the maintainability of the claim for compensation before him. The first respondent herein filed the application before the Commissioner for Workmen Compensation, Andhra Pradesh, under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, being the legal representative of the deceased workman employed under the petitioner. The petitioner herein raised an objection before the Commissioner questioning his jurisdiction to entertain the claim in view of Section 110 of the Motor Vehicles Act under which a Claims Tribunal (District Judge) was specially constituted to adjudicate upon all claims for compensation arising out of accidents involving motor vehicles. This objection was overruled by the Tribunal under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Against the said order, the petitioner has come up to this Court stating that the tribunal has no jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry.

2. The contention of the learned counsel is that the tribunal under the Motor Vehicles Act is constituted under a special enactment relating to accidents arising in connection with the motor vehicles and that therefore the jurisdiction of the tribunal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, which should be regarded as a general Act, is excluded. Section 110-F of the Motor Vehicles Act in express terms excludes only the jurisdiction of a civil Court with respect to any action taken or to be taken before the Claims Tribunal under the Motor Vehicles Act. The legislature is certainly aware of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act the tribunal constituted therein for adjudication of claims under the said Act. The provisions of Sec. 110-F, while expressly barring the jurisdiction of civil courts as such, do not contain any indication that the jurisdiction of any other tribunal is barred. Turning to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, the jurisdiction of a civil Court alone is barred with respect to adjudication of claims falling under the purview of the said Act. It is therefore a clear case where the provisions of each of the enactments operate independently of one another having concurrent jurisdiction to entertain claim or compensation. In such a case, the option lies with the workman to choose one or the other tribunal. It is of course undisputed that if the workman chooses a particular tribunal, it will not be open to him to choose the other tribunal under the Motor Vehicles Act. In the present case, the workman or the claimant having chosen the tribunal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, it is not open to the employer to ask him to choose a different tribunal, for, the choice lies with the claimant and not with the employer. The decision of the Punjab High Court in Ram Sarup v. Gurdev Singh, (1968) 1 Lab LJ 80 = (1969 Lab IC 371), directly supports the contention of the respondent that the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act do not exclude the jurisdiction of the tribunal under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The learned counsel for the petitioner placed reliance on a ruling of the Supreme Court reported in Damji v. Life Insurance Corporation of India, AIR 1966 SC 135, wherein it was held that when the jurisdiction of the tribunal under Section 41 of the Life Insurance Corporation Act, which is a special enactment, was invoked, the provisions under the Companies Act containing general provisions regarding winding up of companies, appointment of liquidators and bar of suits or other legal proceedings except with the leave of the Court, etc., are not applicable. In the said case, reference was made to Section 41 of the Life Insurance Corporation Act which provides that no civil Court shall have jurisdiction to entertain or adjudicate upon any matter which a tribunal is empowered to decide or determine under Section 15 of that Act. In view of the clear provisions of Section 41 of the Life Insurance Corporation Act barring the jurisdiction of Civil Courts, it was held by the Supreme Court that the jurisdiction of the Company Court was expressly excluded. I do not see how the petitioner can place any reliance upon this ruling. Though it was observed that the provisions of the Life Insurance Corporation Act were in the nature of a special enactment creating a special tribunal, reliance was placed on the provisions of Section 41 of the Life Insurance Corporation Act barring the jurisdiction of the Company Court to entertain identical matters. But in the instant case, Section 110-F of the Motor Vehicles Act, as already pointed out, does not bar the jurisdiction of any other tribunal to decide claims as to compensation.

3. It was next contended on behalf of the petitioner that if the claimant applies for compensation before the Tribunal under the Motor Vehicles Act, there is a provision for issuing notice to the insurer in which case, the employer can work out his rights against the insurer also in the same proceeding and that he would be deprived of such an opportunity if the claim for compensation is not made before the tribunal under the Motor Vehicles Act. In a case where there are two tribunals having concurrent jurisdiction, the claimant who is in the position of a plaintiff is the dominus litis and has the right to choose his own forum and he cannot be compelled to choose a forum which would be convenient to the defendant. Though the application for compensation is filed under the Motor Vehicles Act, the employer's remedy against the insurer under the contract of insurance is always available under the general law. I am not therefore inclined to accept this contention of the petitioner that the claimant should choose a particular forum which would be convenient to the opposite party.

4. For the above reasons, this writ petition fails and is dismissed with costs of the first respondent. Advocate's fee Rs. 100.

Petition dismissed.

N. Raja Pullaiah and others, Petitioners v. Dy. Commercial Tax Officer, Kurnool and another, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 619, 637, 729 and 732 of 1964, D/-4-2-1969.

Constitution of India, Article 226 — Illegal assessment — Writ against — Best judgment assessment smacking of arbitrariness — Held liable to be set aside — (Income Tax Act (1961), S. 144) — (Sales Tax — Madras General Sales Tax Act (9 of 1939), S. 9 (2) (b)).

Assessment of taxes to the best of judgment has to rest on some relevant dependable data and cannot be arbitrary. Where turnover of oil mill was assessed on basis of consumption of electricity and even that test was conducted not in that very mill but in other mills and the allowances for defects in mechanism, minor differences from rotary to rotary, quality of seeds and skill of the driver, were not made on actual proper checking or on reasonable calculative basis.

Held that the data relied upon by the assessing authorities smacked of arbitrariness and the best judgment assessment was liable to be set aside. (Para 4)

K. Venkataramaiah, for Petitioners (in all);
Prl. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

KUMARAYYA, J.: The common point for determination in all these writ petitions is whether the assessment made by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer on the best judgment basis smacks of arbitrariness so that the assessment orders may be quashed.

2. It would appear that in all these cases provisional assessments were made for the year 1962-63 and the assessed amounts were also paid. At the time of final assessment, the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer, on a perusal of the account books submitted before him, came to the conclusion that they were not in order and could not be safely acted upon. He gave his reasons therefor which, according to the respondents, are cogent and valid. The account-books being thus rejected, the only course left open to the taxing authority was to make assessment to the best of his judgment. Even this had to rest on some relevant dependable data and could not in law be arbitrary. The Deputy Commercial Tax Officer assessed the turnover on the basis of consumption of electricity. No test was conducted in that very mill to find out the rate of consumption of electricity for a definite quantity of seeds to be converted into oil. He rested his conclusion on the result of tests conducted in other mills. He determined the turnover on that basis and levied the tax thereon, of course, making allowances for defects in mechanism, minor differences from rotary to rotary, quality of seeds and skill of the driver. These allowances were not made on actual proper checking or on reasonable calculative basis. As the resultant turnover had inflated the tax figure enormously, the petitioners went up in appeal. Under the provisions then in force the appeals could be heard and disposed of only on payment of the assessed tax. As the assessee were unable to pay the same, their appeals were dismissed for non-payment of taxes. Hence they came to this Court invoking writ jurisdiction.

3. The main complaint of the petitioners is that the method adopted by the taxing officer cannot afford a sure or reasonable basis for determination of the turnover. The consumption of electricity by itself cannot form a reliable test for determining the yield of oil. The yield depends upon various factors viz., the quality of the seed, the condition of the machine, the skill of the driver, the soundness of electric equipment, etc. There may be several other disturbing factors which affect the net yield of oil. The consumption of electricity itself is affected by various factors. That apart, results of the tests carried on in other concerns or undertakings, which may not be similarly circumstanced for various reasons, cannot form a reasonable basis for determining the yield of the petitioners' concerns. It is on these grounds that the assessments have been brought into question.

4. To our mind there is force in the argument advanced by Mr. Venkataramayya, learned counsel for the petitioners. There is no strong or valid reason why the authority did not carry out the test in the rotaries of the petitioners themselves. The fact that the meter is inconveniently placed is no ground against carrying on the experiment. It is pointed out to us that in like cases the Tribunal itself had set aside the assessments in view of the wide disparity in electricity consumption from mill to mill for the required quantity of oil yield. Be that what it may, it is plain, knowing it for certain, that the turnover depends on various factors and circumstances peculiar to the rotaries concerned, the taxing authority rested their conclusions on the tests carried in other rotaries. The basis furnished by tests conducted in other undertakings cannot be of much relevance for the purpose of these mills about which it cannot be said that they are similarly circumstanced in all respects. As the data relied upon by the assessing authorities, which is made the basis of best judgment assessment, thus smacks of arbitrariness, the best judgment assessment is liable to be set aside.

5. The orders are therefore quashed. It is however, open to the authorities to proceed afresh in accordance with law.

6. In the result, these writ petitions are allowed. There will be no order as to costs.
Petitions allowed.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 246 and tries comprehend ancillary and subsidiary matters.

Entries in legislative lists should not be interpreted in a narrow and pedantic sense to comprehend ancillary and subsidiary matters. The power to enact incidental or ancillary legislation is included in the grant of a substantive power and follows without

(B) Constitution of India, Sch. VII, List I, Entry 97 and List II, Entry 49, Arts. 246, 248 — Tax on land — Gift of land — Gift of land is taxable under Gift Tax Act (1958), S. 15 (3) — Subject matter of gift tax falls under Entry 97, List I and not under Entry 49, List II. AIR 1962 Mys 269, Dissented from.

The object of Item 49, List II is the levy of a tax on the ownership of property as such, while gift tax is a tax on a particular use of the property or the exercise of a single power subsidiary to ownership. The owner of a property may put it to several uses. A gift inter vivos is one of the several rights a person may have in a property. This form of tax attaches itself to a transfer of property while the tax envisaged in Entry 49, is incidental to the ownership irrespective of any use to which it may be put. And the source of power to enact gift tax must be sought in Article 248 read with Item 97 of List I of the Constitution. Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to any subject or matter which is not expressly within the scope of the heads of power enumerated in the lists. The gift tax does not entrench upon the exclusive legislative power of the State legislature as indicated in Item 49 of List II. The manifest object of the Gift Tax Act and its pith and substance is not to tax lands or buildings as such but to impose tax on gifts inter vivos. The scope of the gift tax, therefore is referable to Article 248 read with Item 97. AIR 1962 Mys 269, Dissented; AIR 1962 Ker 97 and AIR 1963 Mad 419 and AIR 1965 Punj 65 and AIR 1967 All 19, Rel. on.

(C) Hindu Law — Joint family — Father merging his self-acquired property into joint family property — Such conversion amounts to transfer and diminution of rights of father and enlargement of rights of coparceners — AIR 1962 Mad 26 and 1967-66 ITR 169 (Mad) and 1967-65 ITR 19 (Mys), Dissented — Case law discussed.

(D) Gift Tax Act (1958), Ss. 2 (xxiv) (d), 4 (d) — Hindu father merging his self-acquired property into joint family property — His rights being diminished the transaction is gift.

By means of merging self-acquired property into joint family property a person is diminishing his rights to property and increasing the rights of others within the meaning of Section 2 (xxiv) (d) and therefore the shares obtained by others in merged property fall within the meaning of the gift as defined in Section 2 (xii) and Section 4 (d) of the Act.

(E) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 123 — Registration Act (1908), S. 17 — Hindu father merging self-acquired property into joint family property — No formal registered instrument necessary — (Hindu Law — Self-acquired property — Merger of, into joint family property — No registered instrument necessary).

There is no provision under the Hindu Law that the conversion of separate property into joint family property required a formal registered instrument. All that is required is that there should be a clear intention on the part of the member of the joint family to waive his separate rights in the properties in question and to impress them with the character of joint family properties.

(F) Gift Tax Act (1958), Ss. 2 (xxviii), 2 (xii), 2 (xxiv) and 4 (d) — "Person" — Definition is inclusive one — Coparceners taking share in self-acquired property of another coparcener which was merged in joint family property — Transfer in this case is to 'person' within definition of Gifts Tax Act.

(G) Gift Tax Act (1958), S. 2 (xxiv) (d) — "Transaction" — Conversion of self-acquired property into joint family property — Conversion is "transaction".

The conversion of self-acquired property of the father into the joint family property means the abridgment of the father's absolute rights therein and the transference of right in the property. Such a process would fall within the normal meaning of the expression 'transaction'. (1949) 78 CLR 199 (Australia), Dist.; AIR 1968 Ker 190, Ref.

(Para 26)

(H) Gift Tax Act (1958), Ss. 29, 31 and 3 — Gift tax not recovered from donor — Recovery from donees — Notice of demand — Essentials.

Sec. 29 contemplates that normally the gift tax is payable by the donor. That is what the charging section — S. 3 — provides for. But where in the opinion of the Gift Tax Officer, the tax could not be recovered from the donor, who has died, it may be recovered from the donee. It also indicates that in such a situation if there are more donees than one, they are liable jointly and severally for the amount of the tax and further it is provided that the amount of tax due from donee shall not exceed the value of the gift made to him as on the date of the gift. The recourse to the donees can be had only when the Gift Tax Officer is of opinion that the tax cannot be recovered from the donor. In coming to that opinion the Gift Tax Officer must not act arbitrarily. He should apply his mind to all the relevant circumstances of the case to find out whether he can collect the money from the donor or not and only on coming to a conclusion that the money cannot be recovered from the donor, can he start the proceedings for recovery of the tax against the donees. (Held that the demand under Section 31 issued to donees was in conformity with S. 29).

(Para 29)

(I) Gift Tax Act (1958), S. 30 — Priority of Government in respect of arrears of tax — Government can proceed against immoveable properties gifted.

The Government has a priority in respect of arrears of tax. The English common law doctrine of the priority of Crown debts has been given judicial recognition in India prior to 1950 and by virtue of Article 372 (1) of the Constitution, that doctrine continues to be in force. In seeking therefore, to realise the arrears of tax from the immoveable property comprised in the gift, the department is proceeding well within its rights. Gift tax is the first charge on the property gifted.

(Para 32)

(J) Gift Tax Act (1958), Section 2 (iii) — “Assessee” — Definition is wide enough to include every person who is deemed to be a donee.

(Para 35)

(K) Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (f) — Gift Tax Act (1958), Ss. 22, 23, 24, 26, 29 — Notice to donees to pay gift tax — Remedies available to contest the notice — Appeal is a creature of statute — Absence of provision of appeal do not make proceedings invalid — Section 29 does not contravene Article 19 (1) (f). AIR 1963 Cal 127 Dissented from.

By reason of the notice of demand issued under Section 31 read with Section 29 of the Act, the assessors are entitled to take advantage of the remedies prescribed under the Act. Under Section 22 (b) of the Act any person objecting to the amount of gift tax determined as payable by him under the Act has a right of appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner from the orders of the Gift Tax Officer. He has a further right of appeal to the appellate tribunal under Section 23. There is also the right of applying to the Commissioner under Section 24 for revising the orders of his subordinates. Eventually, there is also a right to ask for a reference to the High Court under Section 26 of the Act. Further, the absence of a provision for an appeal does not by itself constitute an infringement of property rights. An appeal does not rest upon an inherent right; but it is the creature of a statute. (1913) ILR 40 Cal 21 (PC) and AIR 1959 SC 213, Rel. on.

Therefore even on the assumption that there is no right of appeal expressly provided for donee called upon to pay the tax, that circumstance by itself will not invalidate Section 29. AIR 1963 Cal 127, Dissented from.

Y. G. Krishna Murthy, for Petitioners; T. Anantababu, Standing Counsel for the Income Tax Department, for Respondent.

SESHACHALAPATI J.: This is a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India for the issue of a writ of certiorari or any other appropriate writ or order to quash the notice dated 30-11-1962 issued to the petitioners by the respondent, the Additional Gift Tax Officer, Guntur. The Petitioners 1, 2, 5 and 6 are the sons and Petitioners 3 and 4, the daughters of late G. V. Srinivasarao, who was a leading Advocate in Guntur. Sri Srinivasa Rao acquired considerable properties. On 4-3-1958 Sri Srinivasa Rao gifted certain properties to his daughters, Petitioners 3 and 4 of the value of Rs. 10,000. By an affidavit dated 26-3-1958, he declared his intention to treat his self-acquired properties referred to in the affidavit as properties belonging to the family consisting of himself and his four sons. On 27-3-1958, he effected a partition of the said properties between himself and his sons by a registered instrument.

2. On information received of certain dispositions by late Srinivasarao the gift tax officer having appropriate jurisdiction, issued a notice under Section 13 (2) of the Gift Tax Act to late Srinivasa Rao to furnish a return for the assessment year 1959-60. With respect to that notice late Srinivasa Rao filed a return declaring only the gifts made by him to his daughters on 4-3-1958 and cash gift to his purohit. The properties referred to in the affidavit dated 26-3-1958 of late Srinivasa Rao were claimed as joint family properties which were already partitioned and therefore not liable for the gift tax.

3. Sri Srinivasa Rao died on 9-1-1962. On 31-10-1962 the First Addl. Gift Tax Officer, Guntur passed an order under Section 15 (3) of the Act holding that the properties gifted by Srinivasa Rao to his daughters and Purohit on 4-3-1958 and the self-acquisitions converted into joint family properties on 26-3-1958 and partitioned on 27-3-1958 less the 1/5 the share of Srinivasa Rao were liable to the payments of Gift Tax. He determined that the total value of the gifts were in the order of Rs. 2,16,915 and directed the payment of Rs. 15,629.50 ps. as tax.

4. It would appear that the demand notice was served on the 2nd petitioner Sri Brahmanandaraao on 11-11-1962 who signed the acknowledgment for G. V. Srinivasa Rao. By a letter dated 19-11-1962, Mr. Brahmanandaraao informed the respondent that his father had died on 9-1-1962 and that he had made certain dispositions of properties that fell to his share in partition and therefore fresh demand may be made on the parties regarding the gift tax. The respondent thereupon raised a fresh demand on the donees on 30-11-1962. On 6-12-1962, the 1st petitioner Sri G. V. Krishnarao informed the respondent that an appeal was being preferred to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under Section 22 of the Gift Tax Act and that therefore the collection of the tax may be kept in abeyance till the disposal of the appeal. Similar letters were filed by the Petitioners 2, 4 and 6. On 29-12-1962, Sri G. V. Chelapatirao, the 5th petitioner, wrote to the respondent to let him know how much portion of the gift tax he had to pay on his share and suggesting that the gift tax payable may be divided between all the parties concerned and demands made and that he would pay his portion of the tax before 15-2-1963. On 9-1-1963, the respondent issued notices to the petitioners and the Purohit after discussing the matter with their Chartered Accountant apportioning the tax payable between the parties and calling upon them to pay the proportionate tax on or before 10-2-1963. This writ petition was filed on 7-1-1963 and was admitted on 9-1-1963. In C. M. P. No. 235 of 1963 interim stay was directed against the operation of the notice dated 30-11-1962.

5. In the course of a full and able argument, Mr. Y. G. Krishnamurthy, the learned counsel for the petitioners has raised several contentions. The first contention is that the Gift Tax Act so far as it deals with taxes on lands and buildings falls within the scope of item 49 of State List (List II) to Schedule VII to the Constitution and that Parliament has no legislative competence to enact a law providing for the taxation of gifts on lands and buildings. In support of this contention, reliance was placed on the decision of the Mysore High Court, In D. H. Nazareth v. 2nd Gift Tax Officer, 1962-45 ITR 194=(AIR 1962 Mys 269). In that case the learned Judges held that the power conferred on the State Legislature by entry 49 of list II of the VIIth schedule to the Constitution to make laws with respect to taxes on lands and buildings includes the power to tax gifts of lands and buildings and therefore within the exclusive power of the State Legislature. The Gift Tax Act, 1958 in so far as it purports to provide for taxes on lands and buildings was held to be ultra vires the powers of Parliament. The learned Judges in the above case proceeded on the footing that an entry in the lists to the VIIth Schedule to the Constitution should be given its widest possible amplitude and that the aforesaid principle refers not only to the general items but also to entries relating to taxation. It was observed that the residuary entry 97 in list I should not ordinarily be invoked and should be invoked only as a last resort and that the power to tax property necessarily includes the power to tax a right or incidence of ownership.

6. It is a well-settled principle that the entries in the legislative lists should not be interpreted in a narrow and pedantic sense and that the language of the entries must be held to comprehend ancillary and subsidiary matters. The power to enact incidental or ancillary legislation is included in the grant of a substantive power and follows without express provision therefor. (vide Attorney General of Ontario v. Attorney General for Dominion of Canada, 1894 AC 189 and Small v. Smith, (1884) 10 AC 119 at p. 129). Even construing the entries liberally it cannot be said that the tax on gifts is comprehended by entry 49 of the State list. In Sesharatnam v. Gift Tax Officer, 1960 (1) Andh WR 153=(AIR 1960 Andh Pra 115), a Bench of this Court consisting of Chandra Reddy, Chief Justice and Ansari, J., after a close and detailed examination of the relevant heads of enumerated powers in the lists in the context of decided cases observed thus:—

"We find it difficult to import transfer and alienation of agricultural land into 'lands' in entry 49. The latter item concerns itself with an altogether different head of litigation that is tax on the ownership of property. The object of this item is the levy of a tax on the ownership of property as such while gift tax is a tax on a particular use of the property or the exercise of a single power subsidiary to ownership. The owner of a property may put it to several uses. A gift inter vivos is one of the several rights a person may have in a property. This form of tax attaches itself to a transfer of property while the tax envisaged in entry 49 is incidental to the ownership irrespective of any use to which it may be put."

We are in respectful agreement with this view.

7. If, therefore, the Gift Tax is not comprehended within the scope and ambit of item 49 of List II of the VII Schedule to the Constitution, the source of power must be sought in Article 248 read with item 97 of List I of the Constitution. In this connection, it is necessary to bear in mind the following observations of Venkatarama Ayyar, J. speaking for the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in Sundaramier and Co. v. State of Andhra Pradesh, 1958 SCJ 459 at p. 488. = (AIR 1958 SC 468 at p. 494):

"The above analysis—and it is not exhaustive of the Entries in the lists — leads to the inference that taxation is not intended to be comprised in the main subject in which it might on an extended construction be regarded as included but is treated as a distinct matter for purposes of legislative competence. And this distinction is also manifest in the language of Article 248 Clauses (1) and (2) and of Entry 97 in List I of the Constitution.

Article 248 is in these terms:

"248 (1):— Parliament has exclusive power to make any law with respect to any matter not enumerated in the concurrent list or State list.

(2) Such power shall include the power of making any law imposing a tax not mentioned in either of those lists."

Item 97 is in these terms:—

"Any other matter not enumerated in List II or List III including any tax not mentioned in either of those lists."

8. Having regard to the pattern of the Indian Constitution it requires, no demonstration that Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to any subject or matter which is not expressly within the scope of the heads of power enumerated in the lists. We are of opinion that the gift tax does not entrench upon the exclusive legislative power of the State Legislature as indicated in item 49 of list II. The manifest object of the Gift Tax Act and its pith and substance is not to tax lands or buildings as such but to impose tax on gifts inter vivos. The scope of the gift tax, therefore is referable to Article 248 read with item 97.

9. In M. T. Joseph v. Gift Tax Officer, 1962-45 ITR 66=(AIR 1962 Ker 97) a Bench of the Kerala High Court has held that inasmuch as the levy of tax on gifts of agricultural lands is not expressly provided for either in the State List or in the Concurrent lists, the Act necessarily falls under and is referable to the residuary power vested in Parliament under clause (2) of Article 248 read with item 97 of the Union list. In Dandapani v. Additional Gift Tax Officer, Cuddalore, 1963-2 Mad LJ 192=(AIR 1963 Mad 419), the Madras High Court has taken a similar view that the Gift Tax Act falls within the legislative competence of Parliament under item 97 of List I read with Article 248(1) of the Constitution. To the same effect are the conclusions of the Punjab High Court in Mst. Gaindi v. Union of India, (1964) 54 ITR 632=(AIR 1965 Punj 65). In Shamsunder Choudhari v. Gift Tax Officer Allahabad, (1967) 66 ITR 74=(AIR 1967 All 19) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court has also taken the same view.

10. In the light of such preponderance of judicial authority we are unable with respect, to follow the decision of the Mysore High Court so strenuously pressed upon our attention by Mr. Krishna Murthy. We hold that the objection as to legislative competence of Parliament for enacting the Gift Tax Act is not correct and must be rejected.

11. The next contention strenuously pressed upon us by the petitioner's learned counsel is that the properties obtained by the petitioners 1, 2, 5 and 6 are not gifts within the meaning of Section 2 (xii) of the Gift Tax Act as there is no transfer of property within the meaning of Section 2 (xxiv). The word 'Gift' is defined as follows:—

"gift" means the transfer by one person to another of any existing moveable or immoveable property made voluntarily and without consideration in money or money's worth, and includes the transfer of any property deemed to be gift under Section 4. The word 'transfer' of property is defined as follows —

"Transfer of property" means any disposition, conveyance, assignment, settlement, delivery, payment or other alienation of property and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing includes—

(a) the creation of a trust in property;
(b) the grant or creation of any lease, mortgage charge, easement, licence, power, partnership or interest in property;

(c) The exercise of a power of appointment of property vested in any person, not the owner of the property to determine its disposition in favour of any person other than the donee of the power;

(d) any transaction entered into by any person with intent thereby to diminish directly or indirectly the value of his own property and to increase the value of the property of any other person;"

12. The learned counsel has contended that these provisions should be construed in the context of the relevant principles of Hindu Law and he has relied on a passage in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Bagyalakshmi and Co., Udamalpet, 1965-55 ITR 660 = (AIR 1965 SC 1708) where Subba Rao J. (as he then was) observed:

"Except where there is a specific provision of the Income Tax Act which derogates from any other statutory law or personal law, the provision will have to be considered in the light of the relevant branches of law."

13. We are of opinion that the Gift Tax Act is a self-contained enactment and the definitions of gift and transfer of property are exhaustive in their scope and the two statutory definitions have to be construed strictly without importing any conceptions not strictly derivable from the expressions employed.

14. The learned counsel has however strongly pressed upon our attention a decision of the Madras High Court in M. K. Stremann v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras, (1961) 41 ITR 297 at page 310 = (AIR 1962 Mad 26 at p. 30). In that case a question arose as to whether, when a father merged the self-acquisitions with his ancestral property and effected a partition, there was a transfer of assets within the meaning of Section 16 (3) (a) (iv) of the Income Tax Act. The learned Judges held that neither in the merger of the self-acquired properties nor in the subsequent partition was there any transfer of assets direct or indirect within the meaning of Section 16 (3) (a) (iv). The following passage in the judgment of the learned Judges may be usefully extracted:—

"Severance in status with the resulting change in the nature of the ownership of the property is one of the incidents of a coparcenary. The property held by the coparcenary vests in the separated members as tenants-in-common after the severance in status. That result can be brought about by the unilateral exercise of the volition of the separating member or members of the family. At that point of time the property which had up to then been impressed with the character of joint family or coparcenary property, becomes impressed with the character of property held in severalty by the tenants-in-common. The change does not itself constitute a transfer. Nor even does it result from any transfer of assets.

Similarly when the separate property of a coparcener ceases to be his separate property and becomes impressed with the character of coparcenary property there is no transfer of that property from the coparcener to the coparcenary. It becomes joint family property because the coparcener, who owned it up to then as his separate property, has by the exercise of his volition impressed it with the character of joint family or coparcenary property, to be held by him thereafter along with the other members of the joint family. It is by his unilateral action that the property has become joint family property.

Coparcenary property ceasing to be joint family property of the coparceners on a division in status between them and becoming thereafter the property held in severalty by the divided members, and the property of a coparcener ceasing to be his and becoming the property of the coparcenary of which he continues to be a member, are both incidents of a coparcenary governed by the Mitakshara School. Either can be brought about by the Unilateral action of the coparcener concerned. Neither transaction amounts to a transfer of property from one juristic entity to another. A transfer is essentially a contract, a bilateral transaction. The transaction by which a property ceases to be the property of a coparcener and becomes impressed with the character of coparcenary property does not itself amount to a transfer. No transfer need precede the change. No transfer ensues either".

15. So far as the partition of the joint family property is concerned, it is clear that there is no transfer as such. In a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School so long as it remains joint and undivided, there is joint ownership and no particular member of the family can predicate that he has any definite or ascertained share. When there is a partition between members of such family, there is a severance in status accompanied by a definition and ascertainment of shares of the respective members. The word "Vibhaga" which is used in the Mitakshara and which is generally translated as partition, is nothing more than the adjustment of diverse rights regarding the whole, by distributing them in particular portions of the aggregate. In Mst. Girja Bai v. Sadasiv Dhundiraj, 43 Ind App 151 at p. 159 = (AIR 1916 PC 104 at p. 107), the Privy Council cited with approval Sarkar's translation of a passage in Viromitrodaya to the effect that "for partition is made of that in which proprietary right has already arisen, consequently partition cannot properly be set forth as a means of proprietary right. Indeed what is effected by partition is only the adjustment of the proprietary right into specific shares". When a member of a family obtains on partition property in which he had already a proprietary right it cannot be said that there is a transfer. With respect we agree with the learned Judges of the Madras High Court that partition as such does not involve a transfer of any property or right to or interest therein.

16. In this case, however, it must be remembered that a day prior to the partition, Srinivasarao had declared his intention to convert the self-acquired property into joint family property by means of an affidavit in these terms :

I, Govindaraju Venkata Srinivasa Rao, son of Venkata Krishnarya Garu, Brahmin Aged 84 years, retired Advocate, resident of Arundalpet Guntur do hereby solemnly affirm and state as follows :

1. The properties I now own and possess are (a) my dwelling house known as Dattatreya vilas, situated in 4th line, Arundalpet Guntur, (b) 24 terraced shop rooms in Srinivasa Buildings situated between 2nd and 3rd road lines, Arundalpet Guntur, (c) Ac 14-72 Cents of Seri Wet land in Zampani Village, Tenali Taluk (d) Rs. 7,505 cash.

2. All these properties are my self-acquisitions.

3. In view of the facts that I am an old man aged 84 years and that my 4 sons are all elderly persons each having a number of children, I have decided to treat the properties mentioned in Para. 1 above as properties belonging to the joint family consisting of myself and my four sons, and am accordingly treating them as joint family properties from this moment onwards.

4. In exercise of my inherent right to do so, I hereby declare that my properties mentioned in Para. 1 above are the joint family properties of myself and my sons.

The question is whether in converting admittedly the self-acquired properties into joint family properties there is not a transfer and therefore a gift within the meaning of the relevant definitions of the Gift Tax Act. Mr. Krishnamurthy contended that, when a father governed by the Mitakshara converts his self-acquired property into joint family property of himself and his sons, there is no transfer as the sons have a right by birth in their father's self-acquired property. It is true that the son's interest even in their father's self-acquired property is 'Aprathibandhadaya' but whether or not the conversion of self-acquired property into joint family property amounts to a transfer of right to property will have to be viewed in the context of the father's powers in relation to his self-acquired properties.

17. In Viravan Chettiar v. Srinivasa Chariar, ILR 44 Mad 499 = (AIR 1921 Mad 168) (FB) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, dissenting from the decision in Mana Tawker v. Ramchandra Tawker, (1909) ILR 32 Mad 377, held that an undivided Hindu son acquires the self-acquired properties of his deceased father by inheritance and not by survivorship. Kumaraswami Sastri, J. observed thus :

"It is difficult to see how there can be any coparcenary between the father and the sons as regards self-acquired property over which the sons have no legal claim or enforceable rights. Coparcenary and survivorship imply the existence of co-ownership and of rights of partition enforceable at law, and a mere moral injunction can hardly be the foundation of a legal right. As observed by the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, (1888) ILR 10 All 272 (PC), the property in the paternal or ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara law is so connected with a right to partition that it does not exist where there is no right to it. A contention was raised during the course of the argument before the Privy Council in Raja Chelikani Venkataramanayamma v. R. C. Venkayamma Garu, (1902) 12 Mad LJ 299 (PC), that sons acquire a right by birth in the father's self-acquired property. Lord MacNaghten stated that he did not quite understand what that right was and observed :

"He is his father's son, and if his father does not dispose of it, it will come to him but is it anything more than a spes?" So far as a father's self-acquisitions are concerned the son, though undivided has only a spes successionis and he stands in relation to that property in the same position as an heir under Hindu law. The very essence of the distinction between apratibandha and sapatibandhadaya is the existence of an interest in the son in respect of properties got by his father".

18. Though the son of a Hindu father governed by the Mitakshara School may have a right by birth even in the self-acquired properties of the father, it is settled law that that right such as it is, is subject to the plenary control and power of the father. In Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori, (1898) ILR 20 All 267 (PC), the Privy Council, after a close examination of the relevant passages in the Mitakshara which obviously were inconsistent with one another, held that a father governed by the Mitakshara School, even though he is a member of an undivided family, can exercise full power of disposition, at his own discretion of the properties which he has himself acquired as distinguished from ancestral properties. In Arunachala Mudaliar v. Muruganatha Mudaliar, 1953 SCJ 707 =

(AIR 1953 SC 495), the Supreme Court referred to the two contradictory passages in the Mitakshara. Placitum 27, Chapter I Section 1 of Mitakshara would seem to suggest that, though a person has himself acquired immovable or other properties, he cannot make a gift or sell them without convening all the sons, as it is the religious duty of a man not to leave his family without means of support. Their Lordships observed that quite at variance with this precept suggesting a limited right of the father in respect of disposition of his self-acquired property, there were other texts in the commentary which deny any right of interference by the sons with the father's power of alienation over his self-acquired property. Summing up the position, their Lordships observed thus:

"Clearly the latter passages are in flat contradiction with the previous ones and in an early Calcutta case, Muddun Gopal v. Ram Buksh, (1863) 6 Suth WR 71, a reconciliation was attempted at by taking the view that the right of the sons in the self-acquired property of their father was an imperfect right incapable of being enforced at law. The question came pointedly for consideration before the Judicial Committee in the case of (1898) ILR 20 All 267 (PC) and Lord Hobhouse, who delivered the judgment of the Board, observed in course of his judgment that in the text-books and commentaries on Hindu Law, religious and moral considerations are often mingled with rules of positive law. It was held that the passages in Chapter I, Section 1, Verse 27 of Mitakshara contained only moral or religious precepts while those in Section 5 Verses 9 and 10 embodied rules of positive law. The latter consequently would override the former. It was held, therefore, that the father of a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara law has full and uncontrolled powers of disposition over his self-acquired immovable property and his male issue could not interfere with these rights in any way. This statement of the law has never been challenged since then and it has been held by the various High Courts in India, and in our opinion, rightly, that Mitakshara father is not only competent to sell his self-acquired immovable property to a stranger without the concurrence of his sons, but he can make a gift of such property to one of his own sons to the detriment of another; and he can make even an unequal distribution amongst his heirs."

From these authorities, it is clear that the father has a plenary dominion over his self-acquired properties. He can dispose of them by transfers inter vivos, such as sale or gift, or he can dispose them of by testamentary devise. His powers are, therefore, unrestricted. The sons have no power to intervene in the full enjoyment of the father in his self-acquired properties or seek the interdiction of his dispositions thereof. It follows therefore, that the sons have no right in praesenti in the self-acquired properties of their father though, on his death intestate the properties may devolve upon them as unobstructed heritage.

18-A. It is in the context of the aforesaid legal position that the conversion of the self-acquired property into joint family property has to be viewed. It cannot be said that in such a process a transfer of right is not involved. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the view of the Madras High Court in M. K. Stremann v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras, (1961) 41 ITR 297 = (AIR 1962 Mad 26), that there is no element of transfer in the merging of the self-acquired property with the joint family property. Nor are we able to agree with the reasoning of the Madras High Court in M. P. K. Kandaswami Chettiar v. Commissioner of Agricultural Income Tax, (1967) 66 ITR 169 (Mad). It must be remembered that these cases arose under Income-tax Act as to whether or not a merger of the self-acquired property with joint family property and a subsequent partition thereof would attract the provisions of Section 16 (3) (a) (iv). In those decisions, the question was whether a partition of the joint family properties came within the scope of Section 16 (3) (a) (iv). The effect of conversion of self-acquired property into joint family property did not directly fall to be decided, though that question was also dealt with. Further in the Income Tax Act there are no provisions analogous to Section 2 (xii) or 2 (xxiv) or Section 4 (d) with which we are concerned in this case. Even so, the High Court of Gujarat in Keshavlal Lallubhai v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Gujarat, (1962) 44 ITR 266 = (AIR 1962 Guj 6), held as follows:

"We are inclined to accept the view urged before us by the learned Advocate General that by reason of operation of law a transfer of property takes place when a member of a joint family throws his separate property into the hotchpot of the joint family. The real question which we have to consider is whether there has been a transfer of assets directly or indirectly by the assessee to his wife and minor son. The assessee, while throwing the property into the hotchpot, has effected a change of ownership of the property. The same may be said to be transferred from the assessee, the individual, to the Hindu Undivided family."

The decision of the Madras High Court in (1961) 41 ITR 297 = (AIR 1962 Mad 26) and the decision of the Gujarat High Court in (1962) 44 ITR 266 = (AIR 1962 Guj 6), were taken in appeal to the Supreme Court (vide Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras v. M. K. Stremann, (1965) 56 ITR 62 = (AIR 1965 SC 1494) and Commissioner of Income Tax, Gujarat v. Keshavlal Lallubhai Patel (1965) 55 ITR 637 = (AIR 1965 SC 866)). Their Lordships of the Supreme Court affirmed the decisions of the two High Courts. In (1965) 55 ITR 637 = (AIR 1965 SC 866), Sikri J., speaking for the Court observed:

"There is some difference of opinion whether act of throwing self-acquired property into the hotchpot is a transfer or not. We need not settle this controversy in this case. Let us assume that it is. But is a partition of Joint Hindu family property a transfer in the strict sense? We are of the opinion that it is not".

The aforesaid decisions do not lend support to the contention of Mr. Krishna Murthy that, when a father converts his self-acquired property into the joint family property, there is no element of transfer. We are of opinion that, in the process of converting the self-acquired property into joint family property, there is an element of transfer of rights to property. It also involves the diminution of the father's right and the conferment and enlargement of rights to others.

19. Mr. T. Anantababu, the learned counsel for the department has cited before us a decision of this Court in Commissioner of Gifts Tax Andhra Pradesh, Hyderabad v. Satyanarayana Murthy, (1965) 1 Andh WR 69 = (AIR 1965 Andh Pra 95). The facts in that case are almost identical with the facts of the present case. In that case a leading lawyer of Nellore who acquired properties, made a declaration on 1st of May 1957, of his intention to convert all the properties owned by him into joint family properties to be held by him and by his five undivided sons, each of them having 1/6th share. The question arose whether the declaration by the father converting his self-acquired properties into joint family properties amounted to a transfer so as to attract the provisions of the Gift Tax Act. On a close scrutiny of the authorities bearing on the question Chandra Reddy, Chief Justice, held that such a transaction would fall within the ambit of clause (d) of Section 2 (xxiv). The learned Chief Justice observed thus:

"This definition is of wider import than that contained in the Transfer of Property Act. The only requirement of this clause is that, the transaction which seeks to accomplish certain results should have the effect of diminishing directly or indirectly the value of his own property and to enhance the value of the property of any other person. Incontestably, by the declaration made by Sri Malakondaiah, by the conversion of his self-acquired properties into joint family properties there was a decrease in the value of the property of Shri Malakondaiah and it enhanced the value of the property of the joint family. That joint Hindu family answers the description of any other person is seen by clause (xviii) of Section 2 which says that a person includes a Hindu undivided family or a company or an association or a body of individuals or persons whether incorporated or not. Since the conversion in this case has the effect of diminishing the value of the declarant's property and raising the value of the property of joint Hindu family, it falls within the purview of cl. (d). The transfer contemplated by this clause is a transfer as a result of which the income accrues to the joint family from the properties, the subject-matter of the declaration. There can be little doubt that by this transaction the owner of the property has divested himself of it and vested it completely in the joint Hindu family. He has thus effected a change of ownership of the property. If it is a transfer of property within the terms of clause (xxiv) (d) it is a gift as envisaged in clause (xii) and Section 4 (a)."

(4 (a) is presumably a misprint for 4 (d).)

20. This case directly deals with the question we have to determine and we are in respectful agreement with the conclusion of the Chief Justice.

21. A decision of the Mysore High Court in Smt. Laxmibai Narayana Rao v. Commissioner of Gift Tax, (1967) 65 ITR 19 (Mys), has been relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioners where the learned Judges took the view that even where a father blends his self-acquired property with joint family properties, it would be an act of 'pitru prasada' and that there was no creation of any new right in the son or transference of a new right by the father to the son. The learned Judges dissented from the view of this High Court in 1965-1 Andh WR 69 = (AIR 1965 Andh Pra 95). With great respect, we are unable to agree with the view of the Mysore High Court in the decision aforesaid.

22. We are, therefore, of opinion that by means of his declaration contained in the affidavit dated 26-3-1958 late Srinivasa Rao was diminishing his rights to property and increasing the rights of others within the meaning of Section 2 (xxiv) (d) and therefore would fall within the meaning of the gift as defined in Section 2 (xii) and Section 4 (d) of the Act.

23. It is then contended that even though the conversion of self-acquired property into joint family property is a transfer within the meaning of Section 2 (xxiv) (d) and Section 4 (d) inasmuch as there is no instrument duly stamped and registered it is not a valid gift in law. Section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act requires that for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested, by at least two witnesses. There is no such limitation or condition imposed upon the gift as defined in Section 2 (xii) or 2 (xxiv) of the Gift Tax Act. In construing the terms of 'gift' and 'transfer' one should look into the provisions of this Act only. There is no warrant for the importation of considerations arising from the definition of gift or transfer in the Transfer of Property Act. The definitions of gift and transfer in the Gift Tax Act, are exhaustive and it is those terms that we should look into.

24. In this connection we may observe that there is no provision under the Hindu law that the conversion of separate property into joint family property requires a formal registered instrument. All that is required is that there should be a clear intention on the part of the member of the joint family to waive his separate rights in the properties in question and to impress them with the character of joint family properties.

25. It is next contended that the transfer in the instant case is not to a person referred to in Sections 2 (xii), 2 (xxiv) and 4 (d). We are unable to assent to this contention. The word 'person' is defined in clause (xviii) of Section 2 as follows:

"'Person' includes a Hindu undivided family or a company or an association or a body of individuals or persons whether incorporated or not."

The definition is an inclusive one and will certainly take in the transferees in the instant case.

26. It is contended that where a coparcener of a Hindu joint family converts his self-acquisitions into joint family property he does not enter into any transaction within the meaning of Section 2 (xxiv) (d). The argument is that the expression any transaction entered into postulates a bilateral act and inasmuch as the conversion of self-acquired property into joint family property is wholly a unilateral act, such a conversion would not be a transaction. In support of this contention, reference has been made to a decision of the Kerala High Court in P. K. Subrahmanya Iyer v. Commissioner of Gift Tax, Kerala, (1968) 67 ITR (SN) 36 = (AIR 1968 Ker 190) and to Grimwade v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation, (1949) 78 CTR 199. The word "transaction" is not used either in Section 2 (xii) or Section 4 (d). The word 'transaction' must be given its ordinary grammatical meaning. In the Oxford Dictionary Volume XI at page 251, 'transaction' is defined as meaning 'the action of passing or making over a thing from one person to another, transference, and the action of dealing with or handling a subject; treatment.' The conversion of self-acquired property of the father into the joint family property means the abridgment of the father's absolute rights therein and the transference of right in the property to sons who had no such right in praesenti. In our opinion, such a process would fall within the normal meaning of the expression 'transaction'. The Australian case referred to above is not of much assistance as the question there was whether, on the facts of that case, there was an intention on the part of the so-called donor, to dispose of his property by gifts. It was held, that as the formation of a holding company though amounting to a transaction on the part of the donor had no connection between the donor and the donee or any of the donees, it was held to be not a gift within the meaning of Section 4 (f) of the Gift Duty Assessment Act, 1941-42.

27. The next contention of the learned counsel is that, in any event, the petitioners are not the persons liable to pay the gift tax within the meaning of Section 31 of the Act and that they were not given any notice of such proceedings before raising the demand. It is contended that the demand now made on the donees is not in conformity with Section 29 of the Act. It is also contended that Section 29 of the Act in so far as it authorises the recovery of the gift tax from the donee, is violative of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution and therefore unconstitutional. Sections 29 and 31 are as follows:

"29. Gift tax by whom payable: Subject to the provisions of this Act, gift tax shall be payable by the donor. But when in the opinion of the Gift Tax Officer the tax cannot be recovered from the donor, it may be recovered from the donee:

Provided that where the donees are more than one, they shall be jointly and severally liable for the amount of tax determined to be payable by the donor:

Provided further that the amount of tax which may be recovered from each donee shall not exceed the value of the gift made to him as on the date of the gift."

"31. Notice of demand: When any tax, interest, penalty, fine or any other sum is payable in consequence of any order passed under this Act, the Gift Tax Officer shall serve upon the assessee a notice of demand in the prescribed form specifying the sum so payable."

28. In this case, originally G. V. Srinivasa Rao filed a return of gift on 7-7-1959 declaring his gifts valued at only Rs. 11,225. During the course of the enquiry a claim was made that the transfer of his property to the Hindu undivided family did not amount to a gift. At the enquiry the assessee was represented by a Chartered Accountant and the respondent completed the assessment on 31-10-1962. A sum of Rs. 15,629-80 P. was directed to be payable as tax before 5-12-1962. The demand notice was acknowledged by the second petitioner, Brahmananda Rao, who signed for G. V. Srinivasa Rao. By that time, Srinivasa Rao was dead. On 19-11-1962 the second petitioner wrote to the respondent a letter stating that his father died on 9-1-1962 and that fresh demands on the donees in respect of the gift tax may be made. Accordingly the respondent raised fresh demands on the donees on 30-11-1962. The first petitioner Krishna Rao, wrote to the respondent acknowledging the notice of demand and stating that they were filing an appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under Section 22 of the Gift Tax Act and asking in the meanwhile that the collection of the tax may be kept in abeyance. On 29-12-1962, Chalapathirao, the 5th petitioner wrote to the respondent stating that it will not be difficult for the respondent to divide the tax payable and demand the same separately from all the parties concerned and that he may be informed as to what portion of the tax he has to pay. He further stated that he will pay his portion of the tax on or before 15-2-1963 and prayed for time till then. By an order dated 9-1-1963, the respondent apportioned the tax payable between the Petitioners 1 to 6 in this petition and two others specifying the amount due from each one of them and directing them to pay their proportionate tax specified on or before 10-2-1963.

29. From the statement of the above facts which are on record and which have not been disputed before us, there is no substance in the contention that the petitioners have had no notice of the proceedings in respect of the demand under Section 31 of the Act. Nor is there any substance in the contention that the demand under Sec. 31 issued to the donees is not in conformity with Section 29. The terms of Section 29 have been extracted supra. The present section substituted for the old section under Gift Tax (Amendment) Act, 53 of 1962 and came into force on 1-4-1963. This section contemplates that normally the gift tax is payable by the donor. That is what the charging section — S. 3 — provides for. But where in the opinion of the Gift Tax Officer, the tax cannot be recovered from the donor, it may be recovered from the donee. It also indicates that in such a situation if there are more donees than one, they are liable jointly and severally for the amount of the tax and further it is provided that the amount of tax due from which donee shall not exceed the value of the gift made to him as on the date of the gift. The recourse to the donees can be had only when the Gift Tax Officer is of opinion that the tax cannot be recovered from the donor. In coming to that opinion the Gift Tax Officer must not act arbitrarily. He should apply his mind to all the relevant circumstances of the case to find out whether he can collect the money from the donor or not and only on coming to a conclusion that the money cannot be recovered from the donor, can he start the proceedings for recovery of the tax against the donees.

30. In this case, one of the donees, Brahmanandaram, has expressly written to the respondent on 19-11-1962 that his father, Srinivasa Rao, had died on 9-1-1962, and that as such he was no more to meet the above demand. He further stated that out of the properties he acquired on the partition he gifted away the rooms in Srinivasa Buildings during his lifetime. He willed away the agricultural land of 3.72 acres as on the date of his death to his daughters and cash for the obsequies and other expenses. The purport of that communication is that there were no assets available in the name of Srinivasa Rao from which the tax could be collected. It is on the information so supplied by one of the petitioners and after a discussion with their Chartered Accountant that the apportionment of the tax was made between the donees by the respondent in his order dated 9-1-1963. In these circumstances, it is not correct to say that the proceedings for the recovery of the tax from the donees were sought to be taken without the formation of the opinion by the Gift Tax Officer that tax cannot be collected from the donor.

31. It is then contended that, quite apart altogether whether or not the procedure laid down in Section 29 had been complied with the section itself in so far as it seeks to fasten the tax liability on the donees is violative of the donees' right to hold and acquire property.

32. Before we examine this contention, it is necessary to remember that Section 30 of the Act provides that gift tax payable in respect of any gift comprising immovable property shall be a first charge on that property. It is a well-settled principle of law that the Government has a priority in respect of arrears of tax. The English common law doctrine of the priority of Crown debts has been given judicial recognition in India prior to 1950 and by virtue of Article 372 (1) of the Constitution, that doctrine continues to be in force, vide the decision in Builders Supply Corporation v. Union of India, (1965) 56 ITR 91 = (AIR 1965 SC 1061). In seeking therefore, to realise the arrears of tax from the immovable property comprised in the gift, the department is proceeding well within its rights.

33. In support of his contention that Section 29 in so far as it provides a recourse against the donees is violative of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution, the learned counsel for the petitioner placed very strong reliance on the decision of learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Rahaman Tea and Lands Co. (P.) Ltd. v. Gift Tax Officer, (1962) 45 ITR 528 = (AIR 1963 Cal 127). Dealing with the invalidity of Section 29 in the context of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution, the learned Judge observed as follows:

"I find that (i) no notice is required to be served on him, (ii) there is no procedure by which a donee can obtain rectification of mistakes committed by taxing authorities, (iii) there is no procedure prescribed for obtaining the opinion of a superior civil Court on questions of law, by application for reference or otherwise at the instance of the donee and (iv) nor has he any right of appeal. Therefore the tax has been made recoverable from the donee under Section 29 of the Act, without giving him any opportunity to contest the correctness of the demand and that makes the demand an unreasonable restriction on the donee's right to hold property guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution."

34. In regard to the last of the reasons referred to by the learned Judge viz., failure to give the donee an opportunity to contest the correctness of the demand, we may straightway observe that, on the facts of this case, it is obvious that it is at the instance of one of the petitioners that the demand under Section 31 was raised on the donees and it is at their instance and after discussion with their representative that the tax was apportioned between all the donees.

35. Mr. Anantababu, the learned counsel for the department, has contended that the other reasons suggested by the learned Judge are not also sustainable. The word 'assessee' is defined in Section 2 (iii) as follows :

'Assessee' means a person by whom gift tax or any other sum of money is payable under this Act, and includes :

(a) Every person in respect of whom any proceeding under this Act has been taken for the determination of gift tax payable by him or by any other person or the amount of refund due to him or such other person;

(b) Every person who is deemed to be an assessee under this Act;

(c) Every person who is deemed to be an assessee in default under this Act."

This definition of 'Assessee' in Sec. 2 (iii) is couched in very wide terms. It will take in every person in respect of whom proceedings have been taken under this Act including every person who is deemed to be an assessee. By reason of the notice of demand issued under Section 31 read with Section 29 of the Act, the petitioners must be deemed to be assessee within the meaning of Section 2 (iii) (a) of the Act. They are, therefore, entitled to take advantage of their remedies prescribed under the Act. Under Section 22 (b) of the Act any person objecting to the amount of gift tax determined as payable by him under the Act has a right of appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner from the orders of the gift tax officer. He has a further right of appeal to the appellate tribunal under Section 23. There is also the right of applying to the Commissioner under Section 24 for revising the orders of his subordinates. Eventually, there is also a right to ask for a reference to the High Court under Section 26 of the Act. In this case, appeals have actually been filed before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under Sec. 22 of the Act. Further, the absence of a provision for an appeal does not by itself constitute an infringement of property rights. An appeal does not rest upon an inherent right; but it is the creature of a statute. In Rangoon Botatoung Co., Ltd. v. Collector of Rangoon, (1913) ILR 40 Cal 21 (PC), Lord MacNaghten, speaking for the Privy Council, cited with approval the following passage of Bramwell, J., in Sandback Charity Trustees case, 1877-3 QBD 1.

"An appeal does not exist in the nature of things: A right of appeal from any decision of any tribunal must be given by express enactment."

In Narayana Chetty v. Income Tax Officer, Nellore, (1959) 35 ITR 388 = (AIR 1959 SC 213), the Supreme Court observed that the validity of a rule cannot be challenged merely on the ground that no appeal has been provided against the order passed under the impugned rule.

36. We are of opinion therefore that even on the assumption that there is no right of appeal expressly provided for donee called upon to pay the tax, that circumstance by itself will not invalidate Section 29.

37. With great respect to the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court, we are unable to agree with his conclusion that Section 29 of the Act is violative of Article 19-1 (f) of the Constitution.

38. We, therefore, hold that there are no merits in this writ petition. We understand that some appeals have been filed before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner by some of the petitioners. We should be understood as having expressed no opinion on the merits of those appeals.

39. The writ petition fails and is dismissed with costs. Advocate's fee Rs. 100.

Petition dismissed.

(A) Revenue Recovery Act (1890), S. 57-A. (1) — Government exercises powers quasi-judicially and not administratively — Principles of natural justice have got to be followed — Application by auction purchasers at a revenue sale against an order forfeiting their deposits under Section 36 (3) and for re-sale — No notice to debtor — Government allowing the application by setting aside the order of forfeiture and resale without any notice to debtor — Order is illegal being violative of principles of natural justice. (B) Constitution of India, Article 226 — Principles of natural justice stated.

The principles of natural justice are well settled. The first and foremost principle is what is commonly known as Audi Alteram Partem rule. It says that no one should be condemned unheard. Notice is the first limb of this principle. It must be precise and unambiguous. It should apprise the party determinatively the case he has to meet. Time given for the purpose should be adequate so as to enable him to make his representation. In the absence of a notice of the kind and such reasonable opportunity, the order passed against the person in absentia becomes wholly vitiated. Thus it is but essential that a party should be put on notice of the case before any adverse order is passed against him. Another principle of natural justice is popularly known as rule against bias. A third one is that the party when requested should be given a copy of the order passed against him, containing the reasons for the adverse order. (Para 2-A) Upendralal Waghry, for Appellant; P. A. Sarma for 2nd Govt. Pleader, for 1st Respondent; K. Pratap Reddy, for G. Haridatta Reddy, for Respondents 2 and 3.

KUMARAYYA. A. C. J.: This appeal is from the order of Seshachalapathi, J. refusing to quash the order of the Government passed in revision in exercise of its powers under Section 57-A of the A. P. Revenue Recovery Act.

2. Briefly stated the facts are these: The appellant herein is an agriculturist residing in Pasalawadi village, Sangareddy Taluk, Medak District. He had obtained a loan from the Government in a sum of Rs. 16,000 for purchasing a tractor for cultivating his lands. The amounts due from him swelled to Rs. 19,456-67. As the petitioner appellant did not repay the loan in spite of demand, after some correspondence between him and the revenue authorities as to the payment of amount and adjustment of accounts, proceedings under Section 36 of the A. P. Revenue Recovery Act were started. His lands were notified for sale.

The date of sale originally fixed was January 15, 1964. It was not held that day, but actually held on 4th March 1964. Of the 4 survey numbers, 3 survey numbers 110, 28 and 109 were knocked down in favour of the 2nd respondent for a total sum of Rupees 12,000. Another survey No. 158 was knocked down in favour of the 3rd respondent for a sum of Rs. 6,100. There was yet another survey number which was also put to sale. It was knocked down in favour of one Veeraiah whose case does not come up for our consideration in these proceedings.

Section 36 of the Revenue Recovery Act, 1864 embodies the procedure to be followed in sale of immoveable property. It makes in clause (3) a provision for deposit to be made by a purchaser. It says: "a sum of money equal to fifteen per cent of the price of the land shall be deposited by the purchaser in the hands of the Collector, or other officer empowered by the Collector in that behalf, at the time of the purchase and where the remainder of the purchase-money be not paid within thirty days, the money so deposited shall be liable to forfeiture." In cl. (4), it further provides that if the purchaser does not make the initial deposit or does not pay the remaining purchase money the property shall be resold at the expense and hazard of such purchaser, and the amount of all loss or expense which may attend such refusal or omission shall be recoverable from such purchaser in the same manner as arrears of public revenue.

In this case, the initial deposit was not made on the date of sale either by the second respondent or by the third respondent. They made these deposits on 5th and 11th March, 1964. The balance of the purchase money was not paid within 30 days as enjoined by Section 36. Thereupon, the Revenue Divisional Officer in exercise of his powers directed forfeiture of the deposits made by respondents 2 and 3 and ordered resale in August, 1964. By that time on 31-3-1964 the appellant herein had already filed an application objecting to set aside sale on grounds of material irregularities and fraud in publication and conduct of sale. That was filed well within time as enjoined by Section 38 and no sale therefore could be confirmed unless that application was rejected. It is stated that that petition has not yet been disposed of. Aggrieved by the order passed by the Revenue Divisional Officer directing forfeiture of the deposits and resale respondents 2 and 3 went in appeal to the Collector, Medak under Sec. 158 of the A. P. (Talangana Area) Land Revenue Act. These appeals, were however, dismissed. They did not move the Board of Revenue which had powers of revision under Section 57-A (3) instead went to the State Government invoking their powers under sub-clause (1) of Section 57-A. That clause reads thus:

"The State Government may, either suo motu or on application made to them, call for and examine the record relating to any decision or order passed or proceeding taken by any authority or officer subordinate to them under this Act for the purposes of satisfying themselves as to the legality or propriety of such decision or order or as to the regularity of such proceeding and pass such order in reference thereto as they think fit."

The Government after considering the petition on merits set aside the order relating to forfeiture of the deposit and ordered that respondents 2 and 3 herein be directed to pay the balance of the bid amount together with interest thereon according to the rules within 30 days from the date of communication of the orders to them. The Collector of Medak was directed to take necessary action accordingly. This order which reversed the order of the original and the appellate authorities was made without any notice to the appellant herein, even though the order as made was adverse to the interests of the appellant. It may be recalled that the appellant had filed an application for setting aside the sale, which application was still pending disposal. Further by reason of the order of re-sale, he virtually got what he wanted as previous sale was no longer in force. The order passed by the Government was definitely adverse to the appellant as it upset the orders of the Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector which were obviously favourable to the appellant herein. As this order was made without prior notice to him, he has invoked the jurisdiction of this Court praying that the said order be quashed as it was made without complying with the principles of natural justice and was against law.

Our learned brother Seshachalapathi, J., refused to quash this order on the basis that no question of jurisdiction had arisen as the Government had power to revise the order suo motu or on an application of the party under Section 57-A and while exercising revisionary jurisdiction had all the powers exercisable by the Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector. The Government therefore could direct that the deposit may not be forfeited or re-sale may not be held. The learned Judge referred in this behalf to the decision of the Madras High Court, which was followed by our High Court in Devadattam v. Union of India, 1957 Andh LT 554 at p. 568 = (AIR 1958 Andh Pra 131 at p. 134). They are the cases decided under Section 36 of the Revenue Recovery Act. The learned Judge dismissed the writ petition. Aggrieved by this the appellant has come up in appeal.

2-A. In our opinion, this appeal must be allowed on the short ground that there has been contravention of principles of natural justice inasmuch as the Government has passed an adverse order against the appellant without giving any notice to him or giving a reasonable opportunity of being heard. The revisionary jurisdiction of the Government in relation to the order made by the Collector or subordinate authorities is not at all open to question. Further it is indisputable that the Government while exercising revisionary jurisdiction was determining the questions affecting the rights of the parties. It follows that while exercising this legal authority to determine the question affecting rights, it (the Government) was bound to act judicially, as this was a quasi-judicial act and not an administrative act. Such an order is subject to judicial review under Article 226 of the Constitution of India. The order will be open to interference and liable to be quashed not only if it was passed without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction but also if there has been contravention of the principles of natural justice or there was an error of law apparent on the face of the record. These in fact are the various considerations which should weigh in any proceeding, for quashing the proceedings started under Article 226 of the Constitution.

The adherence to principles of natural justice as recognised by all civilised States is of supreme importance when a quasi-judicial body embarks on determining disputes between the parties. These principles are well settled. The first and foremost principle is what is commonly known as Audi Alteram Partem rule. It says that no one should be condemned unheard. Notice is the first limb of this principle. It must be precise and unambiguous. It should apprise the party determinatively the case he has to meet. Time given for the purpose should be adequate so as to enable him to make his representation. In the absence of a notice of the kind and such reasonable opportunity, the order passed against the person in absentia becomes wholly vitiated. Thus it is but essential that a party should be put on notice of the case before any adverse order is passed against him. This is one of the most important principles of natural justice. It is after all an approved rule of fair-play. Another principle of natural justice is popularly known as rule against bias. A third one which is of some consequence for our purpose is that the party when requested should be given a copy of the order passed against him, containing the reasons for the adverse order. In this case, not only notice was given to the party but also when the party came to know of the order and requested for a copy of the order, he was denied the same. In these circumstances we are of the view that an adverse order passed by the Government without due notice to the party affected thereby cannot stand by reasons of the contravention of the principles of natural justice, which the Government was duty-bound to follow.

This rule of fair-play and justice could not have been lawfully contravened but should have been strictly adhered to. The absence of the party on account of want of notice besides has led to certain misstatement of facts as well in the order. It is unnecessary for us to refer to this aspect of the case in view of the fact that we have come to the conclusion that the order is bad as it is vitiated by reason of contravention of one of the most important principles of natural justice.

Of course, Sec. 57-A does not contain any provision which in terms cast a duty on the Government to give notice to the party who may be adversely affected by its order. But that is fundamental being part and parcel of the principles of natural justice which no authority exercising quasi-judicial powers can lawfully ignore. On this very basis we are of the view that the order of the Government is liable to be quashed.

3. We therefore allow this appeal on this very basis and quash the order of the Government dated 26-5-1966. It will still be open to the Government to exercise its powers under revisionary jurisdiction under Section 57-A after giving due notice to the party and decide the matter in accordance with law. The appellant will be entitled to costs of both the Courts. Advocate's fee is fixed at Rs. 100 in the writ petition and also in the writ appeal.

Appeal allowed.

S. R. Nos. 36789 and 34481 of 1967, D/-17-9-1968, from Order of Reference made by Basi Reddi and Chandrasekhara, JJ., reported in AIR 1969 Andh Pra 55 (FB).

Court-fees and Suits Valuations — Andhra Pradesh Court Fees and Suits Valuation Act (7 of 1956), S. 48 — Land Acquisition Act (1894), Ss. 54, 23, 26 — Solatium as awarded under Sec. 23 is not part of award within meaning of Sec. 26 — Appeal to High Court — No court-fee is payable on difference of solatium as a result of increase in compensation awarded by Court and that awarded by Collector — AIR 1964 Andh Pra 216, Overruled; AIR 1930 Mad 45, Dissented from; AIR 1955 Trav-Co 110, Not followed.

Under Land Acquisition Act, while solatium under Section 23 (2) may form part of the compensation to be awarded by the Collector under Section 11, it does not form part of the award which the Court has to pass under Section 26, though it is required under Section 23 (2) to add 15% on the amount of market-value awarded by it, which will be in the nature of a direction to the Collector to pay the amount just in the same way as he is directed to pay interest. The reason for excluding solatium from the award to be passed by the Court is perhaps due to the solicitude of the Legislature not to overburden the owner whose lands are acquired against his will with payment of court-fee thereon. Section 48 of the A. P. Court-fees and Suits Valuation Act itself requires payment of court-fee on the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed. The amount which an owner is required to claim includes neither solatium nor interest, but only compensation for all his interests in that land. Thus, solatium under Section 23 (2) of Land Acquisition Act forms part of neither the claim nor of the award, and consequently, in appeal under Section 54 thereof no court-fee is payable on such amount. (Para 9)

The award which is the subject-matter of the appeal to the High Court is the award under Sec. 26, which is the award that is referred to in S. 48 of the A. P. Court-fees and Suits Valuation Act, and that award does not contain solatium payable under Section 23 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act. (Para 13)

Thus, 15% of the market-value to be added under Sec. 23 (2) of Land Acquisition Act to the compensation awarded under Section 23 (1) thereof is not part of the award which has to be passed by the Court within the meaning of Section 26 of the same Act. Accordingly, in appeal under Sec. 54 of Land Acquisition Act no Court-fee under Sec. 48 of A. P. Court-fees and Suits Valuation Act is payable on the difference of the solatium which the appellant is entitled as a result of the increase in compensation awarded by the Court and that awarded by the Collector. P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, C. J.: A Bench of this Court consisting of one of us (Chief Justice) and Kuppuswami, J., referred to a Full Bench the question whether court-fee is payable under Section 48 of the Andhra Court Fees and Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1956 hereinafter referred to as the Court Fees Act) on 15% of the compensation which has to be awarded as solatium under subsection (2) of Sec. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act (hereinafter called the Acquisition Act).

2. This reference was occasioned by certain observations of our learned brother, Venkatesam, J., delivering the judgment of the Bench in Dodla Malliah v. State of Andh Pra, 1964-1 Andh WR 185 = (AIR 1964 Andh Pra 216), that court-fee should be payable not only on the excess market value, but also on the 15% thereon, following the Bench decision in Brahmanandam v. Secy. of State, ILR 53 Mad 48 = (AIR 1930 Mad 45), which held that where a person being dissatisfied with the amount of compensation awarded to him under Section 18, Land Acquisition Act, wants to appeal, insisting in case of his success that not only the excess market value but also 15 per cent. of the same should be decreed in his favour, he must pay court-fees not only on the excess market value, but also on 15 per cent. thereon. Our learned brother stated; "it is also needless to point out that since the appellants were claiming interest on that amount, they were bound to pay court-fees on that amount as well." In S. R. No. 33447 of 1966 = (AIR 1969 Andh Pra 55) (FB), Basi Reddi and Chandrasekhara Sastri, JJ., while referring the question to a Full Bench stated that there was force in the contention that the observations in Dodla Malliah's case, 1964-1 Andh WR 185 = (AIR 1964 Andh Pra 216), were obiter and that even if those observations are not treated as such, that decision requires reconsideration.

The Full Bench consisting of one of us (Chief Justice), Seshachelapati and Chinnappa Reddi, JJ., held that in so far as interest awarded under Section 28 of the Acquisition Act was concerned, no court-fee was payable under Section 48 of the Court Fees Act. The Full Bench while observing that neither solatium under sub-section (2) of Section 23, nor interest under Section 28 of the Acquisition forms part of the award, however, stated: "Though in respect of solatium the Court is enjoined in every case to award a sum of 15% on the market value of the subject-matter in consideration of the compulsory nature of the acquisition, there is no duty on the Court to award interest on that amount; but statutory liability is imposed on the Collector to pay the amount awarded with interest thereon from the time of taking possession until such time as it shall have been paid or deposited. We are not here concerned with the question whether solatium is part of compensation within the meaning of Section 48 of the Court-Fees Act, because that question is neither argued, nor pressed upon us inasmuch as court-fee has already been paid thereon".

Since that question has now arisen for determination, Sri Suryanarayana contends that the reasons which weighed with the Full Bench in coming to the conclusion that interest was no part of the compensation or the award or the decree no court-fee is payable under Section 48 of the Court-Fees Act should be applied mutatis mutandis while determining the further question whether court-fee is payable under Section 48 of the said Act on the excess of solatium awarded under Section 23 (2) of the Acquisition Act.

The Full Bench had held that compensation to be awarded for the land acquired under the Acquisition Act is the market value of the land together with damages or expenses or the loss of profits occasioned by the acquisition of the said land or property, that the compensation as computed under Sec. 23 (1) is the amount which has to be set out in the award passed under Section 26 (1) and it is that award which is deemed to be a decree under sub-section (2) of Sec. 26 and that it may be pertinent to notice that neither solatium under sub-section (2) of Section 23, nor interest under Section 34 forms part of the award. While so holding, they said: "it appears to us whether solatium is part of compensation or not—a matter upon which we do not wish to express our views in this reference—interest certainly is not. As already stated, compensation can only be computed in the manner laid down in Section 23 (1) which does not include interest either under Section 34 or on the excess amount awarded by the Court over that awarded by the Collector under Section 28."

3. Sri Ramachandra Reddy, the Principal Government Pleader, contends that under Section 15 of the Act, it is provided that "in determining the amount of compensation, the Collector shall be guided by the provisions contained in Sections 23 and 24", and therefore, he submits that solatium under Section 23 (2) is also a part of compensation; as such, court-fee is payable thereon.

4. It is, in our view, profitable in order to appreciate the rival contentions, to examine the provisions of Section 48 of the Court Fees Act and the relevant provisions of the Acquisition Act. Under Section 48 of the Court-Fees Act, the fee payable under Section 48 of the Court Fees Act, the fee payable under that Act on a memorandum of appeal against an order relating to compensation under any Act for the time being in force for the acquisition of property for public purposes shall be computed on the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed by the appellant. A question would naturally arise as to what is "the amount awarded" and what is "the amount claimed" for the purpose of determining the court-fees payable under the above section. It may be noticed that under Section 49 of the Court-Fees Act, generally in appeals other than appeals against orders relating to compensation in respect of property acquired for public purposes under any Act, not necessarily the Acquisition Act the fee payable should be the same as the fee that would be payable in the Court of first instance on the subject-matter of the appeal. There are 5 Explanations to that section, which clarify what is included and what is not included in the subject-matter of the appeal.

For instance, Explanation (2) says that costs shall not be deemed to form part of the subject-matter of the appeal, except where such costs form themselves the subject-matter of the appeal or relief is claimed as regards costs on grounds additional to, or independent of, the relief claimed regarding the main subject-matter in the suit. Explanation (3) thereof says that in claims which include the award of interest subsequent to the institution of the suit, the interest accrued during the pendency of the suit till the date of decree shall be deemed to be part of the subject-matter of the appeal except where such interest is relinquished. Explanation (5) provides that where the market value of the subject-matter of the appeal has to be ascertained for the purpose of computing or determining the fee payable such market value shall be ascertained as on the date of presentation of the plaint. There are however no such specific rules in relation to solatium or compensation, in Section 48 of the Court-Fees Act. We have, therefore, to look into the provisions of the Acquisition Act for the meaning of the terms "award" and "claim" for the purpose of determining the court-fee payable under Section 48 of the Court-fees Act.

5. Where property of a citizen is intended to be acquired under the provisions of the Acquisition Act, the Collector has to give notice to the persons interested in the land, under Section 9. Such notice shall state the particulars of the land so needed, and shall require all persons interested in the land to appear personally or by agent before the Collector at a time and place therein mentioned (such time not being earlier than fifteen days after the date of publication of the notice) and to state the nature of their respective interests in the land and the amount and particulars of their claims to compensation for such interests, and their objections, (if any) to the measurements made under Section 8. Sub-section (3) of S. 9 further provides that the Collector has to serve notice to the same effect on the occupier of such land and on all such persons known or believed to be interested therein, or to be entitled to act for persons so interested, as reside or have agents authorised to receive service on their behalf, within the revenue district in which the land is situate.

After the requirements of Section 9 have been complied with, the Collector will have to proceed with the enquiry under Section 11 into the objections which any person interested has stated pursuant to a notice given under Section 9: (a) to the measurements made under Section 8, (b) into the value of the land at the date of the publication of the notification under Section 4 sub-sec. (1) and (c) into the respective interest of the persons claiming the compensation, and has to make an award under his hand of (i) the true area of the land (ii) the compensation, which in his opinion should be allowed for the land; and (iii) the apportionment of the said compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, of whom, or of whose claims, he has information, whether or not they have respectively appeared before him.

6. It will be observed from these provisions that what is required to be claimed by the person interested in the land acquired, is the nature of his interest in the land and the amount and particulars of his claims to compensation for such interest and objections, if any, to the measurements made under Section 8, in respect of which an enquiry has to be held under Sec. 11, and thereafter the Collector has to make an award in respect of the matters enumerated in that section. The claim and the award is in respect of the value of the interest in the land, which is the compensation for such interest. There is no specific mention either in Section 9 or Section 11 of any claim for solatium or interest, nor has the Collector been enjoined to make an award in respect thereof. It is however provided that in determining the amount of compensation, the Collector has, under Section 15, to be guided by the provisions contained in Sections 23 and 24. Sub-section (1) of Section 23 provides for 6 matters to be considered in determining the amount of compensation for the land acquired under the Acquisition Act, by the Court to which a reference has been made by the Collector under Section 18 at the instance of a person interested in the land who has not accepted the award, whether in respect of the measurement of the land, the amount of compensation, the person to whom it is payable or to apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested. Section 24 provides for the matters to be neglected in determining the compensation. These two sections are as under:

Sec. 23 (1). "In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under this Act, the Court shall take into consideration—first, the market value of the land at the date of the publication of the notification under Section 4, sub-section (1); secondly, the damage sustained by the person interested, by reason of the taking of any standing crops or trees which may be on the land at the time of the Collector's taking possession thereof;

thirdly, the damage (if any) sustained by the person interested, at the time of Collector's taking possession of the land, by reason of severing such land from his other land;

fourthly, the damage (if any) sustained by the person interested, at the time of the Collector's taking possession of the land, by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting his other property, movable or immovable, in any other manner, or his earnings;

fifthly, if, in consequence of the acquisition of the land by the Collector, the person interested is compelled to change his residence or place of business, the reasonable expenses (if any) incidental to such change; and sixthly, the damage (if any) bona fide resulting from diminution of the profits of the land between the time of the publication of the declaration under Section 6 and the time of the Collector's taking possession of the land.

(2) In addition to the market-value of the land as above provided, the Court shall in every case award a sum of fifteen per centum on such market-value, in consideration of the compulsory nature of the acquisition."

Section 24. "But the Court shall not take into consideration—first, the degree of urgency which has led to the acquisition;

secondly, any disinclination of the persons interested to part with the land acquired;

thirdly, any damage sustained by him, which, if caused by a private person, would not render such person liable to a suit;

fourthly, any damage which is likely to be caused to the land acquired, after the date of the publication of the declaration under Section 6, by or in consequence of the use to which it will be put;

fifthly, any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put when acquired;

sixthly, any increase to the value of the other land of the person interested likely to accrue from the use to which the land acquired, will be put; or, seventhly, any outlay or improvements on, or disposal of, the land acquired, commenced, made or affected without the sanction of the Collector after the date of the publication of the notification under Section 4, sub-section (1)".

7. Where the Court passes an award, the question is whether the award will not only include the compensation as fixed after taking into consideration matters specified in clauses first to sixthly of sub-section (1) of Section 23, but also the amount mentioned in sub-section (2) thereof. It appears to us that Sections 26 and 27 answer that question. Sub-section (1) of Section 26 provides: "Every award under this part (part III) shall be in writing signed by the Judge, and shall specify the amount awarded under clause 1 of sub-sec. (1) of S. 23, and also the amounts (if any) respectively awarded under each of the other clauses of the same sub-section, together with the grounds of awarding each of the said amounts." Under sub-section (2) of that section, "Every such award shall be deemed to be a decree and the statement of the grounds of every such award a judgment within the meaning of Section 2, clause (2), and Section 2, Clause (9) respectively, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908." Section 27 further provides that every such award shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the proceedings under that Part, and by what persons and in what proportions they are to be paid.

8. There is nothing in Section 26 to show that the award should include the 15% solatium to be awarded under Section 23 (2). On the other hand, where the Legislature intended something which is not part of the compensation, namely, costs, it has specifically directed under Section 27 that the same shall be included in the award. There is therefore no doubt that in an award passed by the Court under Section 26, only those matters which are specified in Section 23 (1) and costs under Section 27 are to be included. Solatium under sub-section (2) of S. 23 is not part of the award. Though no doubt in Section 15 there is a reference to Sec. 23, it however does not specify that compensation has to be fixed by the Collector by taking into consideration only matters referred to in sub-section (1) of Section 23. As every word in the section has to be given a meaning and significance, in our view Section 15 by referring to the entire Section 23 and not merely specifying sub-section (1) of that section, was providing a guidance to the Collector to determine compensation under Section 11, and in so doing, was directing the inclusion in the award to be passed by him after taking into consideration not only the matters specified in Sec. 23 (1) but also in Sec. 23 (2).

In other words, though there is no definition of what an "award" is, nonetheless when an award is made by the Collector under Section 11, the item relating to compensation has to be fixed in accordance with the guiding principles specified in Ss. 23 and 24, which includes the amount specified in Sec. 23 (2). It may be pointed out that Sec. 34 enjoins on the Collector, if the amount of compensation is not paid or deposited on or before taking possession of the land, to pay the amount awarded with interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum from the time of so taking possession until it shall have been so paid or deposited. But it does not form part of the award to be passed by the Collector under Sec. 11. While this is so, payment of interest nonetheless is a mandatory provision directing the Collector to pay the money, which any person aggrieved can enforce by recourse to law. It may be, even without the statutory provision, interest can be awarded on rules of equity. Where, however, an award is passed by the Court, the Legislature specifies the amounts which have to be included in the award, namely, those amounts which are arrived at after taking into consideration the matters which are mentioned in sub-sec. (1) of Section 23 and costs under Section 27, and nothing else. It excludes by omission to make a reference to Section 23 (2) to the 15% solatium on the market-value of the property as also the difference in the interest awarded by the Collector under Section 34 and that which is payable on the excess of compensation awarded by the Court, in respect of which the Court is required to direct the Collector to pay the amount of such excess at the rate of 6% per annum from the date on which he took possession of the land to the date of payment of such excess into Court.

9. An examination of the provisions of the Acquisition Act unfettered by any authority would incline us to the view that while solatium under Section 23 (2) may form part of the compensation to be awarded by the Collector under Section 11, it does not form part of the award which the Court has to pass under Section 26, though it is required under Section 23 (2) to add 15% on the amount of market-value awarded by it, which will be in the nature of a direction to the Collector to pay, the amount just in the same way as he is directed to pay interest. The reason for excluding solatium from the award to be passed by the Court is perhaps due to the solicitude of the Legislature not to overburden the owner whose lands are acquired against his will with payment of court-fee thereon. This assumption of ours is fortified by the provisions of Section 48 of the Court-fees Act itself, which require payment of court-fee on the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed. We have already shown that the amount which an owner is required to claim includes neither solatium nor interest, but only compensation for all his interests in that land. It is therefore clear that solatium under Section 23 (2) forms part of neither the claim nor of the award, and consequently, no court-fee is payable on such amount.

10. We propose now to refer to some of the decisions cited before us to examine whether they militate against the prima facie view we have taken on a reading of the relevant provisions of the Court-fees Act and the Acquisition Act. The Bench in Dodla Malliah's case, 1964-1 Andh WR 185 = (AIR 1964 Andh Pra 216) supra, was considering the question whether court-fee at all is payable in appeal to the High Court under Section 54 against an award passed by the Court to which a reference has been made under Section 18. It was contended that as under Section 49 of the Court-fees Act, court-fee payable in appeal is the same as in the Court of the first instance and as no court-fee is payable in the Court of first instance, namely, in the Court to which the reference was made under Section 18, no court-fee is payable in appeal to the High Court.

The argument advanced by Sri Sankara Sastry in that case was that according to Section 48 of the Court-fees Act, court-fee is no doubt payable on the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed by the appellants, but it applies only to appeals against an order relating to compensation under any Act; that Sec. 54 of the Acquisition Act provides an appeal to the High Court from the award or from any part of the award of the Court, which is now deemed to be a decree by reason of Sec. 26 (2) (added by Amendment Act 19 of 1921), and as such it does not refer to an award of the Land Acquisition Court, and that since Section 48 of the Court-fees Act is not applicable Section 59 thereof governs the case. Though this contention was negatived, we do not, except for one sentence in the observations of Venkatesam, J., relying on the case of 57 Mad LJ 357 = (AIR 1930 Mad 45), find any such contentions as those raised before us, nor any detailed consideration of the question referred to us.

11. In 57 Mad LJ 357 = (AIR 1930 Mad 45), which was a judgment of a single Judge, no doubt the question referred in this case was considered. The learned Judge in that case was considering Section 8 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870, which is in pari materia to Sec. 48 of the present Court-fees Act. It was contended in that case that under Sec. 23 (1) of the Acquisition Act, the amount of compensation to be awarded is determined by the considerations mentioned in clauses (1) to (11) of the section and that in construing Section 8 of the Court Fees Act, the expression "the amount awarded" should be taken to cover only the amount awarded having regard to the considerations mentioned in clauses (1) to (6) only of S. 23 and that the expression "amount claimed" in Sec. 8 (of the Court-fees Act) should also receive a similar construction. In rejecting the contention, the learned Judge observed at page 358: "As I understand the Act" the amount of compensation to be awarded includes 'not only the market-value but also the 15% on "such market-value". After referring to Sections 11, 15 and 38 of the Acquisition Act he proceeded to state; "it seems to me to be clear that the extra amount of "compensation claimed" by the appellant in an appeal should under Section 8 of the Court Fees Act include also the 15 per cent. of the market-value and that he should pay Court-fee on the total amount including the 15 per cent."

It will be observed that there was absolutely no reference to Section 9 or Section 26 or Section 27 of the Acquisition Act or to the other sections to which we have referred; nor was there any attempt made to ascertain what an "award" and a "claim" is under the provisions of the Acquisition Act, for the purpose of Section 48 of the Court-fees Act. Section 31 to which the learned Judge referred, deals with payment of compensation or deposit of the same in Court by the Collector after he has made the award. We do not understand how the provision requiring the Collector to tender payment of the compensation awarded by him to the person interested, or where it is not received, his being required to deposit the same in Court to which a reference under Section 18 would be submitted, is germane to the question whether solatium is included in the award passed by a Court, for purposes of payment of Court-fee under Section 8 of the Court-fees Act, 1870.

Even if, as the learned Judge held and as we also have held, the 15 per cent solatium on the market-value is included in the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector, that does not by itself resolve the further question whether court-fee is payable on the difference in the solatium awarded by the Collector and that which the appellant is entitled on the award of increased compensation, which, in our view, would depend upon the interpretation to be given to the provisions of Sections 9 and 23 of the Acquisition Act. We are therefore unable to accept the reasoning of the learned Judge in Brahmanandam's case, ILR 53 Mad 48 = (AIR 1930 Mad 45) (supra) or the observations of the Bench in Dodla Malliah's case, 1964-1 Andh WR 185 = (AIR 1964 Andh Pra 216) (supra), based on that decision as being in accord with our reading of the relevant provisions of the Court-Fees Act and the Acquisition Act. A decision of a Bench of the Travancore Cochin High Court in Abdulrahiman Kunju v. State, AIR 1955 Trav-Co. 110 was also cited by the learned Government Pleader, but that case does not advance the matter any further because the Bench without further consideration, merely followed Brahmanandam's case, ILR 53 Mad 48 = (AIR 1930 Mad 45) (supra) in holding that Court-fee is payable on 15 per cent solatium also.

12. In support of our view that the award for purposes of appeal is the award which is the one that is specified in Section 26 of the Acquisition Act, we may refer to a decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Banshidhur Marwari v. Secretary of State, 54 Cal 312, 314 = (AIR 1927 Cal 533 at p. 533). In that case, it appears that on a reference by the Collector, the matter came up before a Land Acquisition Judge and on the 21st May, 1924 it was dismissed for default in the absence of the petitioner. On the 11th June, 1924, the petitioners applied under Order 9 Rule 9 for restoration of the case. That application was also dismissed for default on the 10th January 1925. On the 6th March, 1925, the petitioners applied before the Land Acquisition Judge for review of his order dated the 10th January, 1925. That application for review was dismissed on the 26th June, 1926. The petitioners thereafter presented a memorandum of appeal to the High Court on 30-7-1926 directed against the order of 10-1-1925 and almost simultaneously made the application under consideration for extension of time under Section 5 of the Limitation Act. The contention on behalf of the opposite party was that the order against which the petitioners sought to appeal was an order from which no appeal lies under the Land Acquisition Act. In dealing with the contentions raised before them, Suhrawardy, J., observed at page 315:

“Award” has not been properly defined in the Act; but what is or may be supposed to be an award has been sufficiently indicated in several sections of which reference may be made to S. 11. Section 26 also indicates as to what an award should be. Under that section an award shall specify the amount awarded under Section 23. The order against which the petitioners want to appeal cannot be said to be an award within the meaning of Section 26 of the Act.”

13. There is no doubt that the award which is the subject matter of the appeal to the High Court is the award under Section 26, which is the award that is referred to in Section 48 of the Court-fees Act, and that award, as we have already stated, does not contain solatium payable under Section 23 (2) of the Acquisition Act.

14. In our view, the result of the foregoing discussion is that 15 per cent of the market-value to be added under Section 23(2) to the compensation awarded under Section 23(1) is not part of the award which has to be passed by the Court within the meaning of Section 26. Accordingly, no Court-fee under Section 48 of the Court-fees Act need be paid on the difference of the solatium to which the appellant is entitled as a result of the increase in compensation awarded by the Court and that awarded by the Collector. The Office is directed to register the memorandum of appeal and the cross-objections without calling on the appellant or the cross-objectors to pay court-fee thereon.

15. PARTHASARATHI, J.: I agree and wish to make some observations on the construction of Sections 48 and 49.

16. The latter Section of the Court Fees Act provides for the payment of Court-fee in respect of the “subject-matter” of appeals. This is a provision applicable generally to appeals. Section 48 is of limited application and is intended for a special category of appeals. The effect of Section 48, in so far as it is material for the present discussion, is that Court-fee is payable on the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed.

17. The very fact that the legislature had chosen to classify appeals coming within the purview of Section 48 as a special category, is an unmistakable indication of the legislative intendment to make an exception from the general rule enacted in Section 49. The position is that, the subject-matter of an appeal is made the basis for valuation in Section 49. But, this general provision furnishes a contrast or distinction, when one considers it in juxtaposition with the Section 48, which enacts a special rule in respect of a distinct category of appeals.

18. It was thus clearly designed that the range of valuation in cases coming under Section 48, should be narrower than the range of valuation, comprehended in the expression, “subject-matter of appeal”. If “subject-matter of appeal” and difference between “amount awarded and amount claimed” are to be regarded as coincident in their sweep or range, what was the need for a special provision?

19. The contention of Sri Ramachandra Reddy is that the word “awarded” occurring in Section 48 should be deemed to include the entire amount payable to the owner of a land and takes in the statutory solatium also. Likewise, his submission is that the “amount claimed” includes the solatium. If this contention is accepted, it would mean that the entire subject-matter of the appeal becomes the basis of valuation for Court-fee. In my opinion, this the legislature not only did not intend, but also guarded against by making a special provision.

20. The rule of construction suggested by the learned counsel would result in both the provisions being equated in their result and operation. This method of construction leading to the conclusion that there is a superfluity is not permissible. In Hill v. Willaim Hill (Park Lane), Ltd., 1949 AC 530 at p. 546, Viscount Simon said:—

“It is to be observed that though a Parliamentary enactment (like parliamentary eloquence) is capable of saying the same thing twice over without adding anything to what had already been said once, this repetition in an Act of Parliament is not to be assumed. When the legislature enacts a particular phrase in a statute, the presumption is that it is saying something which has not been said immediately before. The rule that a meaning should, if possible, be given to every word in the statute implies that, unless there is good reason to the contrary, the words add something which has not been said immediately before."

21. The alternatives are: Firstly, to regard the two provisions as identical in their effect and to equate the difference in amount awarded and amount claimed, with the "subject matter" of appeals. This, in my opinion, would be to ignore the meaning attributable to the words "awarded" and "claimed" and also to impute to the legislature the error of repetition.

22. The second alternative is to hold that the two provisions do not constitute an example of legislative tautology and that they should be so interpreted in such a manner as not to render Section 48 superfluous.

23. There can be no doubt that the former alternative is to be preferred as being not only in consonance with precedent and principle but also with the "equity of the statute" thereby giving due recognition to the spirit and meaning of Section 48.

24. I agree with the reasoning and conclusions of my Lord the Chief Justice as to the meaning of the words "awarded" and "claimed" and I concur in the directions given by him.

Order accordingly.

Bayya Pitchaiah, Petitioner v. The State of Andhra Pradesh, Respondent.

Tax Revn. Case No. 53 of 1964, D/- 25-3-1969, Decided by Full Bench on order of reference made by Basi Reddy and Sambasiva Rao JJ. D/- 25-3-1968.

Sales Tax — Andhra Pradesh General Sales Act (6 of 1957), Ss. 20, 14 (As amended in 1963) — Powers of revisional authority under S. 20 — Extent of — Assessment of additional turnover can be made — (1963) 2 Andh LT 201, Overruled.

By making the assessment to tax on the additional turnover, the Commercial Tax Officer exercises a power which is within his competence under S. 20(2) as the revisional authority and thereby he does not trench on the powers of the assessing authority. The language of S. 20 in no way curtails the power of revisional authority to make assessment to the best of his judgment, nor Section 14 in any way curtails the power under S. 20. (1963) 2 Andh LT 201, Overruled. (Case law discussed.) (Para 24)

K. Ranganadhachary, for Petitioner; Advocate General, on behalf of State.

VENKATESAM, J.: This case has been referred to a Full Bench by Basi Reddy, J., and one of us (Sambasiva Rao, J.) on the ground that the view of the Division Bench in State of Andhra Pradesh v. Varre Pothuraju, (1963) 2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222 as to the scope and meaning of Section 14 (4) of the Andhra Pradesh General Sales Tax Act, 1957, vis-a-vis the revisional jurisdiction under Section 20 of the said Act has cut down the amplitude of the powers of the revisional authority, although there are no restrictive words in Section 20 of that Act, and that the decision therefore, requires re-consideration.

2. The facts relevant for a determination of the question referred to us are as follows:— The petitioner is an individual carrying on business in butter and ghee, and registered as a dealer under the Andhra Pradesh General Sales Tax Act (No. 6 of 1957) (hereinafter referred to as the Act). For the assessment year 1956-57, he reported a gross turnover of Rs. 1,58,514-7-9 and a net turnover of Rs. 35,824-13-6, claiming exemption on a turnover of Rs. 1,22,689-13-0. The Deputy Commercial Tax Officer, Gudivada, who was the assessing authority, checked the accounts for that year and found that the gross turnover was Rs. 1,58,524-12-0, and after allowing the exemptions to which he was entitled the taxable turnover as per his accounts was found to be Rs.

35,984-14-9. The Deputy Commercial Tax Officer inspected the petitioner's shop on 17-5-1956, and found that certain bills were not issued for cash and credit sales till the time of his inspection. He made a second inspection on 9-10-1956, and recovered some slips of paper. By his order dated 27-3-1958, the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer held that Rs. 1,500 had to be added to the turnover of October, 1956, for not accounting for the advances and other defects and Rs. 2,000 had to be added towards the estimated suppressions, but determined the net turnover of the dealer for 1956-57 at Rs. 37,984-14-9, and assessed him to tax on the same. The Commercial Tax Officer, Masulipatnam, examined the accounts on 19-5-1959, and found that in fact Rs. 1,500 was not added to the turnover for the month of October, 1956, on account of suppressions.

He also found that as per the slips of paper and the Anamath Book recovered by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer on 9-10-1956, the sales amounted to Rupees 1,574-5-6 during the period 1-10-1956 to 9-10-56, while the cash and credit sales shown in the regular accounts amounted only to Rs. 579-0-3, and that during that period the proportion between the turnover in the regular accounts and the turnover suppressed was 1:3. For these reasons, he was of the opinion that the assessment made by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer required revision, and issued notice of the proposed assessment. He declined to accept the explanation on behalf of the dealer, and assessed him to tax on a further turnover of Rs. 71970.

3. Against the order of the Commercial Tax Officer, an appeal was preferred to the Assistant Commissioner Commercial Taxes, Guntur, who, by his order dated 28-3-62 refused to interfere and dismissed the appeal. Against that decision, an appeal was preferred to the Sales Tax Appellate Tribunal, Hyderabad, in T. A. No. 473 of 1962, and the Tribunal by its order dated 3rd March 1964 dismissed the appeal, and upheld the order of the Commercial Tax Officer. Against the order of the Tribunal the Revision petition has been preferred under Section 22 (1) of the Act.

4. The contention raised before the Appellate Tribunal was that the turnover of Rs. 71,970 on which additional tax was levied by the C. T. O. was an escaped turnover, which he had no jurisdiction to assess, and relied on (1963) 2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222. The Tribunal held that the facts and the observations in that case were distinguishable from the instant case, as the authority which assessed the escaped turnover is the Commercial Tax Officer, who is also the assessing authority under G. O. Ms. No. 1091, Revenue, dated 10-6-1957, published at pages 107-112 of the Rules Supplement to Part I of the Andhra Pradesh Gazette, dated 15-6-1957. According to this G. O., it may be noted, the Governor of Andhra Pradesh in exercise of his powers under Section 2(1) (b) of the Act and in supersession of the previous Notifications, authorised Commercial Tax Officers to exercise the powers of an assessing authority in the case of dealers whose total turnover is Rs. 8 lakhs or more a year; and by the proviso, he was authorised in his discretion to exercise the powers of a lower authority within his jurisdiction in respect of any dealer. It is, therefore, clear that the Commercial Tax Officer, Masulipatnam, could exercise the powers in respect of the petitioner. The Tribunal thus held that the Commercial Tax Officer assessed the escaped turnover as an assessing authority, but not as a revisional authority, and that he was competent to do so. The Tribunal distinguished the decision cited on the ground that in that case the Commissioner purported to exercise his revisional jurisdiction for assessing the escaped turnover.

5. In assailing the correctness of this decision, Sri Ranganadhachari, the learned counsel for the petitioner contended that even if the Commercial Tax Officer acted as an assessing authority, he could only take note of the slips seized by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer, but could not, on the strength of those slips, draw an inference regarding the escaped turnover for the entire assessment year, and make an assessment, as it amounted to a best of judgment assessment, which he could not do. It was also contended that the assessment by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer itself was to the best of his judgment under Section 14 (1) of the Act, and that the same power could not be exercised by the Commercial Tax Officer as an assessing authority; alternatively it was argued that if the Commercial Tax Officer purported to act as a Revisional authority, he could not do so de hors the record of assessment proceedings, and that in this case as they consisted only of certain slips seized by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer, the Commercial Tax Officer could add only the turnover covered by those slips under Section 14(4) of the Act, but not make them the basis for increasing the turnover threefold, as it amounted to a re-determination of turnover to the best of his judgment, which is not warranted by Section 20, and that the decision of the Bench of this Court is good law.

6. The learned Acting Advocate-General, appearing for the State, in refuting the contentions on behalf of the dealer, submitted:

(1) The Commercial Tax Officer acted as a revisional authority under Section 20(2) of the Act, and made the assessment to the best of his judgment, and the language of Section 20 in no way curtails that power.

(2) The curtailment of the revisional powers under Section 20 ought not to be inferred by reference to Section 14; further even escaped turnover can be assessed by an assessing authority by way of best judgment after the addition of Section 14 (4-A) in 1963.

(3) The decision of this Court in (1963) 2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222 holding that a revisional authority cannot make a best judgment assessment cannot be accepted as good law.

7. In order to decide the questions debated before us, it is necessary to advert to the relevant provisions of the Act before referring to the decisions cited.

8. Section 14 of the Act deals with the assessment of tax and is in the following terms:

“14 (1): If the assessing authority is satisfied that any return submitted under Section 13 is correct and complete, he shall assess the amount of tax payable by the dealer on the basis thereof but if the return appears to him to be incorrect or incomplete he shall, after giving the dealer a reasonable opportunity of proving the correctness and completeness of the return submitted by him and making such inquiry as he deems necessary, assess to the best of his judgment, the amount of tax due from the dealer. An assessment under this section shall be made only within a period of four years from the expiry of the year to which the assessment relates.

(2) When making an assessment to the best of judgment under sub-section (1) the assessing authority may also direct the dealer to pay in addition to the tax assessed, a penalty not exceeding one and half times the tax due on the turnover that was not disclosed by the dealer in his return.

(3) If no return is submitted by any dealer liable to tax under this Act before the date prescribed in that behalf, the assessing authority may, at any time within a period of four years from the expiry of the year to which assessment relates, after issuing a notice to the dealer and after making such inquiry as he considers necessary assess to the best of his judgment, the amount of tax due from the dealer on his turnover for that year, and may direct the dealer to pay, in addition to the tax so assessed a penalty not exceeding one and half times the amount of that tax.

(4) Where, for any reason, the whole or any part of the turnover of business of a dealer has escaped assessment to tax, or has been under-assessed or assessed at too low a rate, or where the licence fee or registration fee has escaped levy or has been levied at too low a rate, the assessing authority may, at any time within a period of four years from the expiry of the year to which the tax or the licence fee or registration fee relates, assess the tax payable on the turnover which has escaped assessment or levy the correct amount of licence fee or registration fee, after issuing a notice to the dealer and after making such inquiry as he considers necessary. Such authority may also direct the dealer to pay in addition to the tax so assessed, a penalty not exceeding one and half times the amount of that tax, if the turnover had escaped assessment or had been under-assessed or assessed at too low a rate by reason of its not being disclosed by the dealer:

Provided that before issuing any direction for the payment of any penalty under sub-section (2) sub-section (3) or sub-section (4), the assessing authority shall give the dealer a reasonable opportunity to explain the omission to disclose the information, and make such inquiry as he considers necessary”.

9. Section 19 deals with appeals against orders passed or proceedings recorded by an authority under the Act. Section 20 deals with revision by the Board of Revenue, and other prescribed authorities, and is as follows:

“20 (1): The Board of Revenue may suo motu call for and examine the record of any order passed or proceeding recorded by any authority, Officer or person subordinate to it, under the provisions of this Act, including sub-section (2) of this section, for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the legality or propriety of such order or as to the regularity of such proceeding and may pass such order in reference thereto as it thinks fit.

(2) Powers of the nature referred to, in sub-section (1) may also be exercised by the Deputy Commissioner and the Commercial Tax Officer in the case of orders passed or proceedings recorded by authorities, Officers or persons subordinate to them.

(3) In relation to an order of assessment passed under this Act, the powers conferred by sub-sections (1) and (2) shall be exercisable only within such period not exceeding four years from the date on which the order was served on the dealer, as may be prescribed.

(4) No order shall be passed under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) enhancing any assessment unless an opportunity has been given to the assessee to show cause against the proposed enhancement.”
Section 39 relates to the power to make rules.

10. Rules 8 to 27 deal with the submission of returns, the permissible deductions, and the method of assessment by the assessing authority. Rule 12 enables the assessing authority to assess a dealer to the best of his judgment, where no return is submitted or even where submitted is incomplete. Rules 33 to 44 deal with appeals and revisions. The relevant rule is Rule 44 which is in the following words:

“44. (1) The powers of the nature referred to in sub-section (1) of Section 20 may be exercised by the Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes and the Commercial Tax Officer in the case of orders passed or proceedings recorded by authorities, officers or persons subordinate to them.

(2) In relation to order of assessment passed under the Act, the powers referred to above shall be exercised:

(i) by the Commercial Tax Officer only within a period of three years from the date on which the order was served on the assessee;

(ii) by the Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes and the Board of Revenue only within a period of 4 years from the date on which the order was served on the assessee; and

(iii) No order shall be passed under sub-rule (1) or (2) enhancing any assessment, unless an opportunity has been given to the assessee to show cause against the proposed enhancement."

11. It may be noticed that the Board of Revenue is given the power, suo motu to call for and examine the record of any order or proceeding by a subordinate authority for satisfying itself as to the legality or propriety of that order or the regularity of such proceedings, and to pass such orders in reference thereto as it thinks fit. It cannot be doubted that the expression "legality, propriety and regularity" is of wide import especially having regard to the fact that the Board of Revenue is empowered to pass such order in reference thereto as it thinks fit. It may then be noted that under Section 20(2), the powers of the Board of Revenue under Section 20 (1) may also be exercised by the Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, and the Commercial Tax Officer, in respect of orders passed by officers subordinate to him, and the powers under Section 20 (1) as well as Section 20 (2) can be exercised only within a period not exceeding four years from the date on which the order was served on the dealer. Section 20(4) makes it clear that in exercise of the powers under Section 20 of the Act an assessment may be enhanced, but only after giving an opportunity to the assessee against the proposed enhancement.

12. The order of the Commercial Tax Officer, in the instant case, makes it abundantly clear that he did not act as assessing authority, but only exercised the revisional powers, though the provision of law (viz. Section 20(2)) had not been quoted, and in the exercise of that power he levied tax on an additional turnover, which, in his judgment, had escaped. The argument on behalf of the assessee is that what is empowered by Section 20(4) is enhancement of assessment, and that there is clear distinction between escaped turnover and escaped assessment as brought out in Sections 14 (1) and 14 (4) of the Act.

13. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel on the decision of a Bench of this Court in (1963) 2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222. But before adverting to that judgment, it may be necessary to refer to the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in State of Madras v. Louis Dreffus and Co. Ltd., (1955) 6 STC 318 = (AIR 1956 Mad 659) (FB). In that case, the question that arose for consideration was, whether Rule 14 of the Madras General Sales Tax Rules prior to the amendment in 1948 was valid, and, if so, whether the powers of revision thereunder could be exercised in cases to which Rule 17 relating to escaped assessment was applicable. Section 12 of the M. G. S. T. Act as amended by Madras Act XXV of 1947 and Rule 14 of the M. G. S. T. Rules, which were considered by the Full Bench, are in pari materia with Section 20(1), (2) and (3) of the Act except that in the Madras Act and Rules no power was conferred on the revisional authority to enhance the assessment, as in Section 20(4) of the Act.

The procedure to be followed by the assessing authority has been laid down in Section 9 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, and Rule 17 of the Madras General Sales Tax Rules as amended in 1948, which is in pari materia with Section 14(4) of the Act. Section 19(1) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act empowered the Government to make Rules to carry out the purpose of the Act, and Section 19(2)(f) provided that without prejudice to the generality of that power the rules may provide for the assessment to tax under that Act of any turnover which has escaped assessment within three years. It may be mentioned that in that case, the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer determined the turnover of the assessee for the assessment year 1944-45. The assessee preferred an appeal to the Commercial Tax Officer, and the appeal was dismissed. Later the Commercial Tax Officer issued a notice to the assessee to show cause why that assessment should not be revised by including in the turnover an additional sum and ultimately the Commercial Tax Officer increased the turnover.

14. The contention of the assessee before the Full Bench was that on a proper construction of the provisions of that Act, the Board of Revenue was intended to be the sole and exclusive revising authority, and Rule 14(2) which authorised the Commercial Tax Officer to exercise powers of revision was beyond the rule-making power. It was further contended that Section 19(2)(f) referred to above specifically provides for rules being made for the assessment of escaped turnover of an assessee and the period within which re-assessment proceedings could be started, and as Rule 17 framed for this purpose vested the jurisdiction to assess an escaped turnover with the assessing authority, viz., the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer, it would be contrary to the Rules of construction to read Rule 14(2) as conferring upon the Commercial Tax Officer an unfettered jurisdiction to reopen assessment and effect a reassessment even after a lapse of the period of two years prescribed by Rule 17 (1).

15. Rajamannar, C. J., speaking for the Full Bench, stated the position thus:

"No doubt in a general sense both Rule 14(2) as well as Rule 17(1) serve a common purpose, viz., to gather revenue which has improperly escaped but while Rule 14 (2) is directed to the correction of improper or illegal assessment orders which have levied less or more tax than justified, Rule 17(1) lays emphasis on escaped turnover.

The distinction between the two provisions might be expressed by saying that R. 14 (2) deals with escaped assessments and Rule 17(1) with escaped turnover, notwithstanding that the latter also would mean that a lesser amount of tax has been paid. So understood, the two provisions would be completely reconcilable and the two jurisdictions to revise assessments and to reopen them would each be assigned to the proper authority.

The language of Rule 17 (1) is consistent with this construction. The 'escape' that serves as the foundation for the jurisdiction to reopen an assessment is that of 'turnover' and not, be it noted, an assessment.

'Turnover' escaped when it is not noticed by the officer either because it is not before him by reason of an inadvertence, omission or deliberate concealment on the part of the assessee, or because of want of care on the part of the officer the turnover though in the books has not been taken notice of. This would be the natural and normal meaning of the expression 'turnover which has escaped' in Rule 17(1)."

It was further held that a close examination of Rule 14(2) also supported the view that the two rules were intended to be mutually exclusive, and the reference to the Full Bench was answered thus:

(1) Rule 14(2) is intra vires the rule making power of the Provincial Government under Section 19 of the Act. (2) The revisional powers under Rule 14(2) cannot be exercised in cases to which Rule 17 applies. (3) Rule 17 applies only to cases of escaped turnover as described earlier".

In (1963) 2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222, the assessee firm was provisionally assessed by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer for the assessment year 1955-56. In the return filed by the assessee for that year, they showed certain gross and net turnover, but the assessing authority was not satisfied that the books of account were correctly maintained, and holding that there were suppressions in the course of 2½ months during that year, estimated the turnover to the best of his judgment at a higher figure. The Deputy Commissioner, who was apprised of that estimate by the Commercial Tax Officer, purporting to act in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction, called upon the assessee to show cause why the turnover should not be enhanced by him, and eventually enhanced the turnover. On appeal to the Tribunal, majority of the members took the view that the revising authority could not enhance the turnover as that was the function of the assessing authority. It was against that order that revision was preferred by the State to the High Court, Chandra Reddy C. J. speaking for the Bench, compared Section 20 of the Act with Section 12 of the M. G. S. T. Act, and held that it was in identical language except for a minor difference, and that, therefore, the argument on behalf of the State that the revising authority could deal with the orders of the assessment in any way he liked, could not be accepted.

The Bench took the view that the precise contents of the power to revise must be gathered from Sections 20 and 14 of the Act, analogous to S. 9 of the M. G. S. T. Act and the Rules thereunder. The learned Chief Justice summed up the position thus:

"In the context of this enquiry, we have to bear in mind the fact that it is not the Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes that is the assessing authority within the contemplation of the General Sales Tax Act, that duty being allotted only to the Assistant and Deputy Commercial Tax Officers. That being the position, we have first to decide whether this matter falls within the sweep and range of sub-section (1) or within the scope of sub-section (4) of Section 14. In our considered opinion, the function performed by the Deputy Commissioner in this case is the one within the connotation of Section 14(4). As already mentioned, the Deputy Commissioner felt that a considerable part of the turnover escaped assessment to tax. At the risk of repetition, we may state that the Commercial Tax Officer estimated the turnover at about Rs. 2,40,000. The revising authority determined it at about Rupees 5,00,000. In other words, he felt that turnover of nearly Rs. 3,00,000 escaped assessment to tax and that it should be brought to tax. This is not a case where the whole of the turnover, was before the assessing authority and he thought that the entirety of the turnover could not be subjected to tax but only a part of it or that reduction should be granted in regard thereto. This is a case where the revising authority increased the turnover by more than two and a half lakhs. That being so, there can be little doubt that what the revising authority did falls under sub-section (4). Sub-section (1) and sub-section (4) embody two different concepts and they are mutually exclusive. It is only in regard to matters coming under sub-section (1) that the revising authority is empowered to invoke Section 20 of the Andhra Pradesh General Sales Tax Act or Section 12 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, as the case may be. It does not extend to powers vested in the assessing authority by sub-section (4) of the Andhra Pradesh General Sales Tax Act or R. 17 (1) of the rules framed under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, which resembles Section 14(4). The duty to be discharged under Section 14(4), is vested in the assessing authority and not in the officers that constitute appellate or revisional authority." In coming to this conclusion, the Bench relied upon the decision of the Madras High Court in (1955) 6 STC 318 = (AIR 1956 Mad 659) (FB) on the ground that Rules 14 (2) and 17 (1) of the M. G. S. T. Rules, 1939, are analogous to the Rules to be dealt with in that case, and that the principle enunciated in that case had full vigour in the context of the enquiry before them.

16. We have already pointed out that the question for consideration before the Full Bench of the Madras High Court was, whether Rule 14 of the M. G. S. T. Rules was valid, and if so, whether the powers thereunder could be exercised in cases to which Rule 17 relating to escaped assessment was applicable. The Full Bench in answering that question, as stated above, pointed out the distinction between the two rules, that Rule 14 (2) was intra vires, and that the revisional power under Rule 14 could not be exercised in a case to which Rule 17 applied. In the case before the Bench of this Court, the question turned upon the construction of Section 20 which has already been extracted. We have noticed how the language of Section 20 (1) is of wide amplitude, and Section 20 (4) expressly empowered the revising authority to enhance the assessment. In that situation, the question for consideration is, whether the amplitude of the language used in Section 20 in relation to revisional powers can be whittled down by a reference to Section 14 (4), which specifically relates to the power of an assessing authority who has already made an assessment, but not of a revisional authority.

17. In support of his argument that the revisional powers cannot be so restricted or circumscribed, the learned Acting Advocate-General has invited our attention to some decisions of the Supreme Court. In the State of Kerala v. M. Appukutty, (1963) 14 STC 242 = (AIR 1963 SC 796) after the assessment was made by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer and an appeal against that order was dismissed, the Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, after issuing a notice proposing to determine the escaped turnover for the period of assessment, levied the tax on enhanced turnover. An appeal against that order was dismissed by the Tribunal, and in revision before the High Court a contention was raised that the notice issued by the Deputy Commissioner was without jurisdiction. That contention was upheld, and the order of the Appellate Tribunal was set aside. On appeal to the Supreme Court against that judgment, two contentions were raised, one on behalf of the State that the notice issued by the Deputy Commissioner was not without jurisdiction, and the other on behalf of the assessee that if the notice was not without jurisdiction, the Rule under which the notice was issued was ultra vires as it was beyond the substantive provisions of the Act. The Act which governed that case was the Madras General Sales Tax Act, No. 9 of 1939. Kapur, J., who spoke for the Court, referred to Sections 9, 12 and 19 of the Act, and Rules 17, 17 (1), 17 (1-A) and 17 (3-A) of the M. G. S. T. Rules. It was contended that the power under Section 12 (2), which corresponds to Section 20 of the Act, was distinct from Rule 17(3-A) which empowered the revising authority also to exercise the powers of the assessing authority under sub-rules (1) and (3), viz., determining to the best of judgment the turnover which has escaped assessment. That contention was accepted by the Tribunal, but reversed by the High Court.

The Supreme Court first of all held that Rule 17 and the various clauses thereof made under Section 19 were not beyond the rule-making power of the State under Section 19. Adverting to the argument that Rule 17 was ultra vires of the provisions of the Act, the Supreme Court held that Section 2(b) authorised the State Government to appoint as many Deputy Commissioners of Commercial Taxes as it thinks fit for performing the functions conferred on them under the Act, and such officers shall perform their functions within such local limits as the Government may assign. Rule 17 conferred on the Deputy Commissioner the power to determine and tax the escaped turnover in cases where revisions have been taken to them (under sub-rule (1-A) and also where revisions have not been taken to them (sub-rule (3-A))). It was further held that Section 9 does not deal with escaped turnover, but is a provision to determine the turnover of a dealer in the first instance, and that Rule 17 cannot be said to be in conflict with Section 12(2). That section, it was held, dealt with cases where the Deputy Commissioner, suo motu, or on application, called for the record and determined the legality or propriety of an order made by one of the subordinate officers.

In view of Rule 17, their Lordships held that the power of revision of the Deputy Commissioner is not limited to the powers under Section 12(2), and that Rule 17 dealt with a separate and independent jurisdiction in regard to determining and taxing escaped turnovers, and that the provisions of Section 12(2) are in no way in conflict with the powers conferred under Rules 17 (1-A) and 17 (3-A). The argument that Rule 17 (3-A) was confined to cases of revisions filed under Section 12(2) was also rejected. Referring to the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in (1955) 6 STC 318 = (AIR 1956 Mad 659) (FB), the Supreme Court, observed that that case did not deal with sub-rule (3-A), which came into force later. It must, therefore, be noted that in this case, the Supreme Court no doubt, held that the revisional Authority, viz., the Deputy Commissioner, could tax an escaped turnover by reason of the language of Rule 17 (3-A).

18. In State of Orissa v. Debaki Debi, (1964) 15 STC 153 = (AIR 1964 SC 1413) the Supreme Court, by a majority, construed the second proviso to Section 12(6) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act, 1947, which laid down that an order assessing an amount of tax passed after a lapse of 36 months from the expiry of the period, was not in substance a real proviso to that section, but an independent legislative provision of the Act, and is not limited to orders of assessment made under Sec. 12, but on its language applies to and governs any order assessing the amount of tax which will include an assessment under any provision of the Act besides Section 12. It was accordingly held that an order of assessment made in the exercise of revisional powers under Section 23 of that Act was governed by that period. It was also held that the power of revision under Section 20(3) is a distinct and separate power from the power to assess under Section 12(7) of the Act, calling for a return in case of under-assessment or escaped assessment, and that Section 12 (7) does not include reassessment made by a revising authority under Section 23 (3).

19. In State of Andhra Pradesh v. Ravuri Narasimloo, (1965) 16 STC 54 (Andh Pra), Chandra Reddy, C. J., and Narasimham, J., held that while sub-sections (1) and (3) of Section 14 of the Act deal with the power to make best of judgment assessment at the time of original assessment, sub-section (4) of that section concerns itself with bringing to tax turnover which has escaped assessment, and it is confined to assessing such turnover as is shown to have escaped assessment, and has not extended it to estimates depending upon inferences to be drawn by the Department from certain circumstances, and it does not clothe the department with power to make a best of judgment assessment. Relying upon this decision, the learned counsel for the assessee contends that it was not open in the instant case for the Commercial Tax Officer to have made a best of judgment assessment under Section 14 (4). But that contention lacks substance because the learned counsel himself had to admit that the assessment was made by the Commercial Tax Officer not as an assessing authority, but as a revisional authority.

20. The Supreme Court in State of Kerala v. K. M. Charia Abdulla and Co., (1965) 16 STC 875 = (AIR 1965 SC 1585) held that the words in Section 12(1) of the M. G. S. T. Act, that the revisional authority "may pass such orders with respect thereto as he thinks fit", mean such order as in the circumstances of the case for rectifying the defect be regarded as just. It was held that that power may in some cases include power to make or direct such enquiry as the Deputy Commissioner may find necessary for rectifying the illegality or impropriety in the Order or irregularity in the proceeding. It was pointed out that while the Act in that case conferred on the prescribed authority the power to entertain an appeal under Section 11, and a petition in revision under Section 12, it did not prescribe the procedure to be followed by the authorities, and it was left to the State Governments to prescribe by the Rules under Section 19 the procedure of the appellate and revising authorities, and that a provision authorising the making of further enquiry for effectively exercising the appellate or revisional power would, in the case of a taxing statute, fall within the scope of the Rules.

Meeting the objection that even so, Rule 14-A was ultra vires, it was observed by Shah, J., speaking for the majority, that the Tribunal in that case had held that Rule 14-A must be so read as to deal with the "Arithmetical aspect rather than on the aspect of the merits of an assessment", and that there was no such restriction in either Rule 14-A or in Section 12(2) of the Act. It was further held that the power to hold an enquiry to take additional evidence is a procedural power in aid of the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction and if the revisional jurisdiction was not restricted only to cases of arithmetical errors or "arithmetical aspect", there was no reason to assume that the power under the Rule to make such enquiry as the appellate or the revising authority considered it just to order or to make would be so restricted. It was pointed out:

"The revisional power has to be exercised for ascertaining whether the order passed is illegal or improper or the proceeding recorded is irregular and it is in aid of that power that such orders may be passed as the authority may think fit. One of the inquiries in considering the legality or propriety of the orders passed by the subordinate officer which the revising or the appellate authority may make is about the correctness of the tax levied and if after perusing the record the authority is prima facie satisfied about the illegality or impropriety of the order or about the irregularity of the proceeding, it may in passing its order direct an additional enquiry. Neither Section 12 nor Rule 14-A authorises the revising authority to enter generally upon enquiries which may properly be made by the assessing authorities and to reopen assessments."

21. The decision in State of Madras v. P. M. Batcha and Co., (1967) 20 STC 273 = (AIR 1967 SC 1537) is not of much assistance in deciding the question before us, as it was laid down there in that in a case where an assessee was not levied with tax, there was no rule which compelled the assessing authority to inform the assessee that the tax levied against him was nil. Since there was no assessment to tax against the respondent, it was held there could be no appeal under Section 11 of the Madras Act of 1939 against an order of nil assessment, and no bar to the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner under Section 32(1) of the M. G. S. T. Act of 1959 could arise, and that the proceedings taken by him under that Section were, therefore, valid.

22. In Swastik Oil Mills Ltd. v. H. B. Munshi, (1968) 21 STC 383 at p. 400 = (AIR 1968 SC 843 at p. 848) one of the contentions was that the revisional authority exercising its power of suo motu revision under Section 31 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 5 of 1953, could not travel beyond the order sought to be revised, and that he cannot order a further enquiry or rely on material extraneous to the record of the order under revision. Bhargava, J., speaking for the Court, followed the decision in (1965) 16 STC 875 = (AIR 1965 SC 1585), and stated the position thus:

"In fact, when a revisional power is to be exercised, we think that the only limitations to which that power is subject, are those indicated by this Court in K. M. Cheria Abdulla & Co.'s Case, (1965) 16 STC 875 = (AIR 1965 SC 1585). These limitations are that the revising authority should not trench upon the powers which are expressly reserved by the Acts or by the Rules to other authorities and should not ignore the limitations inherent in the exercise of those powers. In the present case, the Deputy Commissioner, when seeking to exercise his revisional powers, is clearly not encroaching upon the powers reserved to other authorities In this case, as we have indicated earlier the first assessment of tax was made by the Sales Tax Officer, and the turnover now in question was assessed to tax by him. Having once assessed that turnover to tax, he could not initiate a fresh proceeding in respect of it under Section 11-A. The assessment made by him was set aside in appeal by the Assistant Collector and it is this order of the Assistant Collector which is sought to be revised by the Deputy Commissioner. This is therefore, not a case where the powers are being exercised for the purpose of assessing or reassessing an escaped turnover. The case is one where the revisional powers are sought to be exercised to correct what appears to be an incorrect order passed in appeal by the Assistant Collector, and for such a purpose, proceedings could not possibly have been taken under Section 11-A. In exercising his revisional powers, therefore, the Deputy Commissioner is not encroaching upon the jurisdiction of any other authority specially entrusted with taking such proceedings."

23. Our attention has been drawn to the Supreme Court Short Notes, Note No. 195, Deputy Commr. of Agricultural Income-Tax and Sales Tax Quilon v. Dhana-lakshmi Vilas Cashew Co., Quilon (C. A. Nos. 803 and 804 of 1967) to the effect that the Deputy Commissioner, while exercising revisional jurisdiction would be restricted to the examination of the record for determining whether the order of assessment was according to law, and that the Rule which confers power to assess escaped turnover is normally to be exercised "on matters dehors the record of assessment proceedings before the assessing authority." The Supreme Court followed the decision in (1963) 14 STC 242 = (AIR 1963 SC 796). The full report has not been made available, and we are not in a position to say from the Short Note placed before us that the Supreme Court has taken a view differing from what has been laid down in (1965) 16 STC 875 = (AIR 1965 SC 1585) and (1968) 21 STC 383 = (AIR 1968 SC 843).

24. Applying the principle enunciated by the Supreme Court in (1965) 16 STC 875 = (AIR 1965 SC 1585), and (1968) 21 STC 383 = (AIR 1968 SC 843), we hold that by making the assessment to tax on the additional turnover, the Commercial Tax Officer has not trenched on the powers of the assessing authority, and has exercised a power which is within his competence under Section 20 (2) as the revisional authority. We, therefore, express our respectful dissent with the contrary view stated in (1963) 2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222. We may also point out that there cannot be any doubt in this regard after the addition of Section 14 (4-A) in 1963.

25. The Tribunal distinguished the decision in 1963-2 Andh LT 201 = (1964) 15 STC 222 on the ground that the commercial Tax Officer acted not as a revisional authority, but only as an assessing authority a view which we have not accepted. But, even so, for the reasons stated above, the order passed by him is within his competence as revisional authority, and is not illegal or without jurisdiction. Though for different reasons, the order of the Sales Tax Appellate Tribunal is upheld, and the Tax Revision Petition is dismissed with costs. Advocate's fee, Rs. 100.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 ANDHRA PRADESH 153 (V 57 C 21) KONDIAH, J.

Rambuddi Veeraswamy, Petitioner v. Rambuddi Jangammayya and others, Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petns. Nos. 1907 and 1908 of 1968, D/- 24-4-1969.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 10 (2), O. 1, R. 3, O. 34, R. 1 — Scope — Suit on mortgage — Persons claiming adverse title paramount in some or all of mortgage properties but not through mortgagor or mortgagee — Whether should be impleaded as parties to suit — It is matter of discretion — Question is not one of jurisdiction — O. 31, R. 1 is subject to O. 1, R. 10 (2), but O. 1, R. 10 (2) is not controlled by O. 1, R. 3.

The position of the law on the question, whether the persons claiming paramount title independently but not through the mortgagor or mortgagee can be called necessary or proper parties to a suit for the redemption of mortgage, can be summarised as follows:

IM/KM/E420/69/RSK/D

(1) The provisions of Order 1, Rule 10 (2) Civil P. C., should be construed very liberally and all persons who are found to have direct interest in the mortgaged properties must be held to be proper, though not necessary, parties for a complete and effective adjudication of the rights of the parties. AIR 1958 SC 886, Foll.

(2) The object of the Legislature in making Rule 1 to Order 34 Civil P. C. is to define the scope of a mortgage suit, pure and simple. AIR 1928 Mad 2, Rel. on.

(3) The provisions of Order 34, Rule 1 Civil P. C. are subject to the provisions of Order 1, Rule 10 (2), but the provisions of Order 1, Rule 10 (2) are not controlled by O. 1, Rule 3 Civil P. C.

(4) The question as to who are all the necessary parties to be impleaded as party defendants in a suit on mortgage is not one of jurisdiction but at most one of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties. AIR 1955 All 4 (FB) and AIR 1936 Mad 338, Rel. on.

(5) Where a suit for redemption, foreclosure or sale of mortgaged property is brought by the respective parties to the mortgage, all persons interested in the equity of redemption and all those who claim right and interest through the mortgagee should ordinarily be necessary parties and the persons who claim adverse title paramount in some or all of the mortgage properties but not through the mortgagor or mortgagee, need not be impleaded as parties normally to such a suit. AIR 1920 Bom 96 and AIR 1932 Cal 512 and AIR 1951 Pat 352 and AIR 1964 Pat 44 and AIR 1961 Pat 28, Ref.

(6) But, the aforesaid rule is not inflexible or absolute and the Court, in each case, has to see whether such a course will lead to inconvenience or confusion and exercise its discretion judiciously and properly. AIR 1928 Mad 2, Rel. on.

(7) In certain cases, where the Court thinks it just, proper and necessary in the interests of all parties to adjudicate on the questions relating to paramount title, it is not only proper but even desirable to implead such parties and avoid multiplicity of litigation. AIR 1928 Mad 2, Ref.

(8) Where it is alleged that the person claiming adversely or by title paramount is a benamidar of the mortgagee, or is claiming to be in possession and enjoyment of all or some of the mortgaged properties, those who are likely to resist the decree-holder in case the decree is passed in terms of the plaint must be held to be proper, though not necessary, parties to such a suit on mortgage.

(9) Where the Court, on a consideration of the facts and circumstances of each case, is of the opinion that it would be just and convenient and desirable to decide the title of the persons who set up a paramount title, then those persons must be impleaded as party defendants, and in the interests of all parties, the question of title also should be adjudicated upon after framing appropriate and proper issues and giving opportunity to all the parties concerned. AIR 1936 Mad 338 (340) and AIR 1937 Mad 176 and AIR 1968 Mad 142, Rel. on. (Para 10)

ORDER: These two revision petitions give rise to an interesting question of law as to whether the persons claiming paramount title independently but not through the mortgagor or mortgagee can be called necessary or proper parties to a suit for redemption of the mortgage.

2. The relevant and brief facts that gave rise to these revisions may briefly be stated thus. O. S. No. 60 of 1967 on the file of the Court of District Munsif, Sompeta has been filed by the petitioner herein for redemption of the mortgage executed by his father late Rambuddi Rajayya on 11-9-1933 in favour of the father of the 1st defendant in respect of Items 1 to 9 of the plaint schedule for a sum of Rs. 200 repayable with interest at 18% per annum. Defendants 2 to 4 had set up a case of adverse possession and paramount title to all the mortgaged properties. It is further averred in the written statement of the 2nd defendant that he sold away Items 7 to 9 in favour of one Ram-buddi Harikrishna. On enquiry, the plaintiff having come to know that the said Harikrishna since died, had sold a portion of those items in favour of one Kallepalli Chinnodu, Defendants 5 and 6, the legal representatives of late Harikrishna, Kallepalli Chinnodu, the 7th defendant and his wife Subhadra being alienees from Harikrishna, were sought to be impleaded as defendants 5 to 8 in I. A. No. 240/67 and I. A. No. 77/68. Defendants 5 to 8 resisted the applications contending inter alia that their presence in the suit would be unnecessary, as they do not claim title to the mortgaged property through the mortgagee but as alienees of the second defendant, who sets up an independent paramount title by adverse possession, and hence, it is beyond the scope of the suit. The learned District Munsif, upholding the objection of the respondents herein, dismissed the applications. Aggrieved by the order of the trial Court, these revision petitions have been filed by the plaintiff.

3. Sri C. Poornaiah, for the petitioners, contended that the defendants 5 to 8 are necessary and in any event, proper parties for a complete and effective adjudication of the rights of the parties as they are interested in the result of the suit; whereas Sri C. N. Babu for the respondents contended contra and urged that in a suit for redemption, they are not necessary or proper parties as they did not claim their right through the mortgagee but claimed title independently and the scope of the redemption suit being only limited to the parties who claimed interest either from the mortgagor or from the mortgagee, they would be prejudiced if they are made parties.

4. The point that arises for determination is whether the defendants 5 to 8 now sought to be impleaded by the plaintiff are necessary or proper parties to O. S. No. 60/67, a suit for redemption of the mortgage.

5. To appreciate the respective contentions advanced by the counsel, it is profitable to consider the provisions of Order 34, Rule 1 Civil P. C. which reads thus:

"Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage-security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage."

It is true, as contended by Sri Babu, that the object of this rule is to make all persons having an interest in the mortgage-security or in the right of redemption join as parties with a view to avoid multiplicity of suits. It is also true that the defendants 5 to 8 who are sought to be impleaded as party-defendants by the plaintiff in the suit for redemption, are not claiming any right through the mortgagee or mortgagor but claiming independent title through the 2nd defendant. The provisions of O. 34, Rule 1 Civil P. C. are subject to the provisions of the Code as disclosed from the opening words of the rule. Order 1, R. 2, Clause (2) Civil P. C. empowers the Court to add the name of any person who ought to have been joined as defendant and whose presence before the Court would be necessary in order to enable the Court effectively and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. Even on the admitted facts, it cannot be said that the defendants 5 to 8 are not interested in some of the mortgaged properties which according to them were in their possession on the date of suit, though they claimed to have got possession of the properties through the 2nd defendant, who is setting up an independent paramount title by adverse possession. Further, in case the plaintiff succeeds in getting a decree in the suit for redemption in respect of the suit properties, some of them being alleged or claimed to be in the possession of defendants 5 to 8, he will not be able to reap the fruits of the decree, until and unless they (defendants 5 to 8) are made parties to the suit.

6. I am unable to agree with the contention of Sri C. N. Babu that the provisions of Order 1, Rule 10 Civil P. C. are controlled by Order 1, Rules 1 and 3. As far as Order 1, Rule 1 is concerned, I must say that it has no application to the facts of the present case, as the same relates to the persons who may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs, in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions is alleged to exist. Even Rule 3 of Order 1 which authorises all persons against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist, whether jointly or severally, to join as defendants, cannot be said to control the provisions of O. 1, R. 10, cl. (2), Civil P. C. The argument of Sri Babu is that as no relief against the defendants 5 to 8 relating to redemption of mortgage is sought for, they cannot be added in the same suit as party defendants. As observed by B. P. Sinha, J. (as he then was) in Razia Begum v. Sahebzadi Anwar Begum, AIR 1958 SC 886 (895):

"In a suit relating to property, in order that a person may be added as a party, he should have a direct interest as distinguished from a commercial interest, in the subject-matter of litigation."

Admittedly, in the present case, the defendants 5 to 8 are directly interested in Items 7 to 9 of the plaint schedule claiming as alienees from the 2nd defendant who has set up an independent title by adverse possession. The plea of the plaintiff that the 2nd defendant, who is setting up an adverse title, has colluded with the 1st defendant, who remained ex parte and hence, the mortgagee is deemed in law to be in possession of the mortgaged properties, is material and relevant to determine the point at issue, whether defendants 5 to 8 are necessary or proper parties to the present suit. If on enquiry by the Court this point is found in favour of the plaintiff, the plaintiff must be able to get at the properties, pursuant to the decree and he will not be in a position to successfully execute the decree and get possession of the mortgaged properties, unless he makes the defendants 5 to 8 as party defendants who claimed to be in possession of those items.

7. From a perusal of the cases cited across the bar by both the counsel, it is evident that there is some conflict between several High Courts on this point. The Bombay, Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts and in some cases the Patna High Court have taken the view that in a suit for redemption of a mortgage, persons claiming paramount title independently of the mortgagor or mortgagee are not necessary or proper parties to the suit. In Satagauda Appanna v. Satappa, ILR 44 Bom 698 = (AIR 1920 Bom 96), it was held that parties in possession of mortgaged properties claiming independently of the mortgage are not necessary parties in a suit for redemption. In Tinkarhi Dasee v. Narendranath, AIR 1932 Cal 512, Buckland, J. has held that questions of paramount title should not ordinarily be decided in a suit to enforce a mortgage. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in Mst. Satwari v. Kali Shanker, AIR 1955 All 4, has held that a person having a paramount title is not a necessary party in a mortgage suit. In that case, their Lordships have observed that "the rule as to impleading persons having paramount title, is more a rule of convenience and prudence than a rule affecting the jurisdiction of the Court." In Ramautar Singh v. Ramsewak Lal, AIR 1951 Pat 352, a Division Bench of the Patna High Court has held that the person claiming paramount title is not a necessary party to a suit for redemption of mortgage. The same view has been taken by a single Judge of the same High Court in Lachmi Narain v. Ganga Mahton, AIR 1964 Pat 44. In that case, it was held that the suit for redemption of a mortgage could not be converted into one for investigation of title between the original mortgagee-defendant and the proposed intervening defendant whose interest was adverse to the original mortgagee, and hence, the proposed intervener could not be made a party defendant to such a suit. Another Division Bench of the Patna High Court, in Aneshwar Prasad v. Misri Lal, AIR 1961 Pat 28, has taken the contrary view to that expressed in AIR 1951 Pat 352.

8. As far as the Madras High Court is concerned, I must say that it has taken consistently the view that it is always convenient for effective and complete adjudication of the rights of the parties to implead the persons who claim to be in possession of the mortgaged properties in a suit for redemption, though the questions of paramount title have to be decided. In Doraiswami v. Varadarajulu, AIR 1928 Mad 2, the questions that arose for determination were, whether a person claiming an adverse or paramount title was or was not a necessary or proper party in a mortgage suit and whether the Court, in such a suit, can adjudicate the title of such persons claiming title adverse to the mortgagor or mortgagee. Vekatasubba Rao, J., at page 4, succinctly summed up the legal position thus:

"To a mortgage suit a person claiming an adverse or paramount title is not ordinarily a necessary or proper party; this rule is not absolute or inflexible, for, in certain circumstances, it may not only be proper but even desirable to implead him as a party. x x x The object of this rule (Order 34, Rule 1 Civil P. C.) is to define the scope of a mortgage suit as such, that is of a mortgage suit pure and simple, but this rule is not directed to the question whether any cause of action may or may not be joined to a claim on a mortgage, and, if it may be joined in what circumstances. x x x The question of ownership as a question of fact is bound up with the other questions that necessarily arise in the case and it seems to me that this is a strong reason for holding that the issue should be tried and decided in this action itself."

In Muthiah Servai v. Somasundaram Chettiar, AIR 1928 Mad 199 (2), Devadoss, J., while considering whether an issue relating to the property being self-acquired as claimed by one of the members of the family can be gone into in a suit for mortgage executed by a member of the family, had held that

"although in a mortgage suit it is not proper that a title of person who claims adversely to the mortgagor should be gone into it would be but fair that this issue ought to be raised and determined in course of the suit and should not be left to be determined in execution."

The same view had been taken by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Ramasamy Pillai v. Marimuthu Goundan, AIR 1928 Mad 764. In Veeraraghavulu v. Suryanarayana, AIR 1936 Mad 338, Venkataramana Rao J., as he then was, while considering this aspect of the case, observed at page 340:

"Ordinarily the title of persons who set up a claim adverse to the mortgagor and mortgagee should not be investigated in a suit upon a mortgage. The joinder of such persons as stated by the Privy Council in ILR 38 All 488 = (AIR 1916 PC 18) (Radha Kunwar v. Reoti Singh) is irregular and leads to confusion, but it is not an inflexible or invariable rule. Such joinder does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court, though it is always desirable that if a party sets up a paramount title and does not want to redeem the property he may be struck off from the record as he takes the risk of not claiming redemption in case his title is found against in any subsequent litigation. But in each case the Court can exercise its discretion whether it will lead to inconvenience or confusion in trying the issue as to paramount title in the same suit. As observed by Venkatasubba Rao, J., in 53 Mad LJ 647, = (AIR 1928 Mad 2) (Duraismi Iyengar v. Varadarajulu Naidu) sometimes it may be necessary to do so. The Court is not bound to adjudicate on it, but the fact that the defendant objects to the trial of such an issue would not preclude the Court from trying it if it thinks necessary in the interests of all parties that such a trial should take place; vide 1914 Mad WN 623 = (AIR 1914 Mad 332) (In re O. Ramalakshman). As pointed out in AIR 1928 Mad 764, it is very desirable that before the property is brought to sale all questions of title relating to the mortgaged property should be settled and the Court should as far as possible avoid multiplicity of litigation. The effect of joining persons who claim a title paramount need not necessarily result in a dismissal of the suit. The Court can order a separate trial.

In this case for instance it cannot be said that the trial of the issue relating to the title set up by defendant 6 was altogether unnecessary. The claim set up by defendants 6 to 13 is based on a title derived from the branch of defendants 1 and 2 prior to the mortgage. x x x Defendant 6 and his alienees could not be said to be complete strangers who claimed by a title not derived from the parties. In such circumstances, I think it is very often desirable that the title to the mortgaged property should be set at rest before the property is brought to sale. x x x In the interests of all parties I think it is not desirable that they should be driven to another litigation."

In Kasi Chettiar v. Ramasami Chattiar, AIR 1937, Mad 176, a suit on mortgage against legal representatives of the mortgagor was brought. The legal representatives claimed title paramount to the mortgaged property and denied right of the mortgagor to bind over that property. In those circumstances, their Lordships, after considering the entire case law on the subject, have held that the question whether issues of paramount title should or should not be decided in a suit on mortgage was dependent on the facts and circumstances of each case and the facts of that case justified that it should be tried and decided before the mortgaged security was brought to sale. The same view has been taken by Ramamurti, J. in Krishnamachari v. Dhanalakshmi, AIR 1968 Mad 142.

9. The view of the Bombay, Calcutta, Allahabad and Patna High Courts is opposed in certain respects to the view of the Madras High Court. Though the Madras High Court agrees with the view expressed by the several High Courts normally that the persons who claim adverse independent title paramount in some or all of the mortgaged properties, need not be impleaded as parties to such a suit, it thinks it proper and desirable to implead such persons as parties to the suit where, on a consideration of the facts and circumstances of each case, the Court considers it just, proper and necessary in the interests of the parties to adjudicate on all the questions including that of paramount title in order to avoid multiplicity of suits without allowing the question of ownership of the said properties to be once again agitated or gone into at the stage of the execution proceedings.

10. From the aforesaid discussion, the following principles emerge: (1) The provisions of O. 1, R. 10 (2), Civil P. C., as held by the Supreme Court in Razia Begum's case, AIR 1958 SC 886, should be construed very liberally and all persons who are found to have direct interest in the mortgaged properties must be held to be proper, though not necessary, parties for a complete and effective adjudication of the rights of the parties.

(2) The object of the Legislature in making Rule 1 to Order 34 Civil P. C. is to define the scope of a mortgage suit, pure and simple.

(3) The provisions of Order 34, Rule 1 Civil P. C. are subject to the provisions of Order 1, Rule 10 (2), but the provisions of Order 1, Rule 10 (2) are not controlled by O. 1, Rule 3 Civil P. C.

(4) The question as to who are all the necessary parties to be impleaded as party defendants in a suit on mortgage is not one of jurisdiction but at most one of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties.

(5) Where a suit for redemption, foreclosure or sale of mortgaged property is brought by the respective parties to the mortgage, all persons interested in the equity of redemption and all those who claim right and interest through the mortgagee should ordinarily be necessary parties and the persons who claim adverse title paramount in some or all of the mortgage properties but not through the mortgagor or mortgagee, need not be impleaded as parties normally to such a suit.

(6) But, the aforesaid rule is not inflexible or absolute and the Court, in each case, has to see whether such a course will lead to inconvenience or confusion and exercise its discretion judiciously and properly.

(7) In certain cases, where the Court thinks it just, proper and necessary in the interests of all parties to adjudicate on the questions relating to paramount title, it is not only proper but even desirable to implead such parties and avoid multiplicity of litigation.

(8) Where it is alleged that the person claiming adversely or by title paramount is a benamidar of the mortgagee, or is claiming to be in possession and enjoyment of all or some of the mortgaged properties, those who are likely to resist the decree-holder in case the decree is passed in terms of the plaint must be held to be proper, though not necessary, parties to such a suit on mortgage.

(9) Where the Court, on a consideration of the facts and circumstances of each case, is of the opinion that it would be just and convenient and desirable to decide the title of the persons who set up a paramount title, then those persons must be impleaded as party defendants, and in the interests of all parties, the question of title also should be adjudicated upon after framing appropriate and proper issues and giving opportunity to all the parties concerned.

11. I shall now turn to the facts of the present case and consider the same in the light of the aforesaid principles, with a view to arrive at a correct conclusion on the material points at issue. It is clear from the stand taken by the respondents herein that they claimed title to some of the suit properties through the 2nd defendant and not through the mortgagor or the mortgagee and also claimed to be in possession and enjoyment of them. If they are not impleaded as parties to the suit and in case the plaintiff finally succeeds in the suit, there is every likelihood of these defendants resisting the plaintiff from taking possession of the properties on the ground that they were the owners of those items and in which case, separate suit or suits have to be filed by the plaintiff once again. To avoid multiplicity of suits, on a close and careful consideration of the admitted facts and circumstances of the case, I think it not only desirable but just and convenient to implead the defendants 5 to 8 as supplemental defendants in this very suit and permit them to file written statements raising all the requisite pleas including the plea of paramount title by adverse possession to the suit properties. In the circumstances and for the reasons stated, I must hold that the plaintiff-petitioner is entitled to implead the defendants 5 to 8 as supplemental defendants and get adjudication on the question of title to some of the properties claimed to be in possession and enjoyment by them.

12. In the result, I allow these revision petitions, setting aside the order of the Court below, and direct the lower Court to permit the supplemental defendants 5 to 8 to file written statements raising all the pleas including the plea of paramount title available to them and frame proper and necessary issues and finally decide the case on merits. In the circumstances, I direct each party to bear their own costs.

Revision allowed.

Second Appeal No. 538 of 1963, D/-24-7-1969.

(A) Contract Act (1872), S. 127 — Execution of guarantee letter and promissory note by guarantor — Forbearance to sue debtor on that basis — Amounts to consideration.

Where on simultaneous execution of the promissory note and the guarantee letter by the guarantor the creditor abstains from taking any legal action against the debtor, such forbearance is a valid consideration though it does not emanate from an express promise to forbear. A surety's promise or security given by the debtor could be validly enforced if there is an agreement, express or implied, to give time, or if there is an actual forbearance which, ex post facto, may become the consideration to support it. Case law discussed. (Paras 15, 19, 20, 21)

PARTHASARATHI J.: A question having arisen whether the decision in Lakshmadu v. Ramudu, ILR (1940) Mad 123 = (AIR 1939 Mad 867), requires reconsideration, this Second Appeal, which was heard in the first instance by one of us (Parthasarathi J.) was referred to a Division Bench. When the appeal was dealt with by a Division Bench consisting of Venkatesam and Kondayya, JJ., they shared the view that the above-mentioned decision requires to be re-examined as it is inconsistent with the decision of a Full Bench in Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar, (1904) ILR 27 Mad 243. Accordingly, the entire case was referred by them for consideration by a Full Bench.

2. In addition to the question specifically dealt with in the order of reference, other matters were also argued before the Division Bench, as also at the earlier stage. On an examination of the position, we have come to the conclusion that this appeal has to be decided on a ground which renders it unnecessary to consider whether the authority in ILR (1940) Mad 123 = (AIR 1939 Mad 867), can be regarded as laying down the correct principle of law. The facts of the case and the questions debated before us may now be set-out.

3. The plaintiff in a partition action is the appellant in this second appeal. The plaintiff and the defendants 7 to 9 are brothers, and their father is the 10th defendant. The defendants 1 to 5 are the sons of one Sundararama Reddi, who is now dead. The deceased obtained a decree in O. S. No. 119 of 1956 for recovery of money against the 10th defendant and some others. The 6th defendant was impleaded in this action as a judgment creditor of the 10th defendant, whose decree in O. S. Nos. 151 and 153 of 1956 was impugned by the plaintiff. For the purposes of this appeal, no further reference need be made to the 6th defendant.

4. The plaintiff pleads, inter alia, that there was no debt due to Sundararama Reddi by his father and that the decree in O.S. No. 119 of 1956 does not impose any binding obligation on him and his brothers and that the properties of the family are to be partitioned on the footing that the decree debt does not bind the junior coparceners. The decree debt has devolved on the defendants 1 to 5 after the death of the original decree-holder, and in enforcement of the decree, they had an item of the property sold.

5. As generally happens in suit of this description, the father chose to remain absent and took no part in the proceedings. The brothers of the plaintiff (defendants 7 to 9) supported him. The defendants 1 to 5 resisted the suit and pleaded that the 10th defendant guaranteed the repayment of a debt due by one Venkatasubbayya and his son. A letter of guarantee dated 22-3-1954 was executed by the 10th defendant and another person. The principal debtors wanted time for payment, and the creditor (father of the defendants 1 to 5) gave him time for payment on condition of the debtors obtaining guarantee as to repayment. Pursuant to the understanding, the debtors made a promissory note agreeing to pay the debt; and the guarantors, the 10th defendant and another, passed on the same date, a letter of guarantee. The creditor sued on foot of the promissory note and the guarantee and obtained the decree in O. S. No. 119 of 1956, whereunder the 10th defendant was made liable for the satisfaction of the debt.

6. The trial Court negatived the plea of the plaintiff and his brothers, held that the decree debt in O. S. No. 119 of 1956 was binding on them, and granted a preliminary decree for partition, subject to the liability of the junior members to discharge the decretal liability.

7. On appeal, the learned District Judge, Nellore, confirmed the decision of the trial Court. The case pleaded by the defendants 1 to 5 that the 10th defendant undertook the liability as guarantor as part of the same transaction under which the creditor granted time to the principal debtors by accepting a promissory note of theirs.

8. When the second appeal was heard by a single Judge, a two-fold argument was presented for the appellant. It was contended that the finding that there was in fact a subsisting debt of the father which was sued upon, was erroneous. It was also said that there was, in law, no valid or lawful consideration for the father's (10th defendant) undertaking and that there was consequently no debt in existence as could be enforced against the sons on the pious obligation doctrine. The contention rested on the major premise that there was no debt in existence, because there was no consideration for the promise made by the father. If this premise is well founded, the consequence is that the doctrine of pious obligation is not applicable and the decree does not affect the plaintiff and other sons of the 10th defendant. The second argument advanced for the appellant was that the fact that the creditor obtained a decree against the father is no impediment to the sons' attack that the foundation for their pious obligation did not exist. In other words, the plea is that though the decree against the father has become unimpeachable or final, this does not preclude a challenge by the sons to the existence of the very debt, which has been pronounced by a Court of law to be enforceable or actionable.

9. It will be noticed that if the true principle is that the decree obtained by a creditor in a suit which is not alleged to be collusive or fraudulent, gives rise to a fresh liability of the father, and the decree debt itself is a distinct and independent source of the pious obligation of the sons, no attempt to impugn the decree can be countenanced. The argument presented on behalf of the appellant that there was in fact no debt in existence, can arise only if the sons are allowed by law to question the decree that has become final and conclusive. Both aspects were gone into by the Courts below and their findings thereon were recorded.

10. The initial step is for the plaintiff to establish that there is no impediment caused by reason of the decree suffered to become final by the father. On this aspect, the ruling in (1904) ILR 27 Mad 243 (FB) Supra, was to the effect that independently of the alleged debt arising from the original transaction, the decree against the father, by its own force, creates a debt as against him, which his sons are under an obligation to discharge, unless they show that such debt was illegal or immoral. This was the principle emerging from the answer to the question referred to the Full Bench in that case. In AIR 1939 Mad 867, Supra a Division Bench of the Madras High Court expressed the opinion that the principle stated above does not constitute the ratio decidendi of the Full Bench ruling and was no more than an obiter dictum.

11. Since then, other High Courts had considered the question. It is obvious that it merits a re-examination; but, in the instant case, it need not be done inasmuch as the Courts below have come to the definite conclusion that there was in fact a debt of the father in existence. If this finding is correct, the consideration of the validity of the rule in AIR 1939 Mad 867 Supra becomes academic. We accordingly addressed ourselves, in the first instance, to the question whether the plaintiff has established that there was no actionable claim in existence against the 10th defendant.

12. The primary or material facts bearing on this point were already adverted to by us. The respective pleas of the parties and the findings may be set out in a broader outline. The plea of the defendants 1 to 5 is that one Venkata Subbayya and his son became indebted to the father of the defendants one to five in a sum of Rs. 3,000. The liability arose prior to 22-3-1954. The creditor was pressing for payment. The debtors wanted time for payment. But, the creditor refused to forbear unless a guarantee of third parties was forthcoming. Then the 10th defendant and another person were persuaded by the debtors to guarantee the payment of debt. The creditor accepted the guarantee and granted time. As a result of the arrangement on 22-3-1954, the creditor obtained a promissory note of the debtors as well as the letter of guarantee. When the suit O. S. No. 119 of 1956 was filed, the 10th defendant admitted the execution of the letter of guarantee. It is significant that he is keeping himself aloof in this suit and has not chosen to give evidence rebutting any of the details pleaded by the defendants 1 to 5.

13. The trial Court held that the forbearance to sue is sufficient consideration for the letter of guarantee and it was of opinion that there was an enforceable debt against the father.

14. Mr. Y. G. Krishnamurthy contends on behalf of the appellant, that the 1st defendant gave evidence as D. W. 1 and purported to give evidence as to the origin or genesis of the guarantee. Learned Counsel seeks to draw support from the comment made by the District Judge on the evidence of D. W. 1. The District Judge observed that the 1st defendant was barely 17 years of age then and was obviously not present at the relevant time and his evidence as to the execution of the letter of guarantee is not creditworthy. But the inability of D. W. 1 to give cogent evidence of the transaction is immaterial as the 10th defendant himself admitted in O. S. No. 119 of 1956 that the letter was executed by him. The plaintiff's admission as P. W. 1 is also not without significance. It was clearly found that the letter and promissory note were parts of the same transaction. The inference drawn was that it was in consideration of the creditor's acceptance of the promissory note and his promise to stay his hand for some time, that the guarantee was given. We do not see any reason for rejecting the inference of fact which constitutes the basis for the finding of the lower appellate Court.

15. The appellant's Advocate relies on Section 127 of the Indian Contract Act, and urges that there was nothing done by the promisee for the benefit of the debtor contemporaneously with the surety's undertaking and the guarantee is, therefore, devoid of consideration. The answer to this is obvious. The circumstances of the case point to the strong probability of the truth of the case of the defendants 1 to 5. They pleaded that the creditor's forbearance was the quid pro quo for the guarantee. We are, as stated already, inclined to agree with the inference drawn by the lower appellate Court which was in concurrence with the view of the trial court. It is submitted that there is no definite finding of the District Judge about the creditor's forbearance. Granting this criticism to be well founded we have, even on our own appraisal of the evidence, no hesitation in finding that time was in fact given by the creditor. In this context, it is necessary to bear in mind that the two principal debtors and the two guarantors were, at the relevant time, trading as partners. And when the guarantors saw that their partners were under pressure of their creditor, they went to the rescue of their partners by guaranteeing the repayment, thereby obtaining a valuable respite to their partners. This was the basis of the plaint in O.S. No. 119 of 1956, a copy of which was tendered as additional evidence on behalf of the appellant.

We find no ground for the admission of the additional evidence, which, apart from other arguments against its reception at this stage, cuts at the root of the appellant's argument. The simultaneous execution of the promissory note and the guarantee letter, affords the clearest indication that they constituted a single transaction and the acceptance of the promissory note by the creditor was because of the inducement of the guarantee. The request of the guarantor is clearly implied in the delivery of the guarantee letter and the acceptance thereof by the creditor. It follows that at the desire of the guarantor, the creditor agreed to take the promissory note from filed Criminal Revisions Nos. 143 and 87 of 1968 respectively for quashing of the charges and the State has filed Criminal Revision No. 112 of 1968 against the order of discharge of K. K. In the result the petitions in Criminal Revisions Nos. 143 and 87 of 1968 are allowed and the charges framed against the petitioners are quashed. The petition in Criminal Revision No. 112 of 1968 is rejected.

Maniram Gunju, Petitioner v. The State of Assam, Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 159 of 1965, D/- 6-5-1969, against Judgment of Addl. S. J. L. A. D. Nowgong, D/- 28-9-1965.

Prohibition — Assam Liquor Prohibition Act (1 of 1953) (as amended in 1956 and 1963), Ss. 4, 3A (1963), 3A (1956) and 2 (3) — 'Liquor' — Offence under S. 4 for consuming liquor — Burden of proof — State of drunkenness established by prosecution — Presumption under S. 3A (1963) can be invoked — Presumption rebuttable — Accused not submitting any explanation — He must be held guilty of offence — Effect of introduction of S. 3A (1956) and S. 3A (1963) stated — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 106).

Section 3A as inserted in 1963 has introduced a rule of evidence by which a person who is found in a state of drunkenness shall be presumed to have consumed liquor within the prohibited area. This is, of course, a rebuttable presumption. Once the prosecution establishes by evidence to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused was found in a state of drunkenness, the prosecution can rely on the presumption and it is then up to the accused to rebut the presumption. Where the accused has not submitted any explanation, there is nothing wrong in invoking the presumption under S. 3A (1963) and the accused must be held to have consumed liquor within the prohibited area. Case law discussed.

Under the Act with the definition of 'liquor' as amended and introduction of S. 3A (1956) and in view of presumption under S. 3A (1963), S. 106 of Evidence Act may be justifiably called in aid to tackle such a case. If the accused was in a state of drunkenness showing signs and manifestations supporting that state, the prosecution will be at a great disadvantage to establish as to what particular things the accused had taken which led him to that state. It will be certainly especially within the knowledge of the accused as to what he had already taken for which he was found in that state by the witnesses. (Para 9)

Liquor under the definition includes all liquid consisting of or containing alcohol and at the same time toilet or medicinal preparations etc. containing alcohol which are unfit for use as intoxicating liquor are excluded from the definition separately under section 3A (1956). 'section 3A (1956) is not an exception, but has explained what liquid containing alcohol will be excluded from the general definition of liquor after the deletion of the Explanation. Section 3A (1956) clearly suggests that but for this exclusion the definition of liquor would include the articles mentioned in this section. Case law discussed. (Paras 4, 6)

Dealing with the prosecution for offences under Section 4 for violating the provisions of section 3 of the Assam Act, so far as import, transport or possession, selling, or buying or manufacture of liquor is concerned, the prosecution has to satisfy the Court that the liquor which is produced in Court is intoxicating liquor and contains alcohol and is not excluded by the provisions contained in Section 3A (1956). The onus is entirely on the prosecution to establish the offence, which includes proof of the incriminating article as liquor within the meaning of the Act and that the same is not unfit for use as intoxicating liquor, as described under Section 3A (1956). Mere introduction of section 3A (1956) separately under the Act after deletion of the explanation in the original definition would not have the effect of shifting the onus in this matter on the shoulders of the accused. However so far as the offence of consumption of liquor is concerned the position has become different after the introduction of S. 3A in 1963. (Para 8)

Case law discussed: Observation in AIR 1967 Assam 56 with regard to S. 3A (1963) that it is otiose and completely unnecessary, held obiter and not followed.

S. N. Bhuyan, for Petitioner; D. C.
Goswami as Public Prosecutor, for State.

GOSWAMI, J. :— This Criminal revision is directed against the petitioner's conviction under Section 4 of the Assam Liquor Prohibition Act, for consuming liquor in the prohibited area, and sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100/-, in default one month's rigorous imprisonment.

2. Briefly the prosecution case is that on the night of 22nd of March, 1964 at about 9 P. M. the accused petitioner was found in a drunken state at the platform of Jakhalabandha Railway Station. He was caught by the Excise staff and then produced before the Medical Officer at Silghat Dispensary, who examined him then and there, and found as follows:

- "(1) Smell of alcohol in breath found.
- (2) Conjunctiva congested.
- (3) Gait unsteady.
- (4) Speech incoherent."

In the opinion of the doctor, the accused took alcohol in sufficient quantity as to make him intoxicated.

3. The accused pleaded not guilty to the charge and stated that he did not take liquor. The learned Magistrate examined the doctor and two Excise officials. The accused did not adduce any evidence. The learned Magistrate relying on the evidence of the prosecution convicted the accused, and the learned Additional Sessions Judge on appeal affirmed the conviction.

4. The State Legislature of Assam passed the Assam Liquor Prohibition Act (Assam Act I of 1953), hereinafter called "the Act", in 1953. This Act has since been amended. The preamble of the Act shows that it was passed in order to prohibit consumption and manufacture of liquor in and smuggling thereof into the Sub-division of Barpeta and in other areas of the State as may be necessary from time to time. The Act has since been extended to other areas and it is not disputed that the place, where the offence is said to have been committed in this case, is within the prohibited area. This Act has since been amended by four successive Acts, namely, Assam Act XXXI of 1953, Assam Act XIII of 1956, Assam Act XIX of 1956 and Assam Act XI of 1963, and we will describe them hereinafter as the first, second, third and fourth amendment, respectively. The definition of liquor is given under Section 2 (3) and it has been amended under the second and third amendments. The third amendment besides deleting the Explanation inserted new Sections 3A, 3B and 3C. In the fourth amendment, inter alia, another Section 3A is added regarding presumption as to the State of drunkenness. Section 3A in this amendment is not numerically correct as there had already been a Section 3A introduced in the third amendment. We will, therefore, refer to this section as Section 3A (1963) and the earlier Section 3A as Section 3A (1956) to avoid confusion. The original definition of liquor under Section 2(3) runs as follows:

"'Liquor' means any intoxicating liquor and includes all liquid consisting of or containing alcohol, also tari and pachwai in any form and any substance which the State Government may, by notification, declare to be liquor for the purposes of this Act.

Explanation. — This definition shall not apply to any toilet preparation or medicine containing alcohol."

This definition as it stands after the amendments reads as follows:

"'Liquor' means any intoxicating liquor and includes all liquid consisting of or containing alcohol, also Tari containing alcohol and Pachwai in any form and any substance which the State Government may, by notification, declare to be liquor for the purpose of this Act.

Explanation. — Tari in an unfermented stage is not included within the term liquor and is exempted from the operation of this Act."

By the third amendment, as noted earlier, the following new sections were inserted:

"3A. Provisions of the Act not to apply to certain articles. — Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to apply to —

(1) Any toilet preparation containing alcohol which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor;

(2) Any medicinal preparation containing alcohol which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor;

(3) Any antiseptic preparation or solution containing alcohol which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor;

(4) Any flavouring extract, essence or syrup containing alcohol which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor."

3B. Board of Experts, — (1) For the purpose of determining whether any of the preparations mentioned in 3A is fit or likely to be used as intoxicating liquor the State Government shall constitute a Board of Experts.

(2) ** **

(3) It shall be the duty of the Board to advise the State Government on the question of whether any article or preparation containing alcohol is fit for use as intoxicating liquor and on such other matters incidental thereto as may be referred to it by the State Government.

3C. Restrictions on use of medicinal and toilet preparations. — On the advice of the Board constituted under Section 3A, the State Government may by notification in the official Gazette declare any such preparation to be liquor within the definition of the Act and thereupon the State Government may, notwithstanding anything contained in any other provision of the Act, impose such restriction and in such manner as may be prescribed.

By the fourth amendment, an important Section 3A has been introduced which we will, as stated earlier, describe as Section 3A (1963):

"3A. Presumption as the (sic) state of drunkenness. — Whenever any person is found in a state of drunkenness within a prohibited area, the Court shall presume that the person has consumed liquor within the prohibited area."

The result is that medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol which are unfit for use as intoxicating liquor, are excluded from the provisions of the Act. But if on the advice of the Board of Experts to the effect that such articles containing alcohol are fit for use as intoxicating liquor, the Government may declare such preparation to be liquor within the meaning of the Act and it may also impose such restrictions as may be necessary.

It is thus clear that liquor under the definition includes all liquid consisting of or containing alcohol and at the same time toilet or medicinal preparations etc. containing alcohol which are unfit for use as intoxicating liquor are excluded from the definition separately under Section 3A (1956).

Broadly speaking there are the following prohibitions under the Act which may be grouped under two categories. Firstly, no person shall import, transport, possess, sell or buy or manufacture liquor, use or keep any material for manufacture of liquor. These prohibitions are subject to condition for the issue of license under Section 21. The second category is that no person shall consume liquor except on a prescription from a registered medical practitioner. This prohibition is in terms conditional. Section 20 provides for permit for use or consumption of foreign liquor on certain conditions. So far as the first category is concerned, it is apparent that the liquor must be produced in court in order to satisfy it that what is produced is liquor within the meaning of the Act. To illustrate, prior to the third amendment, suppose some liquid is produced in Court as liquor by the prosecution, it has to establish that the liquid produced is intoxicating liquor or contained alcohol and that it is not toilet or medicinal preparations containing alcohol. After the third amendment also, prosecution has to establish in addition to the above that what is produced in Court is not toilet or medicinal preparation etc. containing alcohol which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor. Under Section 3C on the advice of the Board of Experts to the effect that such articles are fit for use as intoxicating liquor, Government may declare such toilet, medicinal or other preparations mentioned in Section 3A as liquor within the definition of the Act and impose such restrictions as may be prescribed. Our attention has not been drawn to any such declaration by the Government. Assuming there are some articles declared as liquor, the prohibitions of the Act will apply. But if there is no such declaration by the Government, it cannot be assumed that all such articles mentioned in Section 3A are unfit for use as intoxicating liquor in absence of proof to that effect. While dealing with the expression "unfit for use as intoxicating liquor" appearing in the Bombay Prohibition Act, in AIR 1962 SC 579, the Supreme Court observed as follows: (Naran Das's case)

"Again the preparation even if it is medicinal, toilet, antiseptic or flavouring must be unfit for use as intoxicating liquor i.e., it must be such that it must not be capable of being used for intoxication without danger to health. If the preparation, may be consumed for intoxication, it would still not attract the application of Sec. 24A provided the intoxication would not be accompanied by other harmful effects. A medicinal preparation which may, because of the high percentage of alcohol contained therein, even if taken in its ordinary or normal dose intoxicate a normal person, would be regarded as intoxicating liquor. The medicinal preparation containing a small percentage of alcohol may still be capable of intoxicating if taken in large quantities but if consumption of the preparation in large quantities is likely to involve danger to the health of the consumer, it cannot be regarded as fit for use as intoxicating liquor."

It will be useful to have a look at the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949, some of the provisions of which were declared invalid by the Supreme Court in Balsara's case, AIR 1951 SC 318. For example, unlike the definition of this term in the original Assam Act with the Explanation excluding toilet preparation or medicine containing alcohol, there was no such exclusion in the Bombay definition. Fazl Ali, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, summarised his conclusions as follows:

"In the result I declare the following provisions of the Act only to be invalid:

(1) Clause (c) of Section 12, so far as it affects the possession of liquid medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol.

(2) Clause (d) of Section 12, so far as it affects the selling or buying of such medicinal & toilet preparations containing alcohol.

(3) Clause (b) of Section 13, so far as it affects consumption or use of such medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol."

Section 2(24) of the Bombay Act, defines 'Liquor' as including

"(a) Spirit of wine, methylated spirits, wine, beer and toddy and liquids consisting of or containing liquor; and

(b) any other intoxicating substance which the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette declare to be liquor for the purposes of this Act."

The Act thereafter had to be amended by the Bombay Amendment Act, 26 of 1952, which added amongst others Section 24A, which without the two provisos in the Bombay Act corresponds to Section 3A of the Assam Act introduced by the third amendment. Another section was also introduced by the same amendment in the Bombay Act, namely Section 6A, of which Section 6A(1)(a), (b) and (c) materially correspond to Section 3B(1) of the Assam Act. Section 6A(2) materially corresponds to Section 3B(2) of the Assam Act. Section 6A(6) has two parts and the first part materially corresponds to Section 3B(3) and the second part in the Bombay Act introduces a presumption which is absent in Section 3C of the Assam Act.

In the above Naran Das's case, AIR 1962 SC 579 (Supra) while dealing with the burden of proof, the Supreme Court observed as follows:

"It was for the State to prove that the substance seized, if a medicinal preparation, was not unfit for use as intoxicating liquor. The State has even under the Prohibition Act to establish that the respondent has infringed the provisions contained in Sections 12 and 13" (which materially correspond to Section 3 of the Assam Act). "Undoubtedly by virtue of Section 24A, the prohibitions do not apply to certain categories of toilet, medicinal, antiseptic and flavouring preparations. Even if they contain alcohol but on that ground the burden lying upon the State to establish in any given case, in which it is alleged that the accused has infringed the provisions contained in Sections 12 and 13, that the infringement was not in respect of an article or preparation which was covered by Section 24A, is not shifted on to the shoulders of the accused. Section 24A is in substance not an exception. It takes out certain preparations from the prohibitions contained in Sections 12 and 13. But the operation of Section 24A does not extend to all medicinal toilet, antiseptic or flavouring preparations containing alcohol; even if the preparation is a toilet, medicinal, antiseptic or flavouring preparation, if it is fit for use as intoxicating liquor, the prohibitions contained in Sections 12 and 13 will apply."

To summarise, in view of the relevant provisions of the Bombay Prohibition Act, which we have noticed above, as they stood prior to the amendment of Section 6A(6) and insertion of sub-section (7) therein, by the Bombay Act 22 of 1960, the Supreme Court held that in a prosecution for offences for import and possession of liquor under Section 65(a)(1) and 66(b)(1) of the Bombay Act (which materially correspond to S. 4 of the Assam Act), the State had to prove that the substance seized, if a medicinal preparation, was not unfit for use as intoxicating liquor and that the accused had infringed the provisions contained in Sections 12 and 13.

In the next case reported in AIR 1966 SC 722, the same question came up for decision. After the amendment of Section 6A(6) and insertion of sub-section (7) therein, by Act 22 of 1960, the Supreme Court gave effect to the presumption raised under sub-section (7). Sub-section (7) of Section 6A of the Bombay Act reads as follows:

"Until the State Government has determined as aforesaid any article mentioned in sub-section (1) to be fit for use as intoxicating liquor, every other article shall be deemed to be unfit for such use."

The Supreme Court, therefore, found that by the amendment of Section 6A and by insertion of sub-section (7) therein, there remained only one mode of proof regarding an article which is fit for use as intoxicating liquor and that is by obtaining the advice of the Board of Experts and recording its determination that the article is fit for use as intoxicating liquor and until so determined, every article mentioned in sub-section (1) of Section 6A is to be deemed as unfit for use as intoxicating liquor. This presumption under Section 6(7), however, has been held to be rebuttable. After this amendment in the Bombay Act in 1960, therefore, there was no onus on the accused to establish that he has possessed or consumed medicinal or toilet preparation, which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor as he can now rely on the presumption under sub-section (7) in absence of a determination by the Government that the particular articles are fit for use as intoxicating liquor. The law as it stood after the amendment clearly enables the accused to rely on the presumption and unless it is rebutted by the prosecution, it will be deemed in law that a medicinal or toilet preparation possessed by the accused is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor, and in that view of the matter, the Supreme Court set aside the conviction of the accused in the above decision. The Supreme Court has noticed that the Bombay High Court in this case relied on the earlier decision of the Supreme Court in Naran Das's case, AIR 1962 SC 579 (Supra) having lost sight of the amendment of the Act in 1960, and indeed in the aforesaid case the effect of sub-section (7) of Section 6A did not fall to be considered. This is the position under the Bombay Act.

We may now read Section 3 of the Assam Act:

"3. Prohibition. No person shall —

(1) import, transport or possess liquor;

(2) sell or buy liquor;

(3) consume liquor except on a prescription from a registered medical practitioner;

(4) manufacture liquor; and

(5) use or keep any material, utensil, implement or apparatus whatsoever for manufacture of liquor."

Section 4 after the fourth amendment, omitting the proviso, which is not material for our purpose, stands as follows:—

"4. Punishment for contravention. Whoever contravenes the provisions of Section 3 of this Act, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years but not less than three months and also with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees but not less than one hundred rupees:

** ***"

5. The learned Counsel submits that even if it be assumed that the accused consumed liquor, there is no evidence to establish that he consumed prohibited alcohol. His submission is that although the definition of liquor has undergone a change, the insertion of a new Section 3A (1956) excludes some type of liquor from the definition and in that respect the effect of the original definition continues in force although in another place in the same Act. He further submits that the presumption under Section 3A (1963) cannot relieve the prosecution of the duty to establish the offence charged. In this context he draws our attention to a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Behram Khurshid Pesikaka v. State of

Bombay, reported in AIR 1955 SC 123, and relies on the following passage:—

"The High Court was in error in placing the onus on the accused to prove that he had consumed alcohol that could be consumed without a permit merely on proof that he was smelling of alcohol. In our judgment, that was not the correct approach to the question. The bare circumstance that a citizen accused of an offence under Section 66(b) is smelling of alcohol is compatible both with his innocence as well as his guilt. It is a neutral circumstance. The smell of alcohol may be due to the fact that the accused had contravened the enforceable part of Section 13 (b) of the Prohibition Act. It may well be due also to the fact that he had taken alcohol which fell under the unenforceable and inoperative part of the section. That being so, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the alcohol of which he was smelling was such that it came within the category of prohibited alcohols and the onus was not discharged or shifted by merely proving a smell of alcohol."

We should also read the following passage in the same decision:

"The onus thus cast on the prosecution may be light or heavy according to the circumstances of each case. The intensity of the smell itself may be such that it may negative its being of a permissible variety. Expert evidence may prove that consumption in small dose of medicinal or other preparations permitted cannot produce the smell or a state of body or mind amounting to drunkenness. Be that as it may, the question is one of fact, to be decided according to the circumstance of each case. It is open to the accused to prove in defence that what he consumed was not prohibited alcohol, but failure of the defence to prove it cannot lead to his conviction unless it is established to the satisfaction of the judge by the prosecution that the case comes within the enforceable part of Section 13(b), contravention of which alone, is made an offence under the provisions of Section 66 of the Bombay Prohibition Act."

Counsel also relies upon a decision of a Single Bench of this Court, in the case of Harendra Nath Das v. State of Assam, reported in AIR 1967 Assam and Nagaland, 56. As seen from the original records of the case, the date of offence in this case was 21-8-61. Nayudu, C. J. relying upon the above mentioned Supreme Court decision and also the decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in the case of Madiga Boosenna, reported in AIR 1964 Andh Pra 429, held as follows:

"Having regard to the merits of the case, as none of the scientific methods open to the prosecution to follow had been adopted, they lost the opportunity of proving that liquor was present in the stomach contents of the petitioner or it got itself transferred into the urine and blood of the petitioner."

"Having regard to the evidence in this case of the doctor who admits that symptoms are consistent with the conclusion that these have been produced by reason of the accused having taken some medicine containing alcohol, the doubt which exists has remained unresolved and the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt".

Referring to the presumption under Section 3A (1963), the learned Chief Justice further observed:—

"When the question is whether a person has taken liquor, to say that he should be presumed to have taken liquor because he was in a drunken state seems to be meaningless, as it would amount to a sort of argument in a circle. This is particularly so when the meaning of the word 'state of drunkenness' is not defined in the Act. If it is proved that a man is in a state of drunkenness, it amounts to a proof that he has taken liquor and there is no more necessity of invoking the presumption of the Amending Act. This amendment, in my opinion, becomes otiose and completely unnecessary. Further, if the invoking of this presumption under Section 3A of the Amending Act may be regarded as inescapable, then it would amount to countering the well known principle of criminal jurisprudence that the burden of proving the guilt of the accused in the case is on the prosecution and continues to be so until the guilt is established."

In Harendra Das's case, AIR 1967 Assam 56 (supra), the accused being found within a prohibited area exhibiting symptoms of a person who had taken liquor was charged and convicted under Section 4 for contravention of Section 3(3) of the Act. As noted earlier, the offence was committed on 21-8-61, that is, prior to the fourth amendment introducing a rule of presumption under Section 3A (1963). It was, therefore, not necessary in this case to consider the effect of Section 3A (1963). On the admission of the doctor in that case that the symptoms exhibited by the accused were consistent with taking of some medicine containing alcohol, the accused was entitled to an acquittal since the question of raising the presumption under Section 3A (1963) did not at all arise. The observations of the learned Chief Justice with regard to Section 3A (1963) are, therefore, mere obiter, and as will show hereinbelow that we are unable, with respect, to agree with the same.

6. Since the learned Counsel strenuously relies on Harendra Das's case, AIR 1967 Assam 56 (supra), even for the purpose of dealing with the present case, which arose after the fourth amendment, we have to give our views on the two above-quoted points that were dealt with by the learned Chief Justice and also pressed before us. Firstly, the learned counsel submits that the legal position has not been altered by Section 3A (1963) and that we should agree with the decision in Harendra Das's case, AIR 1967 Assam 56 (supra) even in the present case. It is clear that Section 3A (1963) has definitely introduced a rule of evidence by which a person who is found in a state of drunkenness shall be presumed to have consumed liquor within the prohibited area. This is, of course, a rebuttable presumption. Once the prosecution establishes by evidence to the satisfaction of the court that the accused was found in a state of drunkenness, the prosecution can rely on the presumption and it is then up to the accused to rebut the presumption. We are unable to agree, with respect, with the learned Chief Justice when he observed that Section 3A (1963) is "otiose and completely unnecessary." This section was introduced in 1963 in the wake of the third amendment whereby the Explanation in the definition of liquor was deleted and new Sections 3A (1956), 3B and 3C were added. Although the Explanation was deleted, the addition of Section 3A (1956) served the same object, which had earlier been fulfilled by the Explanation. The Explanation in the definition made the provision prima facie immune from such constitutional objections as were raised against the provisions of the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949. Section 3A (1956) is not an exception, but has explained what liquid containing alcohol will be excluded from the general definition of liquor after the deletion of the Explanation. Section 3A (1956) clearly suggests that but for this exclusion, the definition of liquor would include the articles mentioned in this section. With regard to a case prior to the fourth amendment, the Act has defined the offence, viz., as consumption of liquor without a prescription from a registered medical practitioner. Prosecution is required under the law to establish the ingredients of the offence, that is to say, that the accused has consumed liquor and not one of the articles excluded under Section 3A (1956). Since section 3A (1956) is not an exception, there is no onus on the accused to prove that he comes under the exception. It is for the prosecution to prove that what the accused has consumed is liquor and that it does not come under the category of the articles mentioned in Section 3A (1956). The above would be the pos-tion as the law stood prior to the fourth amendment. But after the introduction of Section 3A (1963) when the accused is proved to be found in a state of drunkenness within the prohibited area, the prosecution is relieved from further establishing that he has consumed liquor. By force of the presumption, prosecution establishes that the accused consumed liquor and it is open to the accused to rebut the presumption and satisfy the Court that what he has consumed is under a prescription from a registered medical practitioner or that he has consumed one of the articles mentioned under Section 3A (1956) which is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor. It, therefore, follows that Section 3A (1963) is a necessary provision to achieve the object of the Act in tackling the cases of consumption of liquor, within the prohibited area when people are found in a state of drunkenness, since it may be highly inconvenient and difficult, if not impossible, for the prosecution to establish what sort of liquor the accused has consumed earlier, a matter which may be said to be specially within the knowledge of the accused alone.

Secondly, in a case where the accused is charged for consumption of liquor on the allegation that he is found in a state of drunkenness within the prohibited area, there is no legal obligation to resort to any chemical test of his stomach contents to discover whether there is any alcohol present or if possible to find out what type of liquor the accused has consumed. The presumption under Section 3A (1963) shifts the onus in this respect to the accused and although the onus may be heavy or light in the circumstances of each case, it is for the accused to rebut the same to the satisfaction of the Court. The decision of the Supreme Court in Behram Khurshid's case, AIR 1955 SC 123 (supra), on which Harendra Das's case was based, was with regard to an offence for consumption of liquor after the decision in Balsara's case, AIR 1951 SC 318 (supra) and which was sought to be established from smell of liquor in absence of a rule of presumption in the Bombay Act, such as we find under Section 3A (1963) in the Assam Act. The ratio decidendi in Behram's case, AIR 1955 SC 123 on this aspect of the matter, with all respect, will not apply to the present case as the presence of section 3A (1963) makes all the difference.

For the reasons given above, with respect, we disagree with the observations of the learned Chief Justice in Harendra Das's case, AIR 1967 Assam 56 on the two points mentioned above.

7. The presumption under Section 3A (1963) of the Act is a rebuttable presumption. The Court shall presume that a person who is found in a state of drunkenness within a prohibited area has consumed liquor within the same area. This does not, however, mean that the accused is deprived of an opportunity to show that the state of drunkenness, which is deposed to by the witnesses, is either not true or real or that the condition under which he was found was a result of taking something other than liquor. The burden on the prosecution to prove that the accused was found in a state of drunkenness never shifts and it is only when that is established to the satisfaction of the Court that the question of presumption under Section 3A (1963) arises, and when that stage is reached, in absence of an explanation from the accused, the Court will be justified in finding him guilty under the charge. The burden which the accused has to discharge in such a case is not as heavy as that of the prosecution. He has to make out a prima facie case to rebut the presumption.

8. To summarise, dealing with the prosecution for offences under Section 4 for violating the provisions of Section 3 of the Assam Act, so far as import, transport or possession, selling, or buying or manufacture of liquor, of the first category mentioned earlier, is concerned, the prosecution has to satisfy the Court that the liquor which is produced in Court is intoxicating liquor and contains alcohol and is not excluded by the provisions contained in Section 3A (1956). So far as the first category of offences mentioned above, there is no onus on the accused whatsoever, as the law stands now after the fourth amendment, to establish that liquor for import, transport or possession, selling or buying and manufacture of liquor of which he may be charged, is unfit for use as intoxicating liquor. The onus is entirely on the prosecution to establish the offence, which includes proof of the incriminating article as liquor within the meaning of the Act and that the same is not unfit for use as intoxicating liquor, as described under Section 3A (1956). Mere introduction of Section 3A (1956) separately under the Act after deletion of the explanation in the original definition would not have the effect of shifting the onus in this matter on the shoulders of the accused.

So far, however, the aforesaid second category of offence is concerned, namely consumption of liquor, the position has become different after the fourth amendment, as has been earlier noted.

9. While dealing with the above submissions we may only like to notice the provisions of Sections 105 and 106 of the Evidence Act, which read as follows:

"105. When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the court shall presume the absence of such circumstances."

"106. When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him."

In a case under the present Act, with the definition as amended and introduction of Section 3A (1956) and in view of the presumption under Section 3A (1963), Section 106 of the Evidence Act may be justifiably called in aid to tackle a case involved in this revision petition. If the accused, as has been held by the courts below, was in a state of drunkenness showing signs and manifestations supporting that state, the prosecution will be at a great disadvantage to establish as to what particular things the accused had taken which led him to that state. It will be certainly especially within the knowledge of the accused as to what he had already taken for which he was found in that state by the witnesses.

Dealing with S. 106 of the Evidence Act the Supreme Court in the case of Shambhu Nath Mehra v. The State of Ajmer, reported in AIR 1956 SC 404, observed as follows:

"Section 106 is an exception to Section 101. The latter with its illustration (a) lays down the general rule that in a criminal case the burden of proof is on the prosecution and Section 106 is certainly not intended to relieve it of that duty. On the contrary, it is designed to meet certain exceptional cases in which it would be impossible, or at any rate disproportionately difficult, for the prosecution to establish facts which are "especially" within the knowledge of the accused and which he could prove without difficulty or inconvenience. The word "especially" stresses that, it means facts that are pre-eminently or exceptionally within his knowledge."

This does not, however, mean that the burden shifts from the prosecution to the accused, but the latter has to satisfy the Court in order to rebut the presumption against him which the Court will be authorised to draw under Section 3A (1963).

10. The learned Counsel for the petitioner at one stage submitted that this will be doing violence to the well-settled principles of criminal jurisprudence. We are, however, not impressed with that argument. In Bailey v. Alabama, (1910) 55 Law Ed 191 (A) at p. 200, Hughes, J., who delivered the opinion of the Court, made the following observations:

"This Court has frequently recognised the general power of every Legislature to prescribe the evidence which shall be received, and the effect of that evidence, in the Courts of its own Government In the exercise of this power numerous statutes have been enacted providing that proof of one fact shall be prima facie evidence of the main fact in issue; and where the inference is not purely arbitrary, and there is a rational relation between the two facts, and the accused is not deprived of a proper opportunity to submit all the facts bearing upon the issue, it has been held that such statutes do not violate the requirements of due process of law, or a denial of the equal protection of the law."

In another case, — Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co v. Turnipseed, (1910) 55 Law Ed 78 at p. 80, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the same principle and held as follows:

"If a legislative provision not unreasonable in itself, prescribing a rule of evidence, in either criminal or civil cases, does not shut out from the party affected a reasonable opportunity to submit to the jury in his defence all of the facts bearing upon the issue, there is no ground for holding that due process of law has been denied to him."

We are clearly of the opinion that there is nothing wrong in invoking the presumption under Section 3A in the particular circumstances of the case and in absence of any explanation from the accused, we are satisfied that the evidence establishes a state of drunkenness of the accused and the conviction under Section 4 of the Act is fully justified.

11. Mr. Bhuyan also drew our attention to an unreported decision of my learned brother Pathak, J. in Criminal Revision No. 65 of 1965, disposed of on 29-2-1968. It was held in that case that the state of drunkenness was not proved by the prosecution in order to enable them to avail of the presumption under Section 3A. This decision does not assist the learned counsel in throwing out the presumption, when the state of drunkenness is established by the prosecution and the accused has not submitted any explanation. His Lordship was not prepared to hold from the outward symptoms found in that case that the state of drunkenness was established.

The learned Counsel also referred to another unreported decision of mine in Criminal Revision No. 170 of 1964, disposed of on 2-8-1967. That was a case in which the accused was a tea-stall owner and was charged for possession of liquor which was found in the dregs of one or two glass tumblers of his tea-stall. There was no question of presumption under Section 3A (1963) in that case and this Court was not prepared to hold that the accused, on the state of evidence, as disclosed, could be guilty of possession of liquor. In the instant case, it cannot be said that from the evidence of the three prosecution witnesses including the doctor, the Courts below erred in law in holding that the accused was found in a state of drunkenness on the Railway Platform at Jakhlabandha Railway Station which is within the prohibited area. According to the doctor, he found in the breath of the accused smell of liquor, his conjunctiva was congested, gait unsteady and speech incoherent. According to him, he took sufficient quantity of alcohol. The doctor stated in cross-examination that the accused was very unsteady and that degree of unsteadiness cannot come when one becomes tired. He also stated that if an alcoholic tonic is taken to the extent of 2/3 bottles, a man can become unsteady. P. W. 2 also stated that he found the accused in a drunken state. The third witness also stated that he found the accused in a drunken state. The accused was not normal and his mode of speaking was also not normal. It is, therefore, clear from the prosecution evidence and particularly from the evidence of the doctor that the accused was in a state of drunkenness and that being so, he must be held to have consumed liquor within the prohibited area in absence of any explanation from him.

12. In the result, the conviction as well as the sentence are upheld and the petition is dismissed.

13. M. C. PATHAK, J. :— I agree.
Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 ASSAM & NAGALAND 57 (V 57 C 11)

P. K. GOSWAMI AND M. C. PATHAK, JJ.
Narayan Das, Petitioner v. Deputy Commissioner of Darrang Tezpur and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 261 of 1968, D/- 1-7-1969.

Constitution of India, Art. 311 — Applicability — Does not apply where appointment is by incompetent authority.

Article 311 is attracted in the case of a person who holds a civil post under the Union or a State. This holding of a civil post must at least be prima facie legal. If a person is appointed to a Government post by a competent authority, and removed therefrom it may attract the provisions of Article 311 in appropriate cases. But if a person is found to have been appointed in Government service by an authority who had no power or jurisdiction to make such an appointment and on whom the Government has not delegated any such power of appointment, the person so appointed cannot be said to have held a post under the State Government which might attract the provisions of Article 311, even though that person might be functioning for the period from his appointment till he is removed, his initial appointment being without jurisdiction and without any authority.

(Para 8)

J. P. Bhattacharjee and S. N. Medhi, for Petitioner; A. M. Majumdar Jr. Govt. Advocate, for Respondents.

PATHAK, J. :— By this writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, the petitioner has challenged the order dated 20-7-68 passed by the Deputy Commissioner, Darrang, by which the order dated 14-7-68 passed by the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Darrang, appointing the petitioner a Gaonbura of village Chengelimora in the Barbhagia Mouza in place of Bangshidhar Das Gaonbura, Respondent No. 4, has been set aside.

2. The petitioner's case is that respondent no. 4 Bangshidhar Das was the Gaonbura of Chengelimora village who filed a petition on 6-5-67 before the Sub-Deputy Collector of Naduar Circle through the Mouzadar of Barbhagia Mouza stating inter alia that he had become unable to act as gaonbura and as such the said post might be offered to his eldest son, Liladhar Das and therefore the petitioner filed a petition on 18-5-67 before the Deputy Commissioner, Darrang, praying for his appointment as gaonbura of Chengelimora village in place of the gaonbura who was going to retire from service. On 3-7-67 the petitioner filed another petition before the Deputy Commissioner of Darrang alleging inter alia that Liladhar Das, the son of respondent no. 4, was a minor and that the people in the locality filed a petition praying for the appointment of the petitioner as the gaonbura. This petition was sent to the Sub-Deputy Collector, Naduar Circle for enquiry and report. Thereafter the Sub-Deputy Collector made necessary enquiry and submitted his report to the Additional Deputy Commissioner, who by his order dated 14-7-67 relieved respondent no. 4 from the office of the Gaonbura of Chengelimora village and appointed the petitioner as the new gaonbura and accordingly a sanad was issued to the petitioner by the Additional Deputy Commissioner. The petitioner was performing the duties of gaonbura since the date of his appointment. Thereafter he was served with a copy of the order dated 20-7-68 passed by the Deputy Commissioner whereby the order of the Additional Deputy Commissioner appointing the petitioner as gaonbura accepting the resignation of respondent no. 4 and relieving him from the said office was cancelled and gaonburaship of respondent no. 4 was restored. The petitioner has challenged this order of the Deputy Commissioner.

3. Mr. J. P. Bhattacharjee, the learned counsel appearing for the petitioner, has submitted that the petitioner who was appointed a gaonbura was holding a post under the State Government and he could not be removed without following the procedure laid down in Article 311 of the Constitution and as such the impugned order dated 20-7-68 passed by the Deputy Commissioner was bad in law. The learned counsel further submitted that the appointment of the petitioner as gaonbura was under the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, and as such the powers that were vested in the Deputy Commissioner could be exercised by the Additional Deputy Commissioner inasmuch as the expression "Deputy Commissioner" included 'Additional Deputy Commissioner' as defined under Section 3(m) of the said Regulation. In the premises, the learned counsel submitted that the removal of the petitioner from the post of gaonburaship offended Article 311 of the Constitution of India.

4. Mr. A. M. Majumdar, the learned Junior Government Advocate, on the other hand, submitted that the appointment of a gaonbura was made by the Deputy Commissioner under Executive Instructions 162 and 163 and this was not made under any provision of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, that in appointing a gaonbura the executive power of the State Government was exercised by the Deputy Commissioner as delegated under Executive Instructions 162 and 163 and as such the appointment of the petitioner by the Additional Deputy Commissioner was without jurisdiction and it was no appointment in the eye of law and the petitioner could not be said to hold the post under the State Government inasmuch as he was not appointed by any authority on whom the executive power of the State Government regarding the appointment of gaonbura was vested. On that basis, the learned Junior Government Advocate submitted that the petitioner was not entitled to any protection under Article 311 of the Constitution of India.

5. The controversy therefore boils down to the question whether the petitioner can be said to have held a post under the State Government from which he was removed or discharged without following the provisions of Article 311 of the Constitution.

6. Gaonburas are appointed under the Executive Instructions 162 and 163 which are in the following terms:

"162. Gaonburas are appointed by the Deputy Commissioner. In the case of a vacancy, the Deputy Commissioner shall take into consideration (a) the claims of the family of the late gaonbura, (b) the wishes of the villagers and (c) the views of the mausadar, and shall appoint the person whom he considers most suitable for the post.

In charges consisting entirely of nisf-khiraj or lakhiraj estates the nomination of the gaonburas shall rest with the properties unless the nominee is plainly unfit.

The Deputy Commissioner may dismiss a gaonbura from office after recording his reasons in writing.

163. Appointment of gaonburas shall be marked by the grant, under the Deputy Commissioner's signature of a parchment sanad. On the death or dismissal of a gaonbura the sanad should be returned to the Deputy Commissioner's office for cancellation."

7. From the above two Executive Instructions, it is quite clear that the power of appointing a gaonbura has been vested in the Deputy Commissioner and not in any other authority. The appointment is not under any provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and as such the definition of the 'Deputy Commissioner' laid down in Section 3(m) of the Regulation could not come to the aid of the petitioner. That the power of appointing a gaonbura vested at the relevant time only on the Deputy Commissioner is also confirmed by the subsequent Government Notification No. RLR: 68/65/83 dated 23rd September 1968, by which the provisions of the Executive Instructions 162, 163 and 167 have been amended by introducing Executive Instruction 163A, which runs as follows:

"For the purpose of the Executive Instructions 162, 163 and 167, the term "Deputy Commissioner" includes "Additional Deputy Commissioner" also.

Note: There should be specific allocation of works between Deputy Commissioner and Additional Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner should specify the works to be done by the Additional Deputy Commissioner."

The order appointing the petitioner was passed by the Additional Deputy Commissioner on 14-7-67. Hence, at that time the Additional Deputy Commissioner was not invested with the power of appointing gaonburas. In the circumstances, it must be held that the appointment of the petitioner as gaonbura on 14-7-67 and the issue of the sanad to the petitioner on 14-7-67 by the Additional Deputy Commissioner was without any authority and it had no existence in the eye of law.

8. The learned counsel for the petitioner, however, submitted that from 14-7-67 till 20-7-68. the petitioner was functioning as the gaonbura and, therefore, he must be deemed to have held the post under the State Government and in that view Article 311 was attracted in the instant case and since there had been no compliance with the provisions of Article 311 in the matter, the impugned order of the Deputy Commissioner should be quashed. Article 311 is attracted in the case of a person who holds a civil post under the Union or a State. This holding of a civil post must at least be prima facie legal. In other words, if a person is appointed to a Government post by a competent authority, and removed therefrom it may attract the provisions of Article 311 in appropriate cases. But if a person is found to have been appointed in Government service by an authority who had no power or jurisdiction to make such an appointment and on whom the Government has not delegated any such power of appointment, the person so appointed cannot be said to have held a post under the State Government which might attract the provisions of Article 311. In the instant case the admitted position is that the petitioner was appointed a gaonbura and he was given the sanad by the Additional Deputy Commissioner, who had no jurisdiction to do so and who was not authorised by the State Government to exercise that power by any general or special order or by any Executive Instruction at the relevant time. That being the position, even though the petitioner might be functioning as the gaonbura for the said period, his initial appointment being without jurisdiction and without any authority, he cannot be deemed to be holding a post under the State Government. The petitioner was at the most an impostor to the office of the gaonbura. That being the position, the Deputy Commissioner while setting aside the order of the Additional Deputy Commissioner dated 14-7-67 was not required to follow the procedure laid down in Article 311 of the Constitution of India. After all, the remedy under Article 226 of the Constitution of India is a discretionary remedy and when the petitioner claims it under Article 226, he must satisfy the Court at least prima facie that he was appointed by an authority having jurisdiction to do so, which he failed to do in this case.

9. In the circumstances, we hold that the petitioner is not entitled to any remedy in this petition. The petition is dismissed. The Rule is discharged. We make no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

Second Appeal No. 34 of 1964, D/- 23-8-1967, from decision of Sub-J. Upper Assam Dist. at Jorhat, D/- 18-1-1964.

(A) Houses and Rents — Assam Urban Areas Rent Control Act (3 of 1956), S. 6 (1)(e) and (4) — Deposit by tenant not conforming to requirements of statute — Deposit held to be irregular — Finding that benefit of S. 6(4) is not available to tenant and therefore he cannot be treated as defaulter under S. 6(1)(e) proviso — Finding is on question of fact and is binding on second appellate court — (Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 100-101).

(Para 4)

(B) Houses and Rents — Assam Urban Areas Rent Control Act (3 of 1956), Ss. 9, 6 — Scope of S. 9 — Deposit of rent made under S. 6(4) — Notice by Court to landlord to withdraw the same — There is no right of appeal under S. 9 — Because of non-filing of appeal, landlord in subsequent proceeding is not debarred from taking the plea of non-compliance with S. 6 (4) — S. A. No. 165 of 1962 D/- 15-2-1966 (Assam) Overruled.

S. 9 pre-supposes the existence of a decision or order, against which alone the appeal could be preferred. Unless there is a decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction or order passed by it pursuant to that decision, no appeal could be preferred as there is nothing which could be challenged in the appeal. Thus, when S. 9 refers to S. 6, the obvious reference is to the giving of the decision and the making of the order under Section 6(3), which alone provides for the same. If an order is made under Section 6(3) of the Act and it is not challenged by way of an appeal, that order becomes final and cannot be challenged. But that cannot, apply to any action taken under Section 6(4) which only contemplates that when a deposit is made by the tenant of the rent said to be due from him, the Court is bound to issue a notice to the landlord and permit him to withdraw the same. In the case of deposit of rent made under S. 6(4), there is no right of appeal under S. 9 and there is, therefore, no question of any legal consequence following the non-filing of an appeal by landlord under S. 9. Thus, omission to prefer such appeal does not preclude the landlord from contending in subsequent proceeding that there has been non-compliance with S. 6(4) and that the tenant is a defaulter. S. A. No. 165 of 1962, D/- 15-2-1966 (Assam) Overruled. (Para 5)

D. C. Goswami, for Appellants; J. K. Barua, for Respondents.

NAYUDU, C. J. :— This reference has come before us as correctness of a Division Bench decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 165 of 1962 had to be examined.

2. The second appeal in question has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs, respondents herein, for ejectment and for recovery of rent and compensation. It was claimed by the plaintiffs that the defendants are liable to ejectment on the ground that they did not deposit the amounts of rent accruing regularly or in time and they continued to occupy the house against the wishes of the plaintiffs.

3. The plaint itself is not sufficiently clear as to the exact nature of the default although in the Schedule (b) of the plaint compensation is claimed on the basis of rent for the period from 8th June to 31st December, 1960 and thereafter at Rs. 2/- per day independent of the term of the tenancy. The defendants, appellants herein, contended that they offered rent to the plaintiffs as and when it fell due but the plaintiffs deferred to receive the rent on the ground that they were in mourning on account of the death of the father of the defendants (sic) and that they would receive the rent later. In a similar way the plaintiffs refused to receive rent for the second and the third month following although the rent was tendered, and when the rent was tendered for the third month the plaintiffs apparently demanded rent at the rate of Rs. 60 per month, which is an enhanced rent because the rent as per tenancy was Rs. 30 per month.

The defendants then realised for the first time that the plaintiffs duped them by making them believe that their inability to receive the rent was due to their state of mourning. Then the defendants started depositing the rent into the Court and claimed that they had not committed any default and therefore they are not liable to ejectment under the provisions of the Assam Urban Areas Rent Control Act, 1955 (Assam Act III of 1956), hereinafter referred to as the Act. It would be useful to refer to the relevant provisions of the Act in this connection. Section 6 contains the bar against passing and execution of decree and orders for ejection. Section 6(1) is as follows:

"6(1) No order or decree for the recovery of possession of any house shall be made or executed by any Court so long as the tenant pays rent to the full extent allowable under this Act and performs the conditions of the tenancy;

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply in a suit or proceedings for eviction of the tenant from the house:

x x x x x x
(e) where the tenant has not paid the rent lawfully due from him in respect of the house;"

Section 6(4) is as follows:

"6(4). Where the landlord refuses to accept the lawful rent offered by his tenant, the tenant may, within a fortnight of its becoming due, deposit in Court the amount of such rent together with process-fees for service of notice upon the landlord, and on receiving such deposit, the Court shall cause a notice of the receipt of such deposit to be served on the landlord, and the amount of the deposit may thereafter be withdrawn by the landlord on application made by him to the Court in that behalf. A tenant who has made such deposit shall not be treated as a defaulter under clause (e) of the proviso to sub-section (1) of this section."

4. The question, therefore, that came to be considered by the courts below was whether the defendants were in default of the payment of rent or whether they had paid the rent in time as prescribed. On this question, the trial court on a careful examination of the materials placed before it came to the conclusion that the rent allowable under the Act was not regularly deposited as seen from the records of the four miscellaneous cases referred to in the judgment. It was found that the rent for November and December 1960 was deposited only on 4-1-61, the rent for January, February and March, 1961 was deposited on 21-4-61 and the rent for April and May, 1961 was deposited on 5-6-61. In view of the timings at which the deposits were made, the trial court held that the tenants were not entitled to the benefit of Section 6(4) of the Act. This finding has been confirmed by the lower appellate court which found that the defendants were defaulters as they had not paid the rent to the full extent and within the time allowed. This is what is observed by the lower appellate court:

"Admittedly, the defendants have not deposited rent in Court month by month but they deposited rent for 2 months or 3 months together which is quite apparent from the Misc. cases by which the defendants deposited rent in Court and Misc. Case No. 18/61 reveals that the defendants deposited rent in Court for the months of April and May, 1961 on 5-6-61."

Accordingly that Court held that under the provisions of Section 6(4) of the Act the defendants should have deposited the rent for the month of April, 1961 on or before the 15th of May, 1961 and not later. That the period prescribed for the deposit of rent is a fortnight as laid down in Section 6(4), quoted above. We are, therefore, satisfied that both the courts below were correct in their finding that there has been an irregularity in the deposit of rent made by the defendants as the deposits did not conform to the requirements of the statute. Hence the view taken by the courts below that the benefit of Section 6(4) is not available to the defendants and that they, therefore, cannot claim that they shall not be treated as defaulters under clause (e) of the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 6 of the Act, is apparently on the question of fact which is undoubtedly binding on a second appellate Court.

5. Another point that requires to be considered is whether, as already pointed out, the judgment of the Division Bench of this Court can be said to be correct. This decision was given in Second Appeal No. 165 of 1962 on 15-2-66 (Assam) (unreported). In that decision, the question that came to be considered was whether it would be open to a landlord who had not preferred an appeal under Section 9 of the Act, when a notice of deposit of rent under Section 6(4) had been given to him, to contend that the defendants were defaulters and whether that question could be gone into, and the learned Judges constituting the Bench held that the omission to file an appeal under Section 9 precluded the landlord from contending that there has been non-compliance with the provisions of Section 6(4). We have examined this case carefully and heard the learned Counsel on the point and with respect we feel that this case has not been correctly decided. Section 9 of the Act is as follows:

"9. Appeals — A landlord or a tenant aggrieved by any decision or order of the Court under the provision of Sections 4, 5, 6 and 8(2) of this Act shall have a right of appeal against the same as if such decision or order were a decree in a suit for ejectment of the tenant from the house and such appellate court's decision shall be final."

This section presupposes the existence of a decision or order, against which alone the appeal could be preferred. It is common knowledge that unless there is a decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction or order passed by it pursuant to that decision, no appeal could be preferred as there is nothing which could be challenged in the appeal. In the instant case, when Section 9 refers to Section 6, the obvious reference is to the giving of the decision and the making of the order under Section 6(3), which alone provides for the same. If an order is made under Section 6(3) of the Act and it is not challenged by way of an appeal, that order becomes final and cannot be challenged. But that cannot, in our opinion, apply to any action taken under Section 6(4) which only contemplates that when a deposit is made by the tenant of the rent said to be due from him, the Court is bound to issue a notice to the landlord and permit him to withdraw the same. We are clearly of opinion that in the case of deposit of rent made under Section 6(4), there is no right of appeal under Section 9 and there is, therefore, no question of any legal consequence following from the non-filing of an appeal under Section 9.

6. The reference is accepted and the second appeal is dismissed, but in the circumstances we make no order as to costs. The appellants are allowed four months time from this day to vacate and hand over the house to the respondents.

Reference accepted and second appeal dismissed.

Maud Tea and Seed Co., Ltd. and another, Petitioners v. Agricultural Income Tax Officer, Shillong and others, Respondents.

Civil Rules Nos. 81 to 89 of 1965, D/- 9-2-1968.

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 59—Validity — Provisions do not suffer from vice of excessive delegation — Rule 24 framed in pursuance of that power is also not ultra vires.

Section 59 of the Income-tax Act and Rule 24 of the Income-tax Rules do not suffer from vice of excessive delegation and are not ultra vires. Section 59 laid down the policy of the Legislature in clear terms, namely, the ascertainment and determination of any class of income and provided particularly for prescribing the manner in which and the procedure by which the income, profits and gains shall be arrived at in the case of incomes derived in part from agriculture and in part from business. The Legislature has indicated in Section 59(3) the circumstances in which the rule like Rule 24 could be framed. The object and the policy and the circumstances in which the rules have to be framed have all been set out in Section 59(3) and what was left to the Executive, in the Central Board of Revenue, was to work out the details of the proportion which Rule 24 has provided.

These are matters of detail which it is more convenient and proper to be left to the Executive to determine, and it is in accordance with the policy indicated, that Rule 24 of the Indian Income tax Rules had been framed providing for the income derived from the sale of tea, grown and manufactured by the seller in the taxable territories to be computed as if it were income derived from business, and 40 per cent of such income shall be deemed to be income, profits and gains liable to tax. What portion of the income is derived from agriculture in the matter of tea grown and what portion should be business income for the purpose of the Income-tax Act is a matter of detail which could only be effectively determined by the Executive, and Rule 24 lays down that the entire income derived from the growth and manufacture of tea is to be treated as if it were business income and 49 per cent thereof should be liable to income-tax assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. AIR 1963 SC 760, Rel. on. (Para 22)

(B) Constitution of India, Arts. 245 and 246 — Delegation of legislative powers — Principles.

It is not unconstitutional for the Legislature to leave it to the Executive to determine details relating to the working out of the taxation laws, such as the selection of persons on whom the tax is to be laid, the rates at which it is to be charged in respect of different classes of goods, and the like. S. M. Lahiri, S. K. Ghose, N. M. Lahiri, J. P. Bhattacharjee, S. N. Medhi and D. C. Goswami, for Petitioners; B. C. Barua, Advocate-General, G. K. Talukdar, Senior Govt. Advocate, for Respondents.

SANJEEVA ROW NAYUDU C. J. : In all these Civil Rules, the petitioners are the Maud Tea & Seed Company Limited, Calcutta, and its Director. In the petitioners' tea garden, tea bushes are grown and maintained and tea leaves are plucked from them and then carried to the factory maintained by the petitioners' estate for the purpose of being put through a manufacturing process, at the end of which the tea fit for marketing is produced. The income derived by the sale of the manufactured tea, therefore, comprises partly of the income derived from the agricultural produce and partly by the manufacturing process through which the tea leaves are put to until they reach the final shape and sold as tea in the market. The petitioners were charged to income-tax on the forty per cent of the income and to agricultural income-tax under the Assam Agricultural Income-tax Act, 1939 (Act IX of 1939), hereinafter referred to as the Assam Act, in respect of the balance of income of sixty per cent, under Rule 24 of the Rules framed under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, read with the provisions of the Assam Act and the Rules made thereunder. The petitioners object for the apportionment of the income derived by the petitioners at forty per cent as business income assessable to income-tax and sixty per cent as agricultural income assessable under the Assam Act as unconstitutional, ultra vires the powers of the Legislature and, therefore, bad.

2. The argument of the petitioners is that the said apportionment is arbitrary.

that it is done under the rules framed by the Central Board of Revenue under the control of the Central Government, that the power to make the rules delegated to the Central Board of Revenue, as aforesaid, is a naked power, unrestricted and uncanalised and enables the executive to decide in an arbitrary manner for the aforesaid apportionment. The contention, therefore, is that the delegation of the rule-making power is excessive delegation and cannot be treated as valid inasmuch as, according to the petitioners, the delegation amounts to an abdication of the power of Parliament to decide the matter in question, leaving it exclusively for the rule making authority, namely the Central Board of Revenue under the control of the Central Government.

3. Before we consider the respective arguments of the counsel on either side, it would be useful to extract the relevant provisions which are the subject-matter of attack in these cases, we shall first refer to the provisions of the Assam Act. Section 2(a) of the Act defines 'agricultural income' as follows:

"(a) 'agricultural income' means:—

(1) Any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land revenue in Assam or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Government as such.

(2) Any income derived from such land by —

(i) agriculture, or

(ii) the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market, or

* * * * *

Explanation:— Agricultural income derived from such land by the cultivation of tea means that portion of the income derived from the cultivation, manufacture and sale of tea as is defined to be agricultural income for the purposes of the enactments relating to Indian Income-tax."

4. Section 2(b) of the Act defines "agricultural income-tax" as the tax payable under the Act.

5. Section 3 of the Act, which is the charging section, is as follows:

"3. Agricultural Income-tax at the rate or rates specified in the annual Assam Finance Acts subject to the provisions of Section 6 shall be charged for each financial year in accordance with, and subject to, the provisions of this Act on the total agricultural income of previous year of every individual Hindu undivided or joint family, company, firm and other association of individuals."

6. Section 6 of the Act enacts the limit of the taxable income. It states that the agricultural income-tax shall be payable by persons whose total agricultural income of the previous agricultural year exceeds Rs. 3,000 at such rates as may be laid down from year to year in the annual Assam Finance Acts. Section 8 of the Act deals with the determination of agricultural income mentioned in clause (a) of sub-clause (2) of Section 2 of the Act. The second proviso to the section is important and may be extracted:

"Provided further that in cases of agricultural income from cultivation and manufacture of tea the agricultural income for the purposes of this Act shall be deemed to be that portion of the income from cultivation, manufacture and sale which is agricultural income within the meaning of the Indian Income-tax Act and shall be ascertained by computing the income from the cultivation, manufacture and sale of tea as computed for Indian Income-tax from which shall be deducted any allowances by this Act authorised in so far as the same shall not have been allowed in the computation for the Indian Income-tax Act."

7. The petitioners attacked the vires and the validity of the Explanation to Section 2(a) of the Assam Act and also the second proviso to Section 8(2) of the Assam Act.

8. The Assam Agricultural Income-tax Rules, 1939, were framed by the State Government in exercise of the powers under Section 50, sub-sections (1) and (2) of the Assam Act, hereinafter referred to as the Assam Rules. Rule 5 of these Rules is attacked on the ground that the rule is ultra vires. This rule is as follows:—

"5. In respect of agricultural income from tea grown and manufactured by the seller in the Province of Assam, the portion of net income worked out under the Indian Income-tax Act and left unassessed as being agricultural shall be assessed under this Act after allowing such deductions under the Act and the rules made thereunder so far as they have not been allowed under the Indian Income-tax Act in computing the net income from the entire operation.

Provided that the computation made by the Indian Income-tax Officer shall ordinarily be accepted by the Assam Agricultural Income-tax Officer who may, for his satisfaction under Section 20 of the Assam Agricultural Income-tax Act, obtain further details from the assessee or from the Indian Income-tax Officer, but shall not without the previous sanction of the Deputy Commissioner of Taxes or when there is no Deputy Commissioner of Taxes, the Assistant Commissioner of Taxes empowered by the Commissioner of Taxes in this behalf require under the proviso to Section 49 the production of account books already examined by the Indian Income-tax Officer for determining the agricultural income from tea grown and manufactured in Assam or refuse to accept the computation of the Indian Income-tax Officer."

A note is appended to this rule, which is also attached. This note is as follows:

"Note — (1) The Act applies to income from sales of tea grown and manufactured in Assam irrespectively whether the sale is made within or outside the Province of Assam."

9. It may be mentioned at the outset that it is not disputed that the Assam State Legislature is competent to make laws and levy taxation in respect of agriculture and agricultural income. The Assam Act was made under the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, under which "agriculture, including agricultural education and research, protection against pests and prevention of plant diseases; improvement of stock and prevention of animal diseases; veterinary training and practice; pounds and the prevention of cattle trespass" are included in item 20 of the Provincial List. S. 100 of the Government of India Act, 1935, laid down the powers of the Provincial Legislatures to make laws for the province or any part thereof in respect of any of the matters enumerated in List II in the Seventh Schedule to the Act, which is the Provincial List. Hence, the power to make laws in regard to the agriculture rests with the Provincial Legislature.

10. The expression 'agricultural income' is defined in Section 2(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (Act No. XI of 1922), which is as follows:

"(1) 'agricultural income' means—

(a) any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land-revenue in the taxable territories or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Government as such;

(b) any income derived from such land by —

(i) agriculture, or

(iii) the sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of the produce raised or received by him, in respect of which no process has been performed other than a process of the nature described in sub-clause (ii);

(c) any income derived from any building owned and occupied by the receiver of the rent or revenue of any such land, or occupied by the cultivator, or the receiver of rent-in-kind, of any land with respect to which, or the produce of which, any operation mentioned in sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of clause (b) is carried on:

Provided that the building is on or in the immediate vicinity of the land, and is a building which the receiver of the rent or revenue or the cultivator or the receiver of the rent-in-kind by reason of his connection with the land, requires as a dwelling-house, or as a store-house, or other out-building;"

11. It may be seen from the above that the definition of the expression 'agricultural income' adopted in the Assam Act is exactly the same as that adopted in Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, except for the addition of the Explanation to Section 2(a) of the Assam Act.

12. Under Section 59 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, power is given to the Central Board of Revenue to make rules for carrying out the purposes of the Act and for the ascertainment and determination of any class of income, subject to the control of the Central Government. The relevant portions of this section are as follows:

"59. Power to make rules. — (1) The Central Board of Revenue may, subject to the control of the Central Government, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act and for the ascertainment and determination of any class of Income. Such rules may be made for the whole of the taxable territories or for such part thereof as may be specified.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(a) prescribe the manner in which, and the procedure by which, the income, profits and gains shall be arrived at in the case of —

(i) incomes derived in part from agriculture and in part from business;

(ii) persons residing out of the taxable territories;

x	x	x	x	x	x
x	x	x	x	x	x

(3) In cases coming under clause (a) of sub-section (2), where the income, profits and gains liable to tax cannot be definitely ascertained or can be ascertained only with an amount of trouble and expense to the assessee which, in the opinion of the Central Board of Revenue, is unreasonable, the rules made under that sub-section may —

(a) prescribe methods by which an estimate of such income, profits and gains may be made, and

(b) in cases coming under sub-clause (i) of clause (a) of sub-section (2), prescribe the proportion of the income which shall be deemed to be income, profits and gains liable to tax;

Limitation Act of 1877 in regard to the extension of the period of limitation by reason of the minority of the plaintiff would not be applicable. The Full Bench held that the Registration Act, 1877, being an Act complete in itself, the provisions of Section 7 of the Limitation Act, 1877, did not apply. Support is to be found for the view taken by the Madras High Court in Veeramma's case, (1895) ILR 18 Mad 99 (FB) in the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Anjanabai v. Yashwant-rao, 63 Bom LR 98 = (AIR 1961 Bom 154). Though the question which arose in the latter case was whether the delay on the part of the applicant in making an application under Section 417(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code for the grant of special leave to appeal from the order of acquittal could be condoned under the provision of Section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908, the learned Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench, has formulated in general terms what would be the meaning of the expression "special law". He has stated (at p. 103 of Bom LR) = (at p. 155 of AIR):

"In our opinion, the expression 'special law' means a provision of law which is not applicable generally, but which applies to a particular or specified subject or class of subjects".

The Full Bench then proceeded to hold that the provisions of Section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code which apply only to applications made by private party for leave to appeal from orders of acquittal was a special law within the meaning of Section 29(2) of the Limitation Act, 1908, and Section 5 of the latter Act was inapplicable to the same. I agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court in Veeramma's case, (1895) ILR 18 Mad 99 (FB) and am bound by the observations of the Full Bench of this Court in Anjanabai's case, 63 Bom LR 98 = (AIR 1961 Bom 154) (FB). The Registration Act is, in my opinion, a complete code in itself and Section 77 thereof is a provision which is not applicable generally, but which applies to a particular subject viz. the enforcement of a right to get a document registered by filing a civil suit which, but for the special provisions of that section, would not be maintainable. I hold that Section 77 is a "Special law" and the jurisdiction of the Bombay City Civil Court is excluded by reason of Section 3(c) of the Bombay City Civil Court Act, 1948. On any view of the matter, therefore, the issue of jurisdiction must be decided in favour of the plaintiff.

10. That brings me to issues Nos. 2 and 3 which embody the main question that arises in the present suit on merits. That question, in effect, is whether the Deed in question can be said to be a Deed of Release. If it is a Deed of Release, there being no dispute that there is no consideration for the Deed, the contention of the registering authorities that it would be governed by Article 1(3) of the Table of Fees would have to be upheld and there would be no occasion for invoking the applicability of the residuary provision in Article IV on which the plaintiff relies. The first point that must be noted in that connection is that the word "release" does not appear anywhere in the said Deed. Even so, however, if the document is in effect a Deed of Release neither the fact that it is labelled as being a Deed of Transfer nor the fact that the word "release" is not used in the body of it, can take it out of Article 1(3) of the Table of Fees. What the court has to determine is the substance of the document and not the label which it bears, and the court cannot allow the ingenuity of the draftsman to affect the question of the document before it which must be governed by the real nature of the document. The label of the document as a Deed of Transfer is an obvious misnomer for it does not operate to transfer any property. It is the contention of Mr. Bharucha that the Deed in question is in effect a Deed of Release. Mr. Zaiwalla has, on the other hand, contended that since the word "release" is not used in the document, the court should not read it into the Deed and change its legal effect. I must, therefore, proceed to consider what is the true nature of the Deed in respect of which the present suit has been filed.

11. A careful analysis of the Deed shows that the operative part thereof acknowledges receipt of the sums specified therein and states that the same have been received in full satisfaction of the respective shares of the parties in the property and effects of the deceased Dhundiraj. In the concluding portion, the heirs of the deceased discharge the plaintiff as administratrix from all their respective rights, claims and interest in the property and effects of the deceased Dhundiraj and from all actions, accounts, claims and demands in respect thereof. It is true that there is a distinction between a mere "receipt" and a "release". That distinction has been brought out clearly in the decision in the English case of Bowes v. Foster, (1858) 27 LJ Ex. 262 at p. 266 where it is stated in these terms:

"The distinction between a receipt and a release is, the release extinguishes the claim, and when given in, itself annihilates the debt; but a receipt is only evidence of payment, and if the proof be that no payment was made, it cannot operate as evidence of payment against such proof".

There can be no doubt that the Deed which I am called upon to construe is not a mere receipt. Mr. Zaiwalla has, however, contended that it is also not a Release for it does not annihilate the debt, but merely operates as a discharge of the administratrix as such. I am afraid I cannot accept that contention of Mr. Zaiwalla. In the case of East and West Steamship Co. v. Ramalingam, AIR 1960 SC 1058 in construing the expression "discharged from all liability" in Clause 3 of Para 6 of Article III in Schedule to Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1925, the Supreme Court has stated (para 25) that the ordinary grammatical sense of that expression does not connote "free from the remedy as regards liability" but is more apt to mean a total extinction of the liability following upon an extinction of the right. In the case of Sarada Prasad v. Jumna Prasad, AIR 1961 SC 1074 the Supreme Court was called upon to construe the expression "discharge" occurring in Section 7 of the Limitation Act, 1908, Section 7 of that Act deals with the disability of one of the several plaintiffs or applicants in the matter of giving a discharge, and the Supreme Court defined the word "discharge" as meaning "to free from liability", whether the liability be in respect of monetary claims like debts, or in respect of possession of property, or in respect of taking some order as regards property, or in respect of any other matter. In both these cases, the Supreme Court has, therefore, given to the word "discharge" the connotation of total extinction of liability. The word "discharge" is ordinarily used only in the context of exonerating a person from liability or relieving him of his obligations, and is not used in the sense of a giving up of rights. The appropriate word to be used in connection with the renouncing of rights would be the word "release", though no doubt the word "release" is also used, as a matter of plain language, both for extinguishing liability as well as for annihilating the right corresponding thereto. It is a wider term which includes the concept of freeing a person from liability. When, therefore, in the concluding portion of the Deed before me the heirs of the deceased purport to discharge the administratrix from their rights, claims and interest in the estate of the deceased, what they are really doing is to release in favour of the administratrix whatever rights they had in the estate of the deceased, in consideration of the payment received by them in full satisfaction thereof. The word "discharge" which is used in the concluding portion of the Deed is also inappropriate in the context of actions, accounts, claims and demands. The draftsman of the Deed has for some reason, which it is not difficult to fathom scrupulously avoided using the word "release" in place of the word "discharge", though it would certainly have been the more appropriate word. As already stated by me above, ingenuity in drafting cannot however, be permitted to affect the decision of the question which arises for my consideration in this suit. In my opinion, the concluding clause in the operative portion of the Deed is neither a mere receipt evidencing payment, nor does it merely discharge the administratrix from all obligations, liabilities and claims, but it annihilates the debt due to the heirs, in the sense that it completely extinguishes all rights of the heirs of the deceased to share in his estate.

12. Mr. Zaiwalla has contended that the word "discharge" in the concluding portion of the operative part of the Deed governs the words "Leela the administratrix" and that therefore, the Deed does not purport to annihilate any rights against any property but merely seeks to free the administratrix from liability. There is no substance in that contention of Mr. Zaiwalla. That is not the true effect of the Deed as already stated above. Moreover, even if that were the effect of the Deed, it would in my opinion, still be a Deed of Release. It has been held by this Court as far back as the case of Chandrashankar v. Bai Magan, 16 Bom LR 236 at p. 248 = (AIR 1914 Bom 55 at p. 57) which has been followed in the case of In re Manekal Manilal, 30 Bom LR 1396 at p. 1399 = (AIR 1928 Bom 553 at p. 554) that though the Stamp Act and the Registration Act cannot, strictly speaking be said to be enactments which are in pari materia, the two Acts may be read together and the definitions in the Stamp Act apply to the Registration Act. There is no definition of 'Release' in the Registration Act, but there is a definition of that term to be found incorporated in Article 55 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899. That definition is that a 'Release' is an instrument whereby a person renounces a claim upon another person, or against any specified property. Therefore, it makes no difference whether, under the Deed in suit, the heirs of the deceased renounce their claims upon the administratrix or renounce their claims against the property comprised in the estate of the deceased, and the distinction which Mr. Zaiwalla has sought to draw cannot help him. I, therefore, hold that the Deed in question is a Deed of Release because it is an instrument whereby the heirs of the deceased Dhundiraj renounce all their claims and demands upon the administratrix in her capacity as such, and also renounce all their rights as heirs against the property comprised in the estate of the deceased.

13. Even if I am wrong in the view which I have taken above and the Deed in question is construed merely as freeing the administratrix of all liability, it would, in my opinion, still fall within the caption of a Deed of Release as known to the law of Conveyancing. Reference may be made in this connection to Butterworth's Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents (3rd Edn.) Vol. 13 p. 594, Form No. 14, in which a document of precisely the same nature as the one before me is called a Deed of Release, though no doubt the operative portion thereof uses the more appropriate word "releases" instead of the word "discharge" which is to be found in the Deed in suit. In the 4th Edition of Butterworth's Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents Vol. 1 at page 31, there is to be found a form (Form No. 32) of a Receipt by a residuary legatee to the executors accepting the sum paid to him, receipt whereof is acknowledged. In the form of that Receipt the residuary legatee states that he has received that amount in full satisfaction of all his claims against them and that he undertakes "on request to execute a formal Release to the said executors." A reference to other standard works on Conveyancing also shows that a document whereby the legatees give a full discharge to the executor on payment of their respective shares is called a Deed of Release. Priedeaux's Forms and Precedents in Conveyancing (25th Edn.) Vol. 3 page 564 Form No. IX Clause 1 of the operative Part, and Elphinstone on Conveyancing (1906 Edn.) page 516 show that that is the position under the law of Conveyancing. In Halsbury (3rd Edn.) Vol. 16, page 319 para 615, it is stated that an executor is entitled to a receipt on payment of a legacy, and that is sufficient discharge, so that he is only in exceptional circumstances entitled to a formal Deed of Release. That statement of the law in Halsbury shows clearly that whilst a receipt is sufficient discharge to an executor, if a formal discharge is required in exceptional circumstances, the document whereby it is given is called a Deed of Release. In Conveyancing, the words "release" and "discharge" are almost inseparable associates, but the document by which claims upon a person or against any property are renounced is invariably called a "Deed of Release". The Registration Act deals primarily with the conveyance of property and interests in property, and words used in the Registration Act must therefore be given the meaning which they bear in the law of Conveyancing. Even if Mr. Zaiwalla's contention that the document merely purports to discharge the administratrix of her liability as such, but does not annihilate the rights of the heirs of the deceased in his estate be accepted, I would still hold that the Deed in question is a Deed of Release. There being no dispute that there is no consideration for the Deed in suit, I must hold that, in any view of the matter, the said Deed falls within the expression "Release other than one falling under (2) above" in Article 1 (3) of the Table of Fees prepared by the Government of Maharashtra in exercise of the powers conferred upon it by Section 78 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908. Issues Nos. 2 and 3 must be answered accordingly and the plaintiff's suit must fail.

14. I answer the issues as follows:

1. In the affirmative.
2. In the affirmative.
3. In the negative.
